THE SOLUTION

Resolved, etc., That there shall be levied, collected, and paid by individuals and corporations, irrespective of and in addition to, the income tax they are subject to under the existing law, or any amendment thereof, a special tax of 1 cent on each dollar of gross income for the calendar years 1932, 1933, and 1934.

The fundamental principle of just taxation is that it shall have a broad base; that it shall bear equitably and in proportion to ability to pay, on all classes on which it is imposed, and not be capable of being shifted, pyramided, or evaded.

GROSS INCOME AS A BASIS

The advantage of using the gross income as a basis is that it is self-determining and not susceptible of being manipulated or concealed.

Under the present income tax law it is in the deductions and exemptions and complicated brackets that the opportunities for tricky bookkeeping occur.

The basic idea of my plan is to put a 1 cent per dollar tax on the overhead, irrespective of the existing income tax law. Let them work out their manipulations in avoidance of taxation in their income-tax returns and take advantage of the exemptions and deductions allowed by the existing law, so long as we retain its stupidities, on the statute books.

But tell them, "On your gross income you will hereafter pay 1 cent per dollar tax on your receipts, in addition to the usual income tax." By that, I mean the present income tax and not the proposed Senate amendment.

IT WILL AVOID INCREASING PRESENT TAX RATES

You will thus see I am proposing a plan to avoid the threatened increase of the existing income-tax rates. My plan is to spread the tax equitably on the basis of the existing law to meet the present emergency; but, if the Senate increases become law, it would be obviously unjust to superimpose the cent-a-dollar tax which I propose. I am offering this plan as a substitute; it will prevent an unjust increase in the present income-tax rates; it will raise more revenue and it will lessen administrative costs.

THIS IS PRACTICALLY A SALES TAX

In effect, it is manifest that this proposal is tantamount to a sales tax of 1 cent on the dollar; but it is one that is fundamentally just because it exempts no one whatever. It is a "true sales tax," because it is computed at the source on the receipts from what is sold, and not on what is bought or consumed. To tax what the consumer has to buy is a "consumption tax." It is a nuisance tax and a fraud on the consumer. It is a despicable fraud, because it taxes those whose necessities are greatest. It is unscientific, because the tax is imposed not only on the original cost, but upon all intermediate profits-from the original down to the very last transaction. It taxes not only the employed, who have good wages with which to buy, but also those who are living from hand to mouth, thus making their poverty more difficult to bear.

A tax imposed on the product or thing is slapped squarely on the consumer. While if a very small tax is drawn out at the fountainheads it etherealizes to nothing by the time it reaches the backs of the consumers.

HOW THE GROSS-INCOME TAX WORKS Corporations

A corporation selling $1,000,000 worth of goods would pay a $10,000 tax. If the article they manufactured and sold was, for instance, frying pans, and they manufactured and sold 4,000 of them at 25 cents each, the tax on each frying pan would figure out about one-fourth of 1 cent-too small to be shifted, pyramided, or otherwise burdensome to the consumer.

Individuals

With respect to individuals the Internal Revenue Bureau reveals that under the present law few, if any, married men drawing less than $4,000 a year pay any income tax whatever. First, they are allowed $3,500 exemption, and then $400 for each child. Under my bill a married man drawing $4,000 would pay $40 and would have the satisfaction of knowing that he was contributing something for the relief of his country in its present emergency. This, it seems to hundred dollars in his salary as the present indications point out is likely to happen.

In tabulation A, which I will insert in a moment, it will be noticed how equitably and fairly the "cent-a-dollar special tax " works out.

I compare it with the raise in the income-tax rates as proposed in the Senate. I make bold to state that the proposed Senate rates will give no comparable increase in revenue, while unduly taxing those in the lower brackets. On the contrary, under my plan the total revenues will actually be increased, owing to the greater spread.

Looking at this Table A, it will be noticed that a single person, with a net income of $5,000 per annum, will pay under the proposed Senate rates a tax of $101.25. Under my plan, $89.38.

With a ten-thousand-a-year income, the individual under the Senate-plan proposal will pay $433.75; under my plan, $291.88; and so on down the list.

THE PROPOSED LAW WILL BE SELF-REGULATORY AND INESCAPABLE

THE PROPOSED LAW WILL BE SELF-REGULATORY AND INESCAPABLE

The tax is self-regulatory. It is figured on the income-tax returns and paid at the same time and in the same manner as the income tax. It can not be evaded. There will hereafter be "no taxless income-tax returns." All will pay on the basis of business done, whether they show a net profit or not.

A 1-cent-per-dollar addition to the income tax will spread the burden, and the steadiness of revenue obtained will enable Congress to eventually get away from the intricate bracket schemes in the present law—a thing that every honest business man is anxious to accomplish.

By arranging their budgets, corporations and individuals will be able to figure on this special tax as a part of their overhead, the same as rent, heat, or light. It is not an arbitrary tax, but one depending on the business done or salary received.

It is suggested that it is wrong to impose a tax on corporations, which "report" no net income under the income tax law. That, however, is not where the wrong is done. The real wrong is done to the taxpayers of the country in the loose provisions of the law which allow gross earnings to be frittered away by padded pay rolls, bonuses, exemptions, imaginary deterioration of plant and technical losses, which enable them to escape taxation. It is, of course, true that these exemptions are intended to mitigate the drastic provisions of the income tax as applied to corporations. But, it would be better to lessen the unreasonable exactions on corporate bodies than to continue rates which tempt them to exaggerate the exemptions to which they are reasonably entitled.

The fact is that the showing of no net income is a mere matter of bookkeeping. A corporation doing business, year in and year out, without showing an actual net profit is unthinkable. A corporation doing business without profit must necessarily eat into its capital and is, to that extent, perpetrating a fraud on its stockholders. The sooner such corporations wind up their affairs and go out of business the better it will be for themselves, their stockholders, their competitors and the general public. They are a potential fraud on investors so long as they are encouraged to exist.

METHOD OF ADMINISTRATION

And it is going to be very simple in operation. It will be added at the foot of every income-tax return. Your income-tax return will show the gross income. Every return begins with that. At the foot of your return you would simply add 1 cent per dollar on the gross income and send it to the Treasury. It will need no additional forces or overhead expenses to administer it.

Under this plan we can avoid 3-cent postage and the proposed increases in the income tax in every bracket. Sooner or later I hope to see a complete abolition of the brackets and the whole complex, complicated, and absurd system we now have of purely punitive income taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, during the last two years, ever since the passage of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, the charge has been repeatedly made by Democratic Party Members of Congress, and by the Democratic Party press, that the Republican tariff act of 1930 is responsible for the investment of millions of dollars of American capital in industries in foreign lands. This afternoon I listened attentively to the very able address of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead]. He repeated the charge this afternoon by stating that the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act was responsible for the action taken by the Steel Corporation in investing their money in a steel plant in the city of Windsor, Ontario. A few minutes ago I went to the telephone and called up the representative of the United States Steel Corporation in order to find out when they invested their money in this plant. He informed me that the United States Steel Corporation invested their money in the steel plant in Windsor, Ontario, 15 years ago. Mark you! This plant was constructed 15 years ago at a time when we were not operating under a Republican protective tariff law but under the Underwood Democratic Tariff Act. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to answer the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANK-HEAD] with reference to those things to which he pointed with pride as the accomplishments of the Democratic Party; but, in justice to history and in justice to the present generation, I think there are some other things that we should point to-with want of pride-as the accomplishments of the Democratic Party. The gentleman from Alabama, at the very outset of his speech, in referring to the accomplishments of the Democratic Party took full credit for the Federal reserve act, when everyone who is acquainted with the history of that act knows that it is almost verbatim a copy of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill which had been introduced and considered at a session of Congress prior to the time of its enactment. It has answered well its purpose, and I hope it may continue to do so and be strengthened to answer its purpose in the future; but it is unfair, unjustified for anybody to claim its origin on the Democratic side of the House when its real authors were Republicans. The gentleman does not point with pride to the attitude of his party in 1896, when they were proclaiming from the house-tops that the panacea for the ills we were then suffering was free silver. Is there one among you to-day who would go before the people of this country and proclaim such a fallacy?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman did not yield to me. I will, later, if I have time. That is what the gentleman said to me. Again, four years later, they held up to the eyes of the public the great danger of our becoming an imperialistic government, and that we were going to make McKinley king of the United States. Is there anyone among you that believes there was any danger of that thing at that time? Is there one among you who will point with pride to the attitude of the Democratic Party in advocating that fallacy?

Another thing to which the gentleman did not advert was the attitude of the Democratic Party with reference to free trade. He does not point with pride to the Democratic Party's attitude for more than 100 years upon that great economic question. For 50 or more years in every recurring presidential campaign they took the position that a tariff for any purpose other than to raise revenue was unconstitutional, and many speeches were made on that side of the House to that effect. Among the speakers who proclaimed it was the late Speaker Champ Clark, and I heard him myself say that he hoped he would live to see the day when the customhouses would be razed to the ground. Is there a man on your side of the House to-day who subscribes to that doctrine, then so loudly proclaimed and stuck to throughout a century? The gentleman also referred to the fact that under the Hawley-Smoot bill our customs receipts in 1930 and 1931 have been greatly reduced. But he did not say anything about what happened under the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill. When that bill was under discussion before this House, I heard many speakers on this side say it would absolutely destroy imports and exports to and from the United States. As a matter of fact, instead of doing that, the imports were more than doubled and the exports were likewise more than doubled. We were receiving, prior to that time, about $300,000.000 in customs dues. They increased to more than $600,000,000, and the exports in the same proportion.

It is not fair to contrast the customs dues we have collected during this period of depression, when the whole world practically is bankrupt, when countries across the sea, who would pay those customs dues, have nothing with which to pay. That is one of the pities of it all. Had it not been for that existing condition in Europe, we in this country would be far better off, for we have surpluses upon every farm and surpluses in every factory that we would be glad to sell to them if they had the money with which to buy.

During the course of his speech the gentleman pointed with pride to the adoption of the constitutional amendment requiring that United States Senators be elected by the direct vote of the people, and challenged anyone to say that he would change that thing. I accept the challenge, and I declare here and now that it was the first blow at the fundamentals of the Constitution of the United States. It has wrought more damage, it has wrought more woe, it has wrought more trouble as far as legislation is concerned, than any other evil that has ever befallen the Congress of the United States. Change it? How could it be changed? In order to change it, it would be necessary to submit it to the States again, to undo what they have already done. Does anyone think we would ever get such a resolution formulated in this House and through the Senate? There are now gentlemen over there and would be then, who would not have been there but for the election by popular vote of the people, who would defeat such a proposal, so we can accept this as one of the adopted and forever-to-be-had evils in our political system.

The gentleman also said that he regretted having voted for the moratorium, for he earnestly and honestly believes it is the entering wedge to our forgiving our foreign debtors. I am as firmly convinced now as I was then that there was never any idea, when this moratorium was proposed, that we would cancel one cent of the debt that is due us. I, for one, will stand here as long as I am a Member of this House and vote against any proposition that has to do with the reduction of one dollar of that debt. The fact of the business is we have reduced it too much already. [Applause.] There is one thing that is dead sure. As long as the much-abused Andy Mellon remains in Europe, they will never draw the wool over his eyes to get him to consent to a reduction of that kind, or to its being forgiven, for he has stood adamant against it during all the time he was Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and he will stand adamant now, even though he is at the Court of St.

Mr. Chairman, the time is almost up when this Chamber is to be used by what is denominated by the Chicago Daily Tribune as "America's Champion Hog Caller." [Laughter.]

I would like to call attention to this cartoon appearing in the Chicago Daily Tribune of Tuesday, May 31. I think it is one of the most illustrative of all cartoons I have ever seen in the public press. It represents our beloved Speaker occupying the dome of the Capitol as a pork barrel, and he is calling his hogs. They are coming from every State, from every hamlet in every State, expecting to get their own. I am reminded of a number of years ago when our Speaker, then an ordinary Member of this House, was a stanch advocate of the pork barrel, and he said, "When the rest of you are getting your pork, I want to get at least a ham." He is going to get more than a ham now, for he is going to give the whole hog to every township and hamlet, if necessary, in all the United States. What does it mean?

We have heard to-day from the gentleman from Georgia that we have succeeded in balancing the Budget. Why balance the Budget when we are going to involve ourselves in debt again? And for what? If you please, pork, pork, pork, and nothing but pork. You can take that bill from first to last and you will find that pork will be provided for every Member of this House. They provided it for my district a plenty, but I do not propose to be inveigled. I will vote against this bill, and I think that every man who has the best interests of his country at heart, who has the best interests of his State and his district at heart, should vote against it.

To my mind, there never has been such an attempt at pork-barrel dealing as is involved in this bill. So I hope that after this hog tying is over this afternoon we will be here to see the performance when this bill is introduced, and add our mite in opposition to its enactment into law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is carried in the pending deficiency appropriation bill an item for the settlement of claims amounting to $162,000 paid by the District Commissioners under authorization of an act of Congress passed in 1930, whereby the District Commissioners are authorized to settle all claims arising through the negligence of the officers and agents of the District up to the amount of $5,000.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collins] this week introduced a resolution providing for the appointing of a joint committee to devise some method as regards the adjudication of private claims. Ten years ago the Private Calendar of an entire Congress would only comprise about 300 bills. At the present session over 800 private bills have been reported, 400 of which have been given provisional consideration. Something must be done to relieve the Private Calendar of the number of these private claims. If the authority the last Congress vested in the District Commissioners, delegating to them the right to settle claims up to the amount of $5,000 where the employees of the District were guilty of negligence has worked out satisfactorily, then I believe we should delegate to some board of the departments like authority so as to save Congress the trouble and the tedious annoyance of examining these little claims.

Under existing law the departments have authority to settle claims up to the extent of $500 where those claims arise out of injury of individuals. The Post Office Department and the War Department in large measure are using trucks, and many of these claims on the Private Calendar result from injuries occasioned by the neglect of employees of the War Department and the Post Office Department.

I would be willing to vest jurisdiction in a board supervised by the Assistant Secretaries, perhaps, of the Post Office Department, the Treasury Department, and the War Department to settle claims at least up to $2,000. We must find some means to relieve Congress and the Committee on Claims of the burden of passing upon these little claims.

There are instances where even after the department passes upon claims presented to them for consideration that the claimants refuse to accept the adjudication and come to the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on Claims in their wisdom reports out the bill. There are instances where the Committee on Claims reported a bill for consideration under the employees' compensation act where the commission has refused to consider the claim as without merit, and in those cases I have consistently objected to the bills because I want that commission to have the final word and not have the burden thrown upon the Committee on Claims or upon Congress.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman who has given so much close attention to this subject during the present session as chairman of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLACK. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin thought of the feasibility of authorizing Government departments which use trucks to take out insurance as a business concern would?

Mr. STAFFORD. No great corporation that is able to pay claims takes out insurance. The Government is too vastly resourceful to pay premiums to a private agency for insurance against damages. As I have stated, I would favor granting to the departments the right to settle claims at least up to $2,000, and perhaps up to $5,000, as we did in the law through which we conferred jurisdiction on the District Commissioners to do that thing.

I can not see any reason why we should be deluged with these claims. We have faith in the executive officers of the Government, and we should do something, although nothing has been done for 10 years, in the amendment of the law.

I should take more time, but I do not wish to go into this subject at length. Either the resolution introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Ross Collins, should be considered and passed, or some other remedial legislation increasing the power of the department heads to settle these damage claims should be passed.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. GILBERT. Can the gentleman give us information as to how the Underhill bill worked?

Mr. STAFFORD. That bill passed the House but was never enacted into law.

There should be some committee appointed to pass upon these various proposals to see whether some remedial meassure can not be adopted whereby Congress will be relieved of this burdensome and irksome work, which is so uninviting and yet has to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Disney, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12443) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1932, and June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, this morning, at the request of the House, I asked that the Printing Office print the tax bill for the use of the House. The Printing Office advises me that it will be necessary for the House to pass an order to do that, and they will be delighted to do it and send a copy of the bill to each Member's house in the first mail to-morrow morning. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the House order that the tax bill be printed as agreed to in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

TAXATION

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, there is perhaps no subject that is of more importance to the people of our State and Nation than that of taxation and the equitable distribution of the burdens it creates. I want to approach the discussion of this subject now as fairly and clearly as I may. From my early boyhood I recall that my father and grandfather usually met the problems, whatever they were, that came before them in a calm and deliberative manner, and they were not given to the use of their tongues until their heads were put into operation. They were not given to swallowing and believing half-baked ideas without giving a thorough and thoughtful study of any matter before them. I hope I may, in what I here say, emulate their characteristics in every regard.

At the close of the World War there existed a Federal tax law that was written by a Democratic Congress and signed by a Democratic President that placed the greater part of the burdens of this Government's expenses upon the greater wealth and larger incomes of this country, where in my opinion it should have been placed. I take no joy in being unjust to wealth and those who possess the vast wealth of the country, but on the other hand, too much burden must not be laid upon the backs of the poor. From the time Mr. Harding became President and both branches of Congress were thereafter under control of the Republican Party. there has been a far too active interest to take the tax off of the wealth and to place it on the poor and average man, as we call him. This fight has been going on for the past few years. The burdens of taxation were not so keenly felt while prices of farm products commanded a fair price and men were employed everywhere in gainful occupations, but when President Hoover, with a Congress of his party, came along and upset the trade of America and the world with the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, business was thrown out of joint and farm prices declined. The burden of taxes, interest, and deflated prices has been troublesome ever since.

For the first time in more than 10 years the Democratic Party has a small paper majority in the House of Representatives, while the Senate and President still remain Republican, and I will say to the everlasting credit of the House and Senate that during this session of Congress the governmental expenditures have been cut approximately $600,000,000 below the expenses of last year, and such expenditures have been cut more than one hundred and sixty million dollars below what Mr. Hoover and his Budget estimate requested or recommended to be spent, and I predict still more cutting of governmental expenses will be made before Congress adjourns.

There is a drive on by the big financial interests of the country to force Congress to pass the sales tax, which Congress has indicated it would not do. I, like many others, have opposed the sales tax because it puts practically as much tax on the poor as on the rich. Such of the metropolitan press as is under the influence of the money power of this country can misrepresent Congress all they want to, and may, by misleading the people, cause some to innocently turn against their best friends in Congress, but I know there are a large number of Congressmen who would rather go out of office than to surrender their self-respect or turn against the interest and welfare of the masses of the people.

There is a tendency by some sordid and selfish interests to try to make the farmer believe that Congress or the Federal Government is spending his taxes, when, as a matter of fact, not one cent of the taxes a farmer pays on his farm or his cattle, hogs, or other livestock is expended by Congress or the Federal Government, but all of his taxes are spent by the State, county, and schools where he resides, unless such farmer pays a Federal income tax, and he does not pay a Federal income tax unless he, under the present law, makes a net profit of $3,500 a year, and I do not think there is a single farmer in my section who makes any such profit. If not, then none of the property tax he pays goes to pay any kind or part of governmental salaries nor for mail services nor other National Government expenses. Of course, under the present Republican high tariff a burden is placed upon the consumer, but that is no part of the property tax the farmer pays. Congress has no power or control over, and does not spend, the farmer's property tax on his farm, as I said before. That matter is all controlled by the people through their State.

A few years ago, much in advance of the present depression, I believed I could foresee where an unjust tax was being levied on lands and other real estate in the various States, and I introduced a resolution in Congress asking the President to call the various governors of the entire 48 States together to discuss at such conference the best method of combating and checking the rising taxes on the people's lands. Had the President followed such a course at the time and had the governors of the various States called the matter to the attention of the various legislatures, a policy could have been adopted by the States which would have avoided much, if not all, of the present tax dilemma.

The average man is so busy with his own affairs trying to make a living for himself and family that he has little time for making a technical study of the tax question. A few days ago I received a telegram from a chamber of commerce from a town in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent, complaining to Congress about the high taxes. In less than a week after getting the telegram I learned that the people of this same town had voted a bonded indebtedness on the city of over $300,000, after sending the telegram complaining about taxes. I do not know anything about the merits of the bond issue or the question involved. It may have been, for all I know, perfectly proper, but neither the Federal Government nor Congress had nor could have anything to do with creating the additional taxes necessary to pay these bonds.

Under the last year of Woodrow Wilson's administration, a Democratic President, the income taxes and excess-profits taxes collected by the Federal Government amounted to $3,569,829,389. Most of this, of course, was collected off of the greater wealth of the country. It was collected off of those most able to pay taxes, while the income taxes collected during this last calendar year 1931, under Mr. Hoover's administration, off of this class of taxpayers amounts to $1,368,-411,625. This is according to an official report of the United States Treasury. The difference, therefore, of the amount of money collected in these taxes from the wealthy and more fortunate people financially in the United States under the last year of Woodrow Wilson and the last year under Mr. Hoover is $2,201,407,764. That alone is enough money to completely wipe out the present deficit in the United States Treasury. Now we find such of the metropolitan press of the country that is under the influence of the powers that be, attacking Congress, trying to array the common people against them and trying to coerce the passage of a sales tax to be saddled upon the backs of the masses and poorer class of people of this country.

By whom, and when was this deficit created? It was created under an administration Republican in every branch. The last Democratic Governor of Missouri left a surplus of over $5,000,000 in the State treasury. Woodrow Wilson left a balance in the United States Treasury. Then along comes Republican rule in both State and Nation and "budged the balance," and the cry is now made on every hand, "balance the Budget" and warning is sent out by the Republican cohorts for all postmasters to get on the "firing line" to elect Mr. Hoover. Will it not come to pass that the Republican Party in November will be on the "fired line"? The mastery of the Government will yet remain in the hands of the people is my solemn prediction. How badly at this hour the Nation needs an Andrew Jackson, and how badly Missouri needs a William Joel Stone or an Alex M. Dockery.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Nelson of Missouri, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

IN MEMORY OF MAJ. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief account of the ceremony last Sunday at the Arlington Cemetery in memory of my predecessor, Maj. Augustus Peabody Gardner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, many colleagues still serving in the House recall the stalwart personality of Maj. Augustus Peabody Gardner, and the notable service he rendered the country during his eight terms as a Member of this body. They remember his valiant effort to persuade our Government to prepare for its inevitable part in the World War, and how, when the fateful moment came, he resigned his place here to rejoin the Army in which he had served in the war with Spain and with which, in the late war, his life ended.

I am sure they will be interested in the following brief account of the annual tribute to his memory, which was rendered last Sunday at his grave in the Nation's cemetery at Arlington.

The account is from the pen of a soldier comrade, Commander A. Coulter Wells, of the Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, of the American Legion.

On one of the beautiful hills of Arlington National Cemetery overlooking the Potomac River and the city of Washington—in the immediate foreground the classic amphitheater, the impressive Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, the sacred Lincoln Memorial, and the magnificent new marble and granite bridge spanning the Potomac and connecting the Nation's Capital with the former home of Robert E. Lee and Arlington Cemetery—lie the remains of Maj. Augustus P. Gardner. Around his grave at this historic place on Sunday morning, May the 29th, gathered his comrades of the late war, as represented by the Augustus P. Gardner Post, No. 18, of the American Legion, of the District of Columbia, to honor his memory.

18, of the American Legion, of the District of Columbia, to holds his memory.

After brief tributes had been paid to this gallant soldier and able statesman by Brig. Gen. William E. Horton and Maj. A. Coulter Wells, commander of the post, a wreath was placed by General Horton on behalf of the Augustus P. Gardner Post, of South Hamilton, Mass., and one presented by the local post was placed by Lieut. Col. J. Miller Kenyon, past departmental commander of the American Legion of the District of Columbia. At the conclusion of these exercises a Regular Army sergeant from Fort Myer sounded taps.

These two posts were named after Major Gardner, who resigned sounded taps.

These two posts were named after Major Gardner, who resigned as a Member of Congress from Massachusetts in 1917 to enter the military service of the United States during the World War, and was at the time of his death a major of the One hundred and twenty-first Infantry. He was awarded the distinguished service medal "for exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services during the World War." * * His entire service was characterized by untiring zeal, devotion to duty, and marked success. His splendid example of patriotism will always serve as an inspiration to his countrymen.

Among those gathered to pay respect were Maj. Gen. C. C. Williams and his wife. Mrs. Williams was the widow of Major Gardner.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. JONES presented a resolution adopted by the Pend Oreille County Development League, of Newport, Wash., protesting against any change in the present laws governing the public lands, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Seattle Aerie, No. 1, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Olympic View Improvement Club, both of Seattle, Wash., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing a $5,000,000,000 bond issue to finance a nation-wide program of public works, so as to furnish employment, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by German H. H. Emory Post, No. 8, the American Legion, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the elimination or reduction of the interest rate on loans to veterans on adjusted-service certificates. which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from Ernest A. Love Post, No. 6, American Legion, of Prescott; Guy R. Moore, president Local No. 323, Federation of Federal Employees, of Kingman; and Jewell M. Decker, secretary-treasurer Local No. 213, National Federation of Federal Employees, of Fort Huachuca, in the State of Arizona, remonstrating against the 10 per cent reduction in the compensation of Federal employees, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a resolution adopted by the officers and directors of the chambers of commerce of Newark and Jersey City, N. J., favoring the prompt balancing of the Budget and the early adjournment of the present session of Congress, which was ordered to lie on the table.

EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT

Mr. BARBOUR presented a letter from Roberts Williams, of Bordentown, N. J., relative to emergency officers' retirement, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BORDENTOWN, N. J., June 2, 1932. DEAR SENATOR BARBOUR: You may be able to read this letter be-DEAR SENATOR BARBOUR: You may be able to read this letter before final action is taken on the economy bill. I have the utmost sympathy with your difficult situation in endeavoring to balance the Budget. I realize no taxes or pay cuts will be popular. Nevertheless, justice should come even before economy, and I am addressing this plea to you to use your vote and influence to have the section 7, that relates to retirement of emergency officers of the Army, be amended to conform to the following principles of justice and fairness:

- justice and fairness:

 1. There should be specific amendment that an officer wounded in battle and otherwise eligible to retirement shall have his disability specifically deemed service connected. An emergency officer that served in battle and was wounded certainly had length and quality of service worthy of consideration, and for such cases the burden of proof should be on the bureaucrats of the Veterans' Administration to prove an officer wounded in battle and now receiving retirement pay should be removed from the rolls rather than that a wounded and disabled officer should have to prove this to an unsympathetic retiring board.
- 2. There is every reason of economy, justice, and political expediency in putting regular officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps on the same basis as regards retirement as emergency
- 3. Earning power is as fair a test of real disability as any can be devised. You will serve economy, justice, and political expediency by adopting following scale: Retirement pay or portion thereof shall not be paid if total income, including retirement pay, in any year exceeds $3,000 for a single man, $4,200 for married man with dependent wife, $400 exemption for other bona fide dependents up to maximum of $6,000.
- I thoroughly agree with many Senators there are retired officers who ought to be deprived of retirement pay at once, as their disabilities are of doubtful service origin, not serious, and they receive large incomes in governmental or private employ. There are as many regular officers retired without good reason and receiving full retirement pay as emergency officers. Why discriminate? Take away all retirement pay from all officers able to command relatively large incomes in such a time as this, but do not penalize those of us who fought in battles and whose earning power has been ruined or almost eliminated by our war disabilities.

Sincerely yours Sincerely yours.

ROBERTS WILLIAMS,
Formerly Chaplain Department of New Jersey, American Legion.

SALARY REDUCED-ATTITUDE OF RURAL CARRIERS OF AIKEN COUNTY, S. C.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to place in the RECORD the statement that at the annual meeting of the Rural Carriers' Association of Aiken County, held at Aiken, S. C., last Monday, before the pending bill was reported to the Senate, the rural carriers went on record as agreeing to the proposed 10 per cent reduction in salaries, and adopted a resolution advising the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives from that State of their action.

W. B. HARRISON ON BRANCH BANKING

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. W. B. Harrison, president of the Union National Bank of Wichita, Kans. I have known Mr. Harrison for years. He is a good example, to my mind, of what a banker ought to be in and for his community. Also he is considered one of the soundest bankers in the State of Kansas; one of the best informed. In a recent letter to me he expressed some views on the question of branch banking, which I believe worthy of the attention and careful consideration of the Senate and the country. I might add that I concur thoroughly in the opinion he expresses so well that branch banking is contrary to the public interest. I send his letter to the desk with the request that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE UNION NATIONAL BANK, Wichita, Kans., May 18, 1932.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: The Glass banking bill has, in my opinion, several commendable features, especially those that separate securities sales corporations from national banks. There is, however, one feature of the bill that is of vital importance to the bankers of Kansas, probably as much or more so than to the bankers of any other State in the Union. I refer to the branch banking provision ing provision.

The agitation for branch banking in the United States dates The agitation for branch banking in the United States dates back over a period of 25 years in my personal experience. Time and again the subject was brought up at conventions of the American Bankers Association, and until the last five years was always repudiated. The mushroom growth of the Bank of Italy in California, later the Bank of America, and the development of branch banking in 22 States of the 43 in the United States under permissive State laws places such a concentration of banking power and prestige in the hands of a few big banks that they are able to make themselves felt in the councils of the American Bankers Association and in high political circles, with a result that during the last five years we have had a continuous, steady demand from these quarters for branch banking.

In the meantime the house of cards which the proponents of this plan were depending upon has largely tumbled. The organizations associated with the Bank of Italy (now the Bank of America), through the tremendous losses of its affiliates, the quarrels of its stockholders in New York, and the fall of its prestige, is no longer held up as a shining example of the success of branch banking. Its scheme for a world-wide chain of banks has broken, and it is settling back into California, where it started, to fortify and rebuild its own position without attempting to girdle the globe.

The failure of 42 banks in one chain in the Southern States, that wrought havoc with business interests over a vast territory for several years, has pointedly demonstrated the possible disasters from chain banking and branch banking. These, followed by the failure of the Bank of the United States, in New York City, which was one of the most powerful in the country, and with the cancellation of plans for numerous groups all over the United States, which had been planning to gobble up the independent banks into syndicates promoted by the same celebrated financiers who showered this country with stocks and bonds of very questionable value prior to 1929, have, fortunately, given a considerable setback to the movement for branch banking, and furnished ample answer to most of the arguments its proponents have presented. The failure of 42 banks in one chain in the Southern States,

This brief historical résumé brings us down to the present situation and the sole and only argument worthy of consideration presented in favor of branch banking, which is safety to deposi-

It is true that there have been numerous losses in independent banks, chain banks, group banks, and banks with branches in the United States during the last three years. Let it be remembered that all classes mentioned have been included pendent banks, chain banks, group banks, and banks with branches in the United States during the last three years. Let it be remembered that all classes mentioned have been included in the losses, and that the heaviest losses have been in the banks with branches. In fact, the comparative figures in dollars and cents between losses in the larger banks with branches, and losses in the so-called independent banks, are quite startling, as they show losses in one bank with branches in New York City that exceed those in hundreds of other banks combined. The losses in national banks since the organization of the National Banking System, have been far smaller than is generally supposed. I believe the office of the Comptroller of the Currency will advise you that the average payment to depositors in falled national banks over the entire period has been above 85 per cent. This includes only the deposits in the falled banks. If figured on the basis of deposits in all banks, the losses would be so insignificant that it would be hardly worthy of notice.

Nevertheless, no good banker is content with the present system, but he wants it strengthened in every way possible, to insure as nearly as possible 100 per cent safety in national banks. This can best be done by building up the examination and management of independent banks. I refer to national banks particularly, as Congress has control of the national banking system and not of the State system, but, of course, if national banks are permitted to have branches in Kansas, State banks will come under the same rule as cuickly as the State laws can be changed.

Kansas has no large cities, Wichita being the largest except Kansas City, Ko. It some of the biggest handicaps the State has that our systems of transportation, commerce, trade, and banking all center in Kansas City, Ko. I know of no other State so unfortunately situated in this regard as Kansas. If branch banking goes into effect our banking operations will be dominated very largely by interests outside of the State. an unfortunate event.

Branch banking concentrates the control of credit, and the control of credit is the most dangerous weapon of all the implements in commercial and industrial warfare. Some years ago a bank in Montreal, Canada, that had branches all over the Dominion, and had on its board a large manufacturer of a household article used in thousands of homes in Canada, sent word to its branches as far west as Winnipeg, that no credit was to be extended to competing manufacturers of this article. This instance will illustrate the inevitable tendency of the system. A very responsible man, now a Member of Congress, some years ago told me this instance: A bank with branches that wanted to buy a competing independent bank, and was unable to induce the owner to sell, either by threats or competition, finally sent an agent out to buy the deposits of the competing bank, and when it had secured 60 per cent of its deposits, presented a demand at the independent bank for the cash or for control of the bank. This first-class institution, and it was compelled by these methods to sell.

The independent bank serves its community. It is the center of activity and progress, as well as the balance wheel of the commercial life of its vicinity. The independent unit bankers, numbering more than 20,000 scattered all over the United States, have been in a large degree responsible for the steady development and progress of the industrial life of this Nation, contemporaneously with the slow, dull, and backward existence of the Dominion of Canada on our north, which has a larger territory and less than 10 per cent of our north, which has a larger territory and less than with the slow, dull, and backward existence of the Dominion of Canada on our north, which has a larger territory and less than 10 per cent of our population or wealth.

The independent banker makes no effort through his organization to control politics. The banking systems of countries where branch banking exists are in politics to their ears, and through their credit facilities they dominate and determine the policies of the government itself. Branch banking in the United States would be antagonistic to the American instinct and a ball and chain on Uncle Sam's ankles in the progress of the Nation. It would subject this whole country to an aristocracy of wealth and powerselfish, arrogant, insolent, and domineering, whose patriotism would be encased in its pocketbook, and whose interest in humanity would be swallowed up in a sublime faith in God-given authority to direct and control the affairs of men.

May I add that since I wrote you as above on this matter we have had another striking illustration of the dangers of concentrated credit. I refer to the exposures in the Ivar Kreuger bond and stock flotations in the United States. These dealings were sponsored by some of the most distinguished bankers in our country, who have in this instance clearly demonstrated that concentrated wealth does not mean concentrated banking ability.

We have been shown by testimony in the New York hearing that approximately $150,000,000 of Kreuger securities were marketed in the United States with practically no sound collateral behind them. Without a large central organization, which had branches, affiliates, and associates, with all the strength that wealth, power, and prestige confer, it would not have been possible to have perpetrated this colossal fraud. Branch banking would be a convenient medium for such undertakings.

A large element in the safety of credit is diversification. centration of credit weakens diversification and enhances the risk. Branch banking would not cure the ills in our present system, but would bring greater evils, not only to the banking system but to the economic and social order.

Respectfully yours,

W. B. HARRISON, President.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to submit for insertoin in the RECORD a statement by the Board of Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church South relating to the enforcement of the prohibition law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The Board of Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist The Board of Temperance and Social Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, following instructions of the general conference of 1930 to carry out its declared policy concerning the liquor traffic, hereby transmits to you a copy of a statement adopted by the general board of missions of that church in session at Nashville, Tenn., on May 4, 1932. The board of missions is composed of all the bishops and of men and women from every section of the church, and is the most representative body of the church next to the general conference. The resolutions follow:

" RESOLUTIONS OF MISSION BOARD

"The purpose in the establishment of this board of missions "The purpose in the establishment of this board of missions is to aid in the bringing in of the kingdom of God on earth. One of the greatest evils opposing the accomplishment of this purpose in our own and in other lands is the traffic in intoxicating liquor. By the adoption of the eighteenth amendment that traffic has been justly branded as criminal, as the enemy of the home, the school, the church—indeed, of the entire social order. The present-day whisky rebellion is based principally upon the appetite or covetousness of the rebels and not in any change in the awful results inherent in the traffic itself. The conflict between the church of Christ and this traffic is inevitable and irrepressible. There is no discharge in this war, no surrender, no retreat. No compromise is possible: Therefore be it

"Resolved: 1. We emphasize both the duty of strict observance

"Resolved: 1. We emphasize both the duty of strict observance and of ever-increasing efficiency in enforcement of the prohibition law. 2. We declare our uncompromising opposition to any effort to remove the brand of the criminal from the liquor traffic whether in the entire Nation, or even in one State. We emphasize that this question is to be settled not by the clamor of wet newspapers, of organizations opposed to prohibition, not even when these organizations are composed of high-society women, but that this question must be settled by the people themselves in the election of Senators, Congressmen, and members of State legislatures. In the strenuous efforts now being made to modify the prohibition law, even to the extent of repealing the eighteenth amendment, we urge our pastors, teachers, and people to stand for the election of Senators, Congressmen, and members of State legislatures who believe that prohibition ought to be the law, and who being elected on that platform, will positively oppose, therefore, any effort to repeal or submit again the eighteenth amendment. The fight on this question should be carried aggressively into the coming senatorial and congressional elections, just as in the years before the submission of the eighteenth amendment by Congress in 1917. In this coming conflict the awful facts concerning the liquor traffic as it evisted in the so-called legond. "Resolved: 1. We emphasize both the duty of strict observance the years before the submission of the eighteenth amendment by Congress in 1917. In this coming conflict the awful facts concerning the liquor traffic as it existed in the so-called 'good old days' before prohibition must once again be brought forcibly to the attention of our people, and all the moral forces of the country must meet their responsibility in this rebellious renewal of the struggle with beverage alcohol, the age-long enemy of the human race

W. N. AINSWORTH.

"NATHAN NEWBY.

As the permanent active agent and representative of the church As the permanent active agent and representative of the church in making effective its oft-declared policy on the prohibition of the liquor traffic, this board, as stated in the above resolution, will enter "aggressively into the coming senatorial and congressional elections" and will positively support all candidates who favor the maintenance of the eighteenth amendment and will earnestly oppose candidates who favor "any effort to repeal or submit again the said amendment."

In view of the effort which is being made by the opponents of prohibition to secure a declaration by the Democratic and Repub-lican National Conventions in favor of the submission or repeal of the eighteenth amendment, thus securing an unfair advantage by bringing undue and unprecedented pressure to bear upon Congressmen and Senators, who should represent the views of their own districts and States on the prohibition question, our board enters its vigorous protest against any such action by said conventions, and, furthermore, insists that the extreme limit to which said conventions could go without infringement upon the rights of the people of the several States and congressional districts would be the adoption of a declaration substantially as follows:

"THE EXTREME LIMIT

"Fully cognizant of the discussion throughout the country concerning prohibition and recognizing the demands which have been made before the committee on resolutions for action of varying kinds, this convention would emphasize: "First. It is an outstanding fact that in the years of discussion prior to its adoption the eighteenth amendment was not considwas any plank adopted by any National Democratic or Republican Convention favoring or opposing the submission of this amendment by Congress. So to-day this convention declares that any question pertaining to the modification or the repeal of the eighteenth amendment should likewise be considered and determined by the people themselves entirely free from the pressure of any by the people themselves, entirely free from the pressure of any political-party platform favoring or opposing such submission.

"Second. The demand in some quarters for a popular referendum on this question is futile, at present. There is no provision in the Federal Constitution for a popular referendum on any question. It would first be necessary to amend the Constitution in the regular way in order to provide for a popular referendum.

"Third This convention would furthermore appreciate that "Third. This convention would furthermore emphasize that whenever the people themselves desire to amend or to repeal the whenever the people themselves desire to amend or to repeal the eighteenth amendment or to amend the Constitution to provide for a popular referendum, the people can exercise their right so to do exactly as they did in writing the eighteenth amendment into the Constitution; namely, by electing Senators, Congressmen, and members of State legislatures or conventions favorable to such modification or repeal.

"Fourth. This convention pledges the party and its nominees to the vigorous, efficient enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, as an integral part of the Constitution of the United States."

By adopting such statements the conventions would leave the

By adopting such statements the conventions would leave the people free to decide what pledges they would require on the prohibition question from candidates before electing their Congressmen, Senators, and members of State legislatures, and such officials when elected would be entirely free to carry out the expressed wishes of their constituents, without any reference to action taken by the national party conventions. However, should either or both conventions take unfair and unprecedented action on the prohibition question, not only should we insist that the people ignore such action and elect their Congressmen and Senators, as in the past, to represent their views on this great social, moral question, but the friends of the eighteenth amendment would doubtless confer as to what course to pursue for the best interests of the prohibition cause. By adopting such statements the conventions would leave the interests of the prohibition cause.

Respectfully,

BOARD OF TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH, JAMES CANNON, Jr., Chairman.

EUGENE L. CRAWFORD, General Secretary.

REDUCTION IN COMPENSATION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I present a petition signed by about 10,000 citizens of Cuyahoga County, Ohio, relating to the question now before the Senate. The petition itself is 252 feet long and, inasmuch as it bears so many signatures, I shall not ask that they be printed in the RECORD, but I do ask that the body of the petition itself may be read at the desk in order that it may appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Various bills have been introduced in the House of Congress and Various bills have been introduced in the House of Congress and Senate providing for a salary reduction and furloughs without pay for all Federal employees. Therefore we, the undersigned citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, and Cuyahoga County request the Members of both the House and Senate to vote against any and all pay reductions and furloughs without pay for the letter carriers, postal clerks, railway mail clerks, Customs Department, Immigration Bureau, and all other branches of the Federal service for such proposed action would reduce the purchasing power of thousands of these employees and would also have a tendency to prolong the present depression instead of helping to relieve same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table. Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I also present and ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a petition in the form of a resolution signed by 157 citizens of Youngstown, Ohio.

There being no objection, the petition in the form of a resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

whereas a victor and most depressing example would be self to private industry if the Government, which is a large employer of labor, would force a reduction in wages.

Whereas the Members of Congress should be constantly reminded that the salaries paid Federal employees are very modest and hardly any are in excess of the budget requirements necessary for the maintenance of a family in decency and comfort.

Whereas many workers in private industry shared in the increases in wages which were paid during the war period and subsequent thereto, the Government employees were not so fortunate, as their salaries were stationary.

Whereas if they did not participate in a full measure in the increased wages which were paid during the war period, when the cost of living was increased in a most substantial way, why should they now be compelled to accept a reduction in salary and wages as great as or greater than some large corporations have imposed upon employees engaged in private industry?

We call your special attention to the King bill (S. 2490), which would be a blow to the civil service and be a detriment to the efficiency of the Rural Delivery Service, which is at present of a very high standard.

For these special reasons, and for other convincing reasons which could be properly submitted, we most earnestly and sincerely submit our protest to you against any and all legislative proposals which provide for a reduction in the salary and wages paid Government employees.

PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, for the information of those who are interested one way or the other, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a communication and accompanying memorandum.

There being no objection, the communication and accompanying memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA, Washington, D. C., June 3, 1932.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: Pursuant to a request from your office for a list of the States where liquors in excess of one-half of 1 per cent could be legalized under existing State law, the following is respectfully submitted:

There is one State, Maryland, in which no state-wide prohibition.

law has ever been enacted. There are local prohibition laws in effect in 20 of the 23 counties, however. The definition of liquor effect in 20 of the 23 counties, however. The definition of liquor there varies.

There are four States, New York, Montana, Wisconsin, and Massachusetts, where State prohibition laws have been repealed and where no law exists on the subject.

In one State, Nevada, the State law has been held unconstitutional by the State Supreme Court.

In five States, Connecticut, California, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota, the State law attempts to adopt by reference the definition of intoxicating liquors contained in the Federal law. In some of these the legislature has attempted to incorporate any future change the Congress might make. There are court decisions, however, holding that a State legislature can not delegate to the Federal Congress such authority as to future changes. See In re Opinion of Justices (133 N. E. 453), decision of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. To the same effect, State v. Intoxicating Liquors (117 At. 588), decision of the Supreme Court of Maine. Also the language of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in State v. Coco (92 So. 883).

It is, of course, competent for a legislature to adopt by reference an existing Federal definition. See the decision of the Supreme Court of California in Ex parte Burke, 212 Pac. 193. In view of the court decisions, therefore, in four States, California, Missouri, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota, where the legislature has attempted to adopt future changes in the Federal law, there is serious legal question presented whether, if Congress were to change the definition of the National Prohibition Act, it would not be necessary for the State legislature to meet and expressly adopt such change before liquors of an alcoholic content in excess of one-half of 1 per cent could legally be sold in such State.

In addition the prohibition statutes of South Carolina and Texas fix the legal alcoholic content at 1 per cent.

We inclose a memorandum in which you will find the definition contained in the laws of the States where they have attempted to adopt the Federal law adopt the Federal law by reference.

In the remaining States the State laws prohibit liquors containing one-half of 1 per cent or more of alcohol by volume, or in some instances prohibit all malt liquors or all alcoholic liquors, regardless of alcoholic content, as in Mississippi. (See Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192.)

We trust this will give you the desired information. Should you care for the exact text of the definition of intoxicating liquors in each State we shall be pleased to supply it.

Yours cordially.

EDWARD B. DUNFORD.

H. R. 10244. An act fixing the fees and limits of indemnity for domestic registered mail based upon actual value and length of haul, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 769); and

H. R. 10247. An act prescribing fees and corresponding indemnities for domestic insured and collect-on-delivery mail of the third and fourth classes, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 770).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4808) relating to the acquisition of restricted Indian lands by States, counties, or municipalities, reported it without amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on yesterday, June 3, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2325. An act for the relief of the United States Hammered Piston Ring Co.;

S. 2697. An act for the relief of Clarence G. Young; and S. 2698. An act for the relief of Herman Ingman.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 4818) to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Bernalillo County, N. Mex., to the city of Albuquerque, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 4819) for the relief of Louise Ramsing; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 4820) to provide for the appointment of deputy collectors of the Internal Revenue Service; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4821) providing for Federal contributions to the local school district at McNeil Island, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 4822) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act to authorize loans for the purpose of providing additional employment through the construction of economically sound projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 4823) for the relief of Robert E. Masters; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 4824) to further unemployment relief by authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture to make available the personnel and equipment of their respective departments in aid of such organized programs for unemployment relief as may be approved by them respectively, and by extending all powers heretofore granted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to all farmloan agencies so as to include and confer upon them, respectively, the power to make loans in furtherance of such organized programs for the location of unemployed on farms as may be approved by such respective agencies; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McNARY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 172) authorizing the distribution of Government-owned wheat to the American National Red Cross for relief of distress; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 56, line 24, strike out the words "for night work."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting several nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on yesterday in referring to the $9,000,000 saved by the proposal of the House and the estimate of the expert as to the amount saved by the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], $26,000,000, I overlooked the fact that the House makes its exemption all along the line, not only on salaries of $2,500 and less, but it applies its cut only on $500 of a $3,000 salary, and so on up, while the amendment proposed by the Senator from California exempts all salaries of $2,500 and under. I thought it advisable to mention that fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Washington that the amount is greater than he has indicated, but that is of little consequence.

Mr. BLAINE resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The speech follows entire:

Friday, June 3, 1932

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to present some views upon this proposition before any vote is taken upon any amendment.

We have heard a great deal about balancing the Budget. The President the other day advised the Senate that certain forebodings respecting the movement of gold were threatening to disturb the financial standing and integrity of the United States, and he asked that the Budget be balanced so that that menace might be removed. I find, Mr. President, from a news report on the day following the message of the President to the Senate that gold was going out of the United States on last Wednesday to the amount of $44,000,000, only $21,000,000 of which was earmarked gold; but it is significant to observe that $23,000,000 of that gold shipment was not earmarked. Commodity prices continue to fall. Mr. President, these facts demonstrate that we have not come to a time when there is very much hope for an upturn in our economic affairs; and if I were to undertake a prophecy, judging from the experiences of the past, I think it is reasonable to assume that the prophecy would be more nearly correct if it were to the effect that if our Government policies continue as they have been for the last several years we are bound to face a long, agonizing period of bankruptcy. So I submit, Mr. President, that under the present circumstances and the present trend of affairs it will be utterly impossible for the American people to discharge debts, public and private, aggregating in excess of $200,000,000,000.

The public debts—that is, debts of the Government of the United States, of our States, and of the subdivisions of our respective States—are only a fractional part of that total indebtedness. The larger portion of the indebtedness, by far the larger proportion, is an indebtedness upon agriculture, upon industry, and upon transportation. So when we are considering the question of balancing the Budget we ought to take into consideration not one year but, in all probability, many years to come.

I think it is a very moderate statement to suggest that the $11,000,000,000 of bonded indebtedness against our transportation systems, against the railroads, in all probability, will never be discharged except through a process of receivership and bankruptcy. The Government of the United States, and that means the people of the United States, will refuse to levy taxes upon the people to pay that obligation of our transportation systems. So the possible billion dollars that may be loaned through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the railroads of the country will only mean a drop in the bucket; it may save a few railroads for a time from receivership and bankruptcy, but the time will come when those obligations will be due and payable. In my opinion, if all the railroads of this country against which are bonded obligations or mortgages were sold to-day in a market where there was a purchaser or where there were purchasers ready and willing and able to pay, the properties of the railroads would not bring the amount of the debt against them.

May I also suggest that agriculture is no less in financial distress. It is currently reported that farm mortgages amount in the aggregate to something over $9,000,000,000. In making up that estimate there are forms or evidences of indebtedness which are not disclosed by any public records, and therefore the Agricultural Department, no doubt, has underestimated the total aggregate farm indebtedness.

Briefly, those forms or evidences of indebtedness consist of what are commonly known as land contracts. They frequently obtain where the individual farmer sells his farm to his son or to some other purchaser. They often occur where the owner of the farm, in order to obtain a loan, deeds the farm to the person from whom he is obtaining his loan. A land contract is entered into; but in neither of those cases do the instruments that are recorded disclose the amount of the mortgage debt. I think it is safer, if we are to approach more accurately the facts, to estimate that the farm indebtedness against land will probably mount up to $12,000,000,000.

I submit the same proposition that I did respecting our railroads. If all the farms of the United States against which there is an encumbrance in some form were offered for sale, and there were a purchaser or purchasers willing, ready, and able to buy, those mortgaged lands would not bring the amount for which they are encumbered.

It is estimated by Cornell University, through their agricultural economics department, that corporate or industrial mortgages and encumbrances upon physical property amount to about $76,000,000,000. I doubt very much, if there were a purchaser or purchasers willing, ready, and able to purchase, if those properties could be sold for the amount of the encumbrances against them.

Then there is the urban property, the hotels, the office buildings, the apartment houses, and other like property within the urban centers of our country, mounting up to about $37,000,000,000. I think it is a fair statement to say that if those properties were offered for sale, and there were a purchaser or purchasers ready, willing, and able to buy, they would not bring the amount of the encumbrances against them.

The life-insurance policies held by individual policyholders amount to two or three billion dollars. Those loans are probably of a character that could be liquidated in full.

Then there are other loans. They range as high as four or five billion dollars. I shall not attempt to analyze those loans.

In the aggregate, the debts, including public debts, in 1930 amounted to $203,000,000,000. Since that time there has been an accumulation of interest, a large portion of which remains unpaid. A large portion of that interest has been compounded, until to-day those loans, together with the accumulated interest, no doubt will reach the staggering figure of $210,000,000,000.

Our Government loans comprise those of the National Government, a trifle over $18,000,000,000, as I recall, and our State, county, and local indebtedness, ranging in the same neighborhood.

Under present conditions, with the tremendous amount of unemployment in this country, with the low level of commodity prices, if we are to discharge the total of that stupendous, pyramided debt of $210,000,000,000, it will take the brawn, the back, the agony, and the distress of the men and women of this country who labor long into this century before those debts are discharged.

That is not a very bright picture to face, but it is a picture painted with indelible facts. We are faced with these realities. What are we going to do about a situation which promises the grief and the agony and the distress and the toil and the labor necessary to discharge these obligations?

A few days ago, before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I asked Mr. Meyer, of the Federal Reserve Board, a very pertinent question as to how he proposed, as a responsible officer of the financial affairs of our Government, that those debts and obligations might be discharged. Instead of offering the committee a suggestion, he took umbrage, felt offended and peeved, and declined to answer.

That is symbolical of the administration. It is set against any suggestion. It is blind to the facts and perfectly oblivious to the realities. So it blunders along, talking in such idle terms as "balance the Budget," and all of the satellites of the administration join in the refrain, "balance the Budget."

How is it proposed by the administration and the administration spokesman to balance the Budget? First, its process of balancing the Budget is to unbalance the Budget and to drive through Congress an appropriation of $500,000,000—half a billion dollars—for the use of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. A half billion dollars taken out of the Public Treasury; a sum about twice the amount proposed to be saved under this so-called economy measure which the Senate is now considering.

That was the first proposition—a half billion dollars, which the responsible officers of the Treasury Department and the administration ought to have known would have brought the Treasury of the United States to the condition in which we now find it.

I will revert to this proposition a little later on in discussing this question of balancing the Budget. The administration now proposes to take the money from the poor by strong-arm processes; to take from the pocket of the charwoman 10 per cent of her meager salary; to take 10 per cent from the meager earnings of the janitors, some of whom do not receive over eleven or twelve hundred dollars a year; to pinch out of their salaries 10 per cent, and all under that cry of a patriotic duty.

Patriotism, like religion, too often cloaks the scoundrel. During the war it was the handy and usual cloak in which the war profiteers robed themselves while they were plundering the American people and sending our boys overseas, two or three thousand miles away, to fight in a war in which we had no concern.

During that time of stress, when the fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers were left at home to carry on the essential labors, and were forced to live upon substitutes prescribed by Mr. Hoover, as Food Administrator; when men and women were compelled to give, as was said, "until it hurt," under the beguiling slogans which we all heard—then it was that those who were profiting out of that war cloaked themselves in the robes of patriotism while they were picking the pockets of the American people and the American sons were dying on the field of battle.

Of course, balancing the Budget under the cloak of patriotism is a perfectly safe slogan for everybody. Everybody favors it. Nobody can talk against it. Therefore when you have not anything to talk about, when you have not any program to submit, talk about balancing the Budget. The United States Chamber of Commerce are the handy means of dinging into the ears of the people that slogan, "Balance the Budget," and it, too, cloaks itself in the robe of patriotism, as does the scoundrel and the hypocrite.

The first observation, as I have pointed out, clearly indicates that the administration proposal to balance the Budget last January was to unbalance the Budget through the appropriation of half a billion dollars for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Without that appropriation this bill would not be before us. Without that appropriation out of the Federal Treasury the farmers, the merchants, the other people of this country would not have to pay 1 cent more per gallon of gasoline, as they will be compelled to pay in the next fiscal year.

Had that appropriation of half a billion dollars been withheld there would have been no tax imposed upon the consumers of electric energy, such as is proposed by the committee of conference, which recently reported the revenue bill.

Had that appropriation of half a billion dollars been withheld there would have been no tax upon each check of 2 cents.

There would have been no tax upon the cheap furs which are to be worn by those who are subjected to the inclemency of our northern clime, and other nuisance taxes need not have been imposed.

I want to call to the attention of the Senate, and, so far as my feeble voice may reach, to the attention of the Nation, the fact that if the administration had not brought forth this appropriation of half a billion dollars for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Congress would have passed a tax bill, so far as a tax bill would have been necessary, 90 days ago.

We have been engaged in the delightful pastime, first, of unbalancing the Budget and then, cloaking ourselves in the robe of patriotism, demanding that the Budget be balanced.

Mr. President, I want to proceed to some other items in this process of unbalancing the Budget. It is not my purpose to introduce into this discussion the question of prohibition, nor am I going to discuss the fundamental objections to prohibition. That is quite beside the proposition as I desire to present it.

Congress has appropriated to the Attorney General's Department slightly over $10,000,000 for the enforcement of the Volstead Act. At the time the appropriation bill for that purpose was before the Senate I called attention to the fact that the Volstead Act created crimes the enforcement of which was to be by a separate and specific method, while all the other crimes against the people of the United States, all other character of offenses against the United States, were to be punished under the general enforcement plan set up by the Government and without any specific reference to the enforcement of any specific law.

I contended then that prohibition enforcement should fall in the same category with other offenses, so far as enforcement was concerned, and that an appropriation should be made only for the purpose of impartial enforcement of all laws. That theory was rejected, and so this unbalanced Budget, unbalanced at that time to the extent of half a billion dollars, had another charge of $10,000,000 against it.

Then we appropriated another $16,000,000 to the Coast Guard for the special enforcement of the Volstead Act, and another $16,000,000 was added to our unbalanced Budget.

Then we appropriated for the Treasury Department, I do not recall how much, but additional millions of dollars, for the enforcement of the Volstead Act. That was not all. Several millions were appropriated to build additional Federal penitentiaries to house the thousands who are sent to prison every year for no other offense than that they violated the Volstead Act—that is, sold somebody something he wanted—and those millions were added to the then unbalanced Budget.

We appropriated approximately a quarter of a million dollars just to supervise those prisoners—the violators of the Volstead Act. We appropriated three and a quarter million dollars for the salaries and expenses of the offices of the United States attorneys, over one-half of whose work is the enforcement of the prohibition law, and those millions were added to an already unbalanced Budget.

We appropriated $600,000—I am giving these figures in round numbers—for the fees of the United States commissioners, whose principal work was the preliminary examination of witnesses in these cases of violation of the Volstead Act. The larger portion of the labors of the United States commissioners is work in ascertaining whether or not some one accused of having sold another a drink should be held to the grand jury. Most of that $600,000 is added to the already unbalanced Budget.

Then we appropriated $4,000,000 for fees of witnesses, the great percentage of which represented fees to witnesses in prohibition cases, adding to the then unbalanced Budget that amount of money.

Mr. President, this does not include the additional judges, the additional court rooms, the additional printing made necessary in the specific enforcement of that law. All of those sums, of course, go to make up a tremendous total in unbalancing the Budget. Those appropriations, beginning with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation appropriation, and the additional amounts for the enforcement of prohibition, reach nearly $550,000,000.

It ought to be obvious to anyone, even to the half-baked promoters of the propaganda that has been spread over the country, that there is no justification for balancing this unbalanced Budget by taking it out of the pockets of Federal employees who are to-day receiving less than a living wage—janitors, charwomen, clerks, typists, and stenographers here in the city of Washington and other large cities who are subjected to exactions for room rent that are nothing short of exploitation.

These small-salaried employees are subjected to a cost of living not one penny less than they were in the days of 1928 and 1929. Go to a second-class or a third-class restaurant and do a little slumming yourself before you undertake to pinch the money out of the pockets of the lower-salaried employees.

Go to any restaurant, go to a restaurant in the neighborhood, if you please, of the Department of Justice or the Veterans' Bureau; go with me to breakfast in the morning, and you will find that you will pay for the same coffee, for the same glass of milk, for the same breakfast food, for the same eggs, for the same bacon, for the same fruit, for any other article of food you may choose the same old price that has been paid for the last several years.

Ride on the street cars and you will find the transportation charge has increased. Go and seek your cheap clothing; try it out yourself. I can be a personal witness when it comes to clothing. I find that in May, 1932, I paid the same price for the same type, character, and quality of suit that I am now wearing as I paid in the same month of 1928 at the same place. That suit is in the category of cheaper clothing.

Of course, wholesale prices are at a lower level; the prices the farmer receives are at a lower level; but go to any of these restaurants in any city—the cheapest of them—and you will pay 10 cents for an egg, 5 cents for a glass of milk. You will pay the same price for the commodities produced by the farmer that you paid in the years gone by.

Yet, Mr. President, the lower-salaried clerks and employees are to be ground down; it is proposed to pinch the money out of them, although without the batting of an eye, without the least mental compunction, without any questions asked, we have already unbalanced the Budget $550,000,000 by reason of the items for which appropriations have been made to which I have called attention.

Now, let us look at some of this "unbalancing of the Budget." I think the slogan "unbalancing the Budget" should be made the more popular characterization of what the administration has been doing. Last year we appropriated $36,000,000 merely for a little private graft, to a few choice friends, for the transportation of ocean and air mail, $7,000,000 of which was for the support of an air mail line to South American countries. Literally hundreds of thousands of dollars have been paid in the form of subsidies to concerns carrying the mails.

Now, let us examine the extent of that system of graft. When we want to be gentlemanly and polite in the use of parliamentary language, we describe such forms of graft as subventions, but that word does not make the vile thing smell any sweeter. Mr. President, this system of subsidies and subventions has grown to such a stage that it is putrefying; it smells to heaven.

Then after we have mucked around here for a few days with these rotten subsidies—subventions, to use strictly parliamentary language—after we have been in that mess up to our waists, then, to give us some cleanliness of character, we are going to "balance the Budget" by taking the money out of the pockets of the lower-paid employees and dumping their coin into the laps of those who have more influence with the powers that control the Government.

Let us examine into some of these forms of graft. Of course, they are sustained upon high moral grounds—patriotic grounds. The slogan of patriotism again is used to by picking the pockets of the janitor and the charwoman, and to the tune of no small amount. Let us examine some of these species of legalized robbery, of legalized pocket picking.

Mr. President, the Government has established a policy respecting payments for the carrying of the mails, and the rates, as I recall, are fixed under section 4009 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. I have here a table showing the volume of mail carried and the compensation paid to contractors under the merchant marine act of 1928 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931. I find that the American Line Steamship Corporation would have been entitled for carrying the mails for that year to $28,202.51. I find, however, that it received $390,293.49; that is, it received, in round numbers, $362,000 in excess of the standard cost of carrying the mails. We, therefore, propose to take this three hundred and sixty and odd thousand dollars received by this corporation in part from 124,678 public employees who receive under $1,000 per year. That is exactly what we are doing; but, of course, we are doing it in a very indirect way; we are doing it in a way by which we may be able to fool the American people. Perhaps we can, but I think not. I do not believe the people are willing to let their public servants, the men and women who are laboring for less than $1,000 a year, have their pennies, their nickels, and their dimes taken and put in the hands of any great corporation as a subsidy.

That is not the worst case. Let us look at the American West African Line (Inc.). Had it received the standard rate for carrying mail during the fiscal year to which I have called attention, it would have received $5,341.93. It received, however, $300,645.57. And here we propose to take the pennies, nickels, dimes, and dollars from 124,678 employees who receive $1,000 a year or less and contribute those pennies, nickels, dimes, and dollars to a shipping company to the tune of several hundred thousand dollars for nothing less than a species of graft.

That is not all. I find that the Dollar Steamship Line, had it received the standard rate for carrying the mails, would have received during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, $104,857.85. It received $1,036,438.15-$900,000 and more in a subvention, a part of which it is proposed shall be taken out of the salaries of the men and women receiving under $1,000 a year.

That is not all. There is the Export Steamship Corporation. I will not go into the details, but it receives nearly $1,300,000 in excess of the standard rates for carrying the

The Grace Steamship Co. would have received $278,610.15 under the standard rates, but in fact during that fiscal year it received $1,120,575.85, a large portion of which is to be taken out of the pockets of the lowliest-so far as compensation is concerned-men and women who work for Uncle

If Uncle Sam were a person in the flesh, I wonder if he would look with favor upon his financial agents in this transaction.

Mr. President, I have the schedule to which I referred, which gives the list of transportation companies, showing the volume of mail carried and the compensation paid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, in considerable detail. I ask that this table be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have made a summary of the table. I find that if this mail had been carried on the poundage basis at a fair price per pound, the cost would have been $2,925,216.25; but instead we paid $18,790,765.72, or the snug subsidy or subvention of $15,865,448.98. A large portion of the deficit, due to these subventions, will be paid by taking the dollars from these men and women, and especially the men and women with such low salaries that it is difficult for them to make ends meet, at least for those cloak these scoundrels who are willing to line their pockets | and the most of our Federal employees are obliged to live in the large cities, where the cost of living has but slightly declined.

> Mr. President, I am not talking about the high-salaried employees. I am not discussing the salary of $3,000. I am not discussing the salary of $5,000. I am not discussing the salary of $10,000. Nor do I see any mark of patriotism in taxing a charwoman or a janitor who receives under $1,000 a year at the same flat rate as we propose to tax ourselves by a salary reduction. I am talking about the lower-paid employees of the Government of the United States.

> So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing to accept any reduction the Congress of the United States may impose. I am not discussing that. This is not a personal matter. I am discussing, however, the inequitable proposal of the committee to tax-for that is what this is; it is a form of taxation; it is a form of taxation as direct as though we were to say, "We will tax your salary 10 per cent." It is just as direct when we say, "We will deduct 10 per cent from your salary," and quite as effective so far as the employee is concerned.

> I can not agree with the argument of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton]. I agree with him when he is right. I never want to agree with him when he is wrong. The Senator from New Mexico argued, as I recall, on yesterday that this 10 per cent reduction or 10 per cent levy had to do with relativity of service. That is, the Government of the United States had set up a policy, and it had determined that a certain employee or class of employees were to be paid for their services so many dollars, and that another category or class of employees were to be paid so many dollars, larger sums than the other class, and so on, and therefore that there was a classification of salary on the basis of service; and the committee proposed to maintain the same classification in making a reduction in salary.

> Mr. President, we are not revising the salaries. That is not the proposition here. We are not engaged in a revision or classification of salaries. What we are doing, and what the Senator from New Mexico proposed to do, is to maintain this relativity of service—and for what purpose? To balance the Budget, as a contribution, an act of charity, by the employees.

> Of course, he characterized it as an act of patriotism. What it really is, however, is an act of charity. It is a contribution, an act of charity, toward those who have been receiving and will continue to receive these enormous subventions, some of which are nothing short of graft, out of the Public Treasury.

> Since this is a matter of contribution, we ought to place it on the basis of ability to contribute, the same as we place cur income tax. In that instance it is based on ability to pay. In this instance it should be based on ability to contribute. The person who receives $1,400 or $1,500 a year will find it necessary to have food, will find it necessary to have shelter, will find it necessary to have heat and light and clothing, identically the same as a public official who receives $10,000 a year. Of course, they do not live in mansions or in Mayflowers, and their ability to contribute is not comparable with the ability of the higher paid officers and employees of the Government. Therefore it is an unfair and unjust basis for the imposition of this reduction, or rather the imposition of a mandate that "You shall contribute in the same percentage as those who are best able to pay.'

> Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate. If anybody wants to take a vote, I am perfectly willing that a vote should be had at this time; but I do not want to talk against time, nor do I want to talk against the hour of recessing. I have not covered the subject of unbalancing the Budget comparably with the necessities of the case; and I am inclined at this time, without concluding, to yield the floor for the day if it is the desire of those in control of this legislation to take a recess, desiring, however, to resume at the opening of the session to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator if he thought there was any chance of having a vote this afternoon, or whether some of the Members are workwho live in the city of Washington and other large cities, ing on a proposition in the nature of a substitute that they hope to have ready to present to-morrow. If they could not get that ready to-day, I am not disposed to keep us here just to be staying here. I believe that every Senator is acting sincerely for the best interests of the country as he thinks he should act, and if any of our colleagues want time to prepare a substitute, I am perfectly willing that we should take a recess now. What does the Senator think about that?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss this question of unbalancing the Budget through to the end, because I think I can demonstrate that these items, together with other tens of millions of dollars—running very close, if my computation is correct, to three-quarters of a billion dollars—are the items that have unbalanced the Budget. I also want to present in the course of my remarks the fact that all of those items will mean a continuance of the unbalancing of the Budget through the years to come and that we are simply frittering away our time here in undertaking to balance the Budget by taking the money from the low-salaried employees when these other enormous sums have already unbalanced the Budget. They are responsible for unbalancing the Budget, and they will continue to unbalance the Budget into the future years.

The appropriations to which I have referred are not merely for this one year. They will be projected into the future, and we are going to face them then; and it is utterly impossible to balance the Budget against these enormous appropriations. We can cut out three-quarters of a billion dollars—in fact, we can cut out practically all of the salaries, and do away with our employees—and we are not going to balance the Budget in the years to come if the program that has made the appropriations to which I have referred is to be continued in the years to come.

What I want to emphasize here now, Mr. President, is that we may go to the country on this, we may fool our constituents, we may fool the American people, but when they reflect that in 12 months from now we will be in a more desperate condition, economically and financially, than we are to-day, they must and will realize that the balancing of the Budget as proposed here is merely temporizing in an endeavor to postpone the cataclysm that is bound to follow through the passive, inactive attitude of the administration and those in charge of public affairs.

Mr. President, I have not this afternoon engaged in this debate for the purpose of prolonging the debate or for the purpose of permitting some one to rig up a salary schedule. I have had no such thought in mind. My thought has been to call to the attention of the Senate, if possible—and, as I said, so far as my feeble voice can reach, to the attention of the country—the fact that we are simply engaged in boys' play. The damage has been done. The balanced Budget has been unbalanced, and that unbalancing process will be projected into the future.

Mr. President, I am not questioning anybody's integrity or honesty or sincerity or purposes. I am questioning policies, not men. I regard all of my colleagues as honorable men, men who are endeavoring to do that which they believe to be for the public benefit; but I am condemning policies, I am condemning programs, I am condemning proposals, and endeavoring to point out how those proposals must, in the very essence of the things, be a failure.

Saturday, June 4, 1932

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, yesterday I discussed the processes by which Congress has been unbalancing the Budget. Before leaving the subject of ship subsidies for carrying the mails I want to call attention to a very outstanding example. The country has noticed articles in the newspapers, particularly articles written by special correspondents, implying considerable criticism against Members of the Congress in their use of the franking privilege. If those special correspondents and the other correspondents of the various newspapers will carry this very significant information they will undo the misrepresentations that have been made to the people of the country and will present to them a truthful picture of the processes used to unbalance the Budget.

I point out that two steamship lines—the Mississippi Shipping Co. and the South Atlantic Steamship Co., of Delaware—in 1931 carried 231 pounds of mail. Those two shipping lines alone received for the carrying of that mail, in round numbers, $970,000, while the amount to which they would have been entitled under the standard rates would be, in round figures, $128. They received, however, as I have stated, $970,000. Here is the significant fact that the special reporters and news-gathering agencies ought to carry to the country: That those two steamship lines alone received $250,000 more than the entire cost of the franking privilege indulged in by Congress. I repeat, for emphasis. that mail sent under the franking privilege, if it had been paid for at the regular rates, would, according to the report of the Postmaster General, have returned a postal revenue of $723,671.

The franking privilege consists of the free transmission of mail by Members of Congress to those constituents who make inquiries regarding legislation, who make inquiries regarding their business before the departments, in the prosecution of veterans' claims, in the sending out of bulletins and documents published by the Government. Some Members of the Congress send out some printed matter under the franking privilege other than what I have indicated, but the use of the franking privilege costs the Treasury of the United States, so far as Congress is concerned, a total of $723,871, while these two shipping lines alone, for carrying 231 pounds of mail last year, received over $970,000.

I do not know whether this information will reach the country, but I know that, so far as the people of my State are concerned, they shall know the truth, for I shall tear off the cloak of hypocrisy and cant and present the naked facts to the people whom I represent.

Mr. President, I shall analyze further some of the items that unbalance the Budget. I will refer now to the air mail subsidies. Some $20,000,000 a year is appropriated for the air mail service. The Assistant Postmaster General admitted in a hearing before the Post Office Committee of the House that all the mail carried by airplanes could be carried for $5,000,000, and he said that the difference represented the subsidy necessary to get the American people to use the airplane in travel.

What earthly business is it, Mr. President, of the Government of the United States whether its people travel by air, by railroad, by automobile, by bus, by ox team, or whether they walk? Why should the American taxpayer be mulcted to the tune of $15,000,000 as a subsidy to afford a special privilege to those who desire to use the airplane as a method of travel? That adds another $15,000,000 to the already unbalanced Budget, as I have pointed out.

Then I come to another proposition. There will be found on page 108 of the annual report of the Postmaster General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, a "summary of the postal revenues from special services: Number of transactions and average revenue per transaction for each of the special services for the fiscal year 1931."

I find that the second-class mail, which includes news-papers and periodicals, is carried at a cost to the Treasury over and above what it pays in postage of $96,674,617.93. In other words, the newspapers and periodicals of this country are subsidized to the extent of nearly $97,000,000, all of which, of course, unbalances the Budget. Yet these selfish interests, through the columns of their newspapers, are demanding of Congress that we balance the Budget, while they are profiting out of the taxpayers of this country.

Why, Mr. President, men have become fabulously rich out of the generosity of the Government of the United States. We have scores of men who have waxed rich out of the Treasury of the United States through the subsidies that are granted to them in carrying their newspapers and magazines. Yet we find these men using the power of the press to misrepresent the condition of the Treasury of the United States, and to bludgeon Congress into the reduction of the salary of the charwoman and the janitor, and take the money away from the men who suffered in camp and upon the battlefields.

These are times when plain words must be spoken in this Chamber and out of this Chamber. These are times when, so far as I am concerned, the gentlemen who are receiving these subsidies from the Government of the United States are not going to get away with their loot without a challenge.

They ask the farmers, they ask the merchants, they ask industry, to pay heavy tolls in added taxes that they may continue to receive the privileges and the subsidies they are now receiving out of the Treasury of this country. They are only a part of this army that is constantly putting its hands into the pockets of the people, and at the same time using the power of the press and the radio and the magazine to misrepresent and falsify the true causes of an unbalanced Budget.

Let us go to another class of mail—the third class, which includes circulars, books, and catalogues—catalogues of the mail-order houses, all used for the purpose of advertising their wares at the expense and cost of the local merchants in our towns and cities who pay the taxes to carry on our schools and to carry on the cost of Government; yet that gentry use the mails of the United States at a cost over and above what they pay for the service, and took out of the Treasury over $23,000,000 for the last fiscal year, and a large amount for this purpose will be taken out in future years. Of course, we have increased the postage on certain classes of mail temporarily. We have asked these plunderers of the public funds to pay for a brief period of time a portion of the cost of the service of the Government to them.

Then the fourth class, the parcel-post class, over and above what is paid for that service, takes out of the Treasury of the United States another $20,000,000 to unbalance the Budget, and to result, as it has resulted, in the imposition of taxes—even taxes upon the candy of the children!

Mr. President, these grasping interests would not hesitate to steal the copper pennies from the eyes of the dead man if there were not some other richer field in which they could operate; but they find a richer field. They find a field in the Government of the United States whereby they can filch from the pockets of the American people these millions of dollars in subsidies.

That is not all, Mr. President. The items to which I have referred in a single year aggregate $722,000,000. Those are the items that unbalance the Budget; and yet these interests would take away from the soldiers of this country the $2.65 a day that the Government pays them while they are languishing in hospitals and sanatoriums! In order that these specially nurtured interests may continue to receive their subsidies and their subventions, they would take the money required for that purpose out of the pockets of the widows, out of the pockets of the men with families who are struggling along in the service of the Government on the low rate of salaries I have pointed out.

Yes, Mr. President; these wasteful, extravagant, unjustifiable appropriations are the cause now of bringing before this body a so-called economy measure by which to take out of the pockets of the poor, the sick and disabled veterans, the necessary money to continue the payment of these extravagances and useless appropriations.

But that is not all. As was pointed out by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg], as I recall, some days ago, the duplication in the Foreign Service, the duplication in the character of work and in the personnel, costs the Government of the United States $5,000,000. The present method of handling public works and public improvements is a most extravagant system. Go into the War Department, the Navy Department, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Treasury Department, and you will there find fully equipped offices for engineering, draftsmanship, and all the essential preliminaries for the initiation of public works, all of which could be consolidated, all of which could be reorganized; and I am informed that a modernization of our system of letting contracts, as proposed in a bill which was introduced in the House and introduced in the Senate by myself, and the reorganization and consolidation of some of these departments, or all of them, would save the Government of the United States $25,000,000.

Let me say here that the lack of coordination and consolidation is unbalancing the Budget; and, as I said on yesterday, the several items I have enumerated aggregate over $750,000,000—three-quarters of a billion dollars.

Mr. President, it may be said that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation appropriation refers to the fiscal year 1932. Technically, that is true, but there is not much difference between June 30, 1932, and July 1, 1932, the end of one fiscal year and the beginning of the next. Theoretically only does the Reconstruction Finance Corporation appropriation not affect the condition of the Treasury in this respect. Actually whatever money is taken out of the Treasury of the United States in the last six months of the fiscal year 1932 is at once reflected in deficits in the Treasury of the United States in the first six months of the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. President, every single item which I have enumerated is a direct expenditure, every one of them, an exhibition of extravagance, some of them of extravagance of the most vicious character, most of them nothing short of gifts to the strong and powerful interests which can sway administrations, and sometimes the public, because the avenue of communication is open to them and closed to the public.

Let us analyze, let us take a peek into the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That corporation is lending money to railroads, allegedly on the theory that such railroads would otherwise go into bankruptcy or receivership. The railroads to which loans have been made are indebted, or have been indebted, to private bankers, such as Morgan & Co., so the Reconstruction Finance Corporation comes to the assistance of Morgan & Co. by way of the railroads.

Through the advancement of these large sums to the railroads, the presidents of those railroads will enjoy the privilege of a continuation of their salaries, running as high as $100,000 a year. So by this circuitous, indirect process we are turning over to the railroads money out of the Public Treasury, unbalancing the Budget, thus permitting officials of the railroads to continue to reap their fabulous salaries, all the way from $25,000 to $100,000, and then we propose here to perpetuate that system by taking the money out of the pockets of the employees of this Government, and going into the sick room of the soldier and taking away from him his $2.65 a day while he is lingering in the hospital.

A beautiful process of balancing the Budget! It ought to receive the encomium, of course, of every veteran who is going to lose his compensation, of every soldier who is lying sick in a hospital, and whose family is starving to death in a hovel. I am surprised that the soldiers of this country are not marching to Washington by the hundreds of thousands to induce this unwilling Congress to take their money away from them and turn it over to the railroad companies, to J. P. Morgan & Co., to the newspapers and magazines, many of whose owners are becoming fabulously rich. That is what you are doing; that is exactly what you are doing. I can not state the proposition more moderately than I have stated it. I do not believe I have stated it as emphatically as it should be stated.

Let us analyze it just a little further. We are not privileged to know to what banks the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has advanced money, but I have an intuitive sense that leads me to a conviction that many millions of dollars advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which unbalances the Budget, are loans to banks the presidents of which are receiving fabulous salaries.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Patterson in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I would like to remind the Senator that according to my information the conferees on the revenue bill have just agreed to strike out an amendment which I secured levying a tax of 80 per cent on these bonuses, which constitute theft from the stockholders.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I am quite sure the Senator is not so credulous as to believe that the gentry who are getting away with nothing less than robbery would not be protected.

Mr. GORE. We hear universal acclaim in favor of the restoration of confidence, and we hear lack of confidence assigned as one of the chief causes of our distress, and I think that is true. I think the public has lost confidence in stocks and securities on account of "rackets" such as this amendment was intended to prevent, and I think a lack of confidence in securities will continue, and perhaps ought to continue, as long as legalized plunder of this sort receives the sanction of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Oklahoma that lack of confidence is in any way responsible for our depression.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not mean that lack of confidence created the situation, but the present stage is a lack of confidence, which has resulted from a combination of causes. It is, at least for the present, a passing phase.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator in that observation. I do not believe that lack of confidence has anything to do with the situation. Confidence can only be a mental state, and that is not the trouble to-day. The trouble to-day is stern realities. Lack of confidence has nothing to do with the 8,000,000 men who are out of employment to-day. It is not lack of confidence; it is lack of employment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

Mr. BLAINE. I am not going to misrepresent the Senator's position. I have disagreed with him, and I am going to give him my position.

Lack of confidence has nothing to do with the man who is starving. Lack of confidence has nothing to do with the soldiers, many of whose families have not had a single mouthful of food for days, and whose little children are becoming emaciated. Lack of confidence has nothing to do with that. It is the indifferent regard of a Government which called upon those men to sacrifice even unto their lives, and then neglected and betrayed them.

Lack of confidence has nothing to do with the low prices of farm commodities. The low prices of farm commodities are due to lack of purchasing power.

Lack of confidence has nothing to do with this $210,000,000,000,000 of debt which rests upon American industry, agriculture, transportation, and Government. Confidence can never discharge that obligation and those debts.

Lack of confidence has nothing to do with the foreclosure of mortgages, and the receiverships which are prevailing all over the country.

"Confidence" is merely a slogan. It is the slogan we have heard from the lips of the President, from the lips of the Secretary of the Treasury, and from the lips of the head of the Federal reserve system, and a plea for the return of confidence has been the only thing offered by them.

Confidence is a thing as empty as an old barrel with one end caved in. We have heard too much of this word "con-

My remarks are not directed to the Senator from Oklahoma, or to the suggestions he made, because I know that he no doubt feels as I do about this proposition, and that we are not going to lift ourselves out of this depression by this vaporing of the brain which results in the creation of the slogan, "Confidence."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I do not think that confidence is the primary or originating cause, or that lack of confidence was the primary or originating cause, either of this depression or of our existing distress. The depression is the result of a series of various causes. The present phase or stage of our situation, however, I think, is reflected in the want of confidence. The Senator from Wisconsin says that confidence is a state of mind. That is true. It is much more than a state of mind. But, Mr. President, even state of mind is as stern a fact, is as stern a reality, as a granite mountain or a roaring cataract. Revolutions with all their violence form states of mind. Of course, there are causes which bring about these varying states of mind.

Here is what I have in view. The Senator says that the low price of farm products is not due to lack of confidence, but to lack of purchasing power. As I see it, the lack of purchasing power is in part due to the lack of confidence. Manufacturers do not have sufficient confidence that they can buy raw materials produced on the farms, fabricate them into finished products, and, when finished, that they can find a market for those products which will return the cost of production. That lack of confidence prevents them from running their factories.

Mr. BLAINE. May I suggest to the Senator-

Mr. GORE. I apologize.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not ask for an apology. I do not want to be diverted to a discussion of the question of confidence. The Senator had interrupted me and suggested confidence, and I undertook to analyze this thing called confidence. But I had been undertaking to analyze the processes by which the Budget has been unbalanced, and I think I have disclosed the fact that the Budget has been unbalanced to the tune of $750,000,000—three-quarters of a billion dollars—in the granting of appropriations for the most wasteful, extravagant, and in some cases—I was about to characterize them as nothing short of criminal purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope Senators, and particularly the Senator from Wisconsin, will not forget that the interruption of the Senator from Oklahoma was in regard to a concrete case. I was sorry to see the two Senators get into a discussion of confidence. The Senator from Oklahoma called attention in his interruption to an amendment to the tax bill. which passed the Senate, that had been rejected by the conferees. I think it can be well stated, and that both Senators will agree to the statement, that by the rejection on the part of the conferees of such an amendment as that to which the Senator referred, levying a tax on the bonuses and the unholy contracts that have been entered into, we are going a great way toward helping to bring about the destruction of whatever it may be, whether we call it confidence or whether we call it something else. When we refuse to tax such things we are going a great distance toward increasing unemployment, and I might say, if there is anything in the confidence argument, toward increasing the lack of confidence that the people have in Congress for permitting such unholy things to go on without putting into the law amendments such as the Senator from Oklahoma has suggested.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have undertaken to limit my discussion entirely to the proposition of unbalancing the Budget and to point out how the Budget has been unbalanced, how it has been unbalanced to the tune of threequarters of a billion dollars-$750,000,000. I did not wish to discuss the soldier's problem at this time and I am not going to do so at any great length, but I have undertaken to discuss the so-called economy bill, which proposes to balance the unbalanced Budget by a process of taking money from the soldier; for instance, who, not upon his own request or his own initiative, is commanded by the Government of the United States to proceed to a hospital for examination, and if he fails to respond to that command, he will be charged with a lack of cooperation and whatever compensation he may be drawing will immediately be cut off. Yet he is put under Army rules and the Veterans' Bureau commands him to go to a hospital, and then the committee brings before this body a proposal that during that time he shall not receive the meager sum of $2.65 per day during the examination and observation.

The Government has compelled him to go to that hospital. He will be kept in that hospital so long as the directors of the hospital may require him there to be kept. During that time his wife and his little children, when he has been receiving but a meager compensation in any event, will be permitted to starve, and so far as this bill is concerned they will be permitted to die. Of course, it is taking money from the disabled and the sick soldier, a most unjustifiable proposition, one which can not be defended on the ground of necessity or emergency. There is no such necessity and there is no such emergency as to demand of the sick and disabled soldier that he shall languish in a hospital without | compensation while his family starves.

I am not at this time going to discuss the amendment regarding veterans. I pointed out the one illustration to show how unfair and unjustifiable is this proposal to balance the Budget after we have gone to such lengths in unbalancing the Budget through the wasteful and unnecessary appropriations to which I have called attention.

Mr. President, I want to proceed to a discussion of other phases of our Government which directly unbalance the Budget. Mr. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, on Wednesday, April 6 last, submitted to the Senate Finance Committee in its hearings on the 1932 revenue bill a list of Federal expenditures for 1932. National defense—that is, for the Army and Navy-$721,438,400, and yet there is scarcely a whisper on the part of Appropriations Committees or Economy Committees or any other committees to make a material reduction in that item.

Then we have certain fixed charges, $605,000,000 as an interest charge, interest upon United States bonds, most of which were issued during the war and for war purposes. Now, in order to balance the Budget after those interest charges unbalanced the Budget we propose to make up the deficit from the sick and disabled soldiers and the charwomen and the janitors and other Federal employees who are receiving a wage below that necessary for a decent standard of living, and we propose to permit those who profited out of the billions of dollars obtained by bonds during the war to escape their obligation to the Government. Oh, yes; the whole proposition of this economy bill, so far as the veterans and soldiers are concerned, is that having given them the privilege of doing the fighting, now they shall do the paying.

I am not surprised to find that an army of soldiers and veterans is marching on Washington. It may not be significant at this time, but if these injustices and these wrongs are going to continue to be perpetrated, if the men who did the fighting, they and their families, are to do the paying, the armies of veterans marching on Washington in future years may be of significance. I sound that note of warning to the smug gentry who are attempting to protect themselves against the imposition of just taxes to discharge the obligations of the Government.

Mr. President, falling within the same category as the interest upon our public obligations are the payments on account of debt retirement, amounting to $411,946,000 for 1932, and these two items, interest and debt retirement, will be substantially the same in the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. President, another item given by Mr. Mills which makes up war costs-past, present, and future-is that for veterans of foreign wars, amounting to $989,500,000. I have examined that item. Aside from a few discriminations and inequalities I can not see how a single dollar of that item can be reduced. Not only can I not see how it can be reduced, but, in my opinion, in justice to those men, it ought not to be reduced.

When those men marched off to war there was stimulated a public zeal. Fathers and mothers and relatives and friends of those boys had but a single thought in mind; that thought was that they were giving their loved ones to their country; but there were other gentry in our midst in those days. Those were the men who expected to profit out of the service of the soldiers who went to war. They were the men who mounted the platform, waved the flag, told these boys what a great privilege it was for them to offer themselves as a sacrifice to their country. But those gentry had their fingers crossed on one hand, and with those fingers crossed they knew that they would get the other hand into the pockets of the people and reap the profits of war. The hand with the fingers crossed was the hand that was giving the gesture to those boys, with the promise that when they came back jobs would be procured for them, would be saved for them; while they were away their dependents would be cared for; and when they returned, disabled, sick, injured, or otherwise incapacitated, a just and generous Government would see to it that they were fully compensated. Those gestures were made with the fingers crossed. They knew the time would come in the Congress of the United States when pleas would be made such as are going to be made in connection with this bill-again the plea of patriotism, the plea of sacrifice, the plea of service-to withhold what is due the men who marched away with the bands playing and the colors unfurled. Ah, they well knew that some time there would be an opportunity to breach the promises then made.

In part that time has now come. This is but the first step to break down our compensation system for the soldiers, to curtail hospitalization. The camel is just getting its nose under the tent; it will not be long until the camel will walk in and take possession of the tent.

Nothing but an aroused public opinion can stay the hand of those who are determined here and now to begin the process of taking away from the soldier the necessary and essential hospitalization and compensation. They do not come here as beggars; they do not come here in any suppliant mood; they are not asking for alms; but they are asking that when a soldier is commanded to go to the hospital a per diem shall be paid in order that his family and his little children may survive.

Yes, the proposal of the Economy Committee, it will be said, does not go very far, but it goes altogether too far, and this is the entering wedge looking toward a breakdown of the system which we have set up for the rehabilitation and the compensation of our soldiers.

Mr. President, when the people of the United States come to that point in their economic distress where everyone is reduced to the same economic level, that will be time enough to suggest that those least able should make the sacrifice. When that time comes, neither soldiers, charwomen, janitors, nor other Federal employees would hesitate. But that time has not come in the face of the exposition of facts which I have brought before the Senate, that $750,000,000 has been appropriated which directly affects the Budget for 1933-appropriations, I regret, some of them useless, some of them unnecessary, most of them extravagant.

Moreover, Mr. President, the sources of income that ought to be tapped have not been tapped; sources of income where fabulous estates are being built up to be handed down to the select few of the rich; enormous incomes only partly reached. Until those sources of revenue have been drawn upon, I can not give my approval to a proposition that to balance a Budget unbalanced through extravagant and unnecessary appropriations we should take the money from the sick and disabled soldiers, and from a large number of faithful public employees whose incomes scarcely meet the bare necessities of life, and who are compelled to live in cities where the essential elements in the cost of living are no lower, but in many instances higher, than they have been for the last several years.

Of course, Mr. President, if we are to indulge in the process of taking from those who have not and giving to those who have, then this Congress is setting up an ideal system compatible with that kind of philosophy.

As I said during the course of my remarks, when the necessity comes, even though that necessity arises unjustly, I am perfectly willing to have a fair and reasonable reduction in the salaries of employees and officers of the Government; but when it is proposed in effect to tax those least able to pay for the benefit of those best able to pay, I can not subscribe to that doctrine.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLAINE. I do. Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he places any credence in the rumor, or if he has heard the rumor, that certain prominent politicians have been to certain large business interests seeking information as to how much they might count on in the way of campaign contributions, and that they were advised by these business interests that they could make none unless they could cut their wages, and that they could not cut their wages unless the Congress of the United States should cut the wages of the Federal employees?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have no facts concerning the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky; neither do I close my eyes to a political party's prospects for campaign funds. It is said that this is a year when there is a depression among campaign contributors. We have relieved that depression considerably. We have granted a good many subsidies, a good many subventions; we have extended a great many privileges and a great many favors to a very limited and very select group of men in this country, all of whom, no doubt, have the sense of honor that is said to exist among thieves, and will make their contributions according to the benefits received.

I think it is a well-known fact that when these large contributions are made to a political party the contributors make those contributions not out of a sense of generosity at all but as an investment—an investment in politics—and they expect to derive dividends upon those investments; dividends in the nature of special privileges from the Government under the domination of the successful party which was the beneficiary of those campaign funds. So, in accordance with past practices, I have no doubt whatever but that the same gentlemen will expect a continuance of favors in the future, and they will make the campaign contributions, not out of the generosity of their hearts but rather on the basis of an investment. In fact, it has been more profitable to invest money in campaigns than it has been to invest it in stocks and bonds. Dividends have been returned manyfold as favors and privileges from the Government.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to present the facts respecting the items that go to unbalance the Budget. I do not believe that there is any Senator who will dispute those facts. I do not believe that there is any Senator who can or will deny that by appropriation acts during this session of the Congress, either actually passed or in contemplation of passage, $750,000,000 has been poured out, not for public service but for the special benefit not of groups even but of individuals and corporations. An appropriation that goes for the benefit of a very large and extensive group among the people of our country has some justification, of course; but it can not be said that any appreciable amount of the three-quarters of a billion dollars which I have discussed goes to the benefit of any appreciable number or group in the United States. It goes specifically into the hands of particular individuals and particular corporations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 11, page 45, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the said reduction shall not apply to the compensation or salaries herein described which are not in excess of $2,500 per annum; and compensation and salaries herein described of said $2,500 or less per annum are exempted from the provisions of this section.

described of said $2,000 or less per annum are exempted from the provisions of this section.

Provided further, That the reduction on compensation or salaries over $2,500 shall not operate to reduce such compensation or salaries below the exemption of $2,500 as fixed in this section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The year and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman] and vote "nay."

Mr. BLAINE (when Mr. La Follette's name was called). My colleague [Mr. La Follette] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this question. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permited to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham]. Being assured that if present he would vote as I have voted, I permit my vote to stand. I understand the Senator from Connecticut is specially paired on this question.

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long]. He is necessarily absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote if present and voting, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to announce the following special pairs on this question:

The senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. Dil];

The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King];

The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes]; and

The junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcort] with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbour].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott], if present and voting, would vote "nay," and that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Dill], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbour] would, if present and voting, vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Schall].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. Johnson's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, when the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] presented his amendment the other day he stated that it involves a question of policy to be determined by the Senate. That is correct in so far as it related solely to the question of exemptions. There is another and a larger question of policy, however, it seems to me, which the Senate should determine as between the matter of reductions by percentages and the so-called furlough plan.

I wish to offer an amendment as a complete substitute for Title I of the bill. Wishing to be entirely sure about my parliamentary rights in the matter, I ask if that may be done now? My proposal is to determine whether we shall adopt the policy outlined in the bill as presented by the committee as a policy to be adhered to by the Senate, or whether the furlough plan shall be substituted in its place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amendments to that part of the bill to perfect the text would have precedence over the amendment to be offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I would like to ask the present occupant of the chair at what time I may be free to offer the amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I point out to the Senator from New Hampshire that that is not a parliamentary inquiry because it is impossible of answer. I do not see how the Chair could tell the Senator when he may offer his amendment.

Mr. MOSES. I am not talking about the hour or the minute when I may do it. Of course, I know something about the rules of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I understand the Senator does and that is the reason why I am surprised that he should ask such a question. I have no objection if the Chair can answer the question.

Mr. MOSES. At what stage of the progress of the bill may an amendment in such sweeping terms as proposed by me be offered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an agreement to consider the committee amendments first.

Mr. MOSES. Then I ask unanimous consent to present the amendment now and have it printed and lie upon the table

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will be done.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] if it is his purpose or his hope that the bill is going to be completed in its entirety to-day, because, if it is, then of course the printing of my amendment would be useless unless the Printing Office could make haste with it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it is my hope that we can complete the bill to-day. I do not know that my hope has any foundation of any kind.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator if he is not more hopeful than confident about it?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MOSES. I am quite willing to yield to the Senator

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator has presented an entirely new plan.

Mr. MOSES. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. It is obvious, even though in a general way we know what the plan is, that Senators will be unable to study the plan and give it proper consideration unless we do so after it has been printed. I think there is no doubt that we will not act finally on the bill to-day. The very fact that the Senator from New Hampshire has presented such an amendment is a good reason for that belief, it seems to me. It is an important amendment, and I should like to have an opportunity and time to consider it.

Mr. MOSES. May I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that possibly he may get a unanimous-consent agreement that we should not deal further with this title to-day, but take up the other parts of the bill. There are plenty of things in the bill to be considered other than this.

Mr. NORRIS. We could go on perfecting the bill, but I think it would be very proper, when we have it perfected, that the Senator's amendment should be considered in order.

Mr. MOSES. If I were ruling on the question myself, I should hold that when the stage of individual amendments had been reached I would be free to offer the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator would be entitled to Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. MOSES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. We are somewhat familiar with the administration ideas relative to a furlough plan. Does the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire embody those

Mr. MOSES. Yes; I am perfectly free to say that the amendment which I have offered embodies the views of the administrative officers of the Government in dealing with this question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to consider it carefully, but I do not believe we can do it to-day.

Mr. MOSES. Having submitted it to be printed and lie on the table, I shall offer it when the period of individual amendments is reached. It involves a broad question of policy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the clerk's desk. It is the same amendment that I offered before and withdrew, with the exception of certain changes as to striking out certain portions of the 'House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska offers the following amendment: On page 45, line 7, amend the House text as follows:

Strike out the figures "$2.500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500," and in line 8, after the semicolon following the word "reduction," strike out down to and including "$2,500" in line 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And that part of any annual compensation in excess of $1,500 and not in excess of $2,500 shall be reduced by 5 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $2,500 and not in excess of $4,000 shall be reduced by 10 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,500 annual compensation in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $5,500 shall be reduced by 15 per cent; that part of any annual compensation in excess of $5,500 and not in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 20 per cent; and that part of any annual compensation in excess of $7,500 shall be reduced by 25 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the amendment has been sufficiently discussed and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready for a vote.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] and I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], but I do not desire that my vote shall indicate that I favor this policy of wage reduction in any sense whatever. I am entirely opposed to it. I think that when we have to resort to the reduction of the wages of Government employees for the purpose of raising revenues instead of placing taxes on all the people of the country in proportion to their ability to pay, we are advocating a defeatist policy which will not reestablish confidence in our Government either at home or abroad.

The Government employees have never received wages proportionate to those paid outside of Government employment. Their increases in salaries have never been proportionate. During so-called prosperous times, when expenses were enormous, they suffered by reason of their low salaries in comparison with the salaries received by those in civil industry.

Again I think the Senate should take judicial notice of the fact that the chief charity work which has been done during these times of suffering and destitution has been done by those who have been fortunate enough to earn a salary or wage. I have not any doubt that substantially every employee of the Government to-day is contributing to the support of some relative or many relatives. The contributions throughout the country for charity would never have accomplished the relief that has been reached if it had not been for that calm, quiet, modest, secret contribution to members of the family by those who are working.

I am opposed to this entire policy. There are other sources of taxation, and taxation is the only way on earth to equalize charity. In fact, there should not be any such thing as charity. It is our duty to furnish work instead of charity and through taxation supply the Government with funds for employment. The whole policy of the Government has in one sense been a Fabian policy and in the other a defeatist policy. We have never attacked the enemy. We have retreated every time there was a threat.

Everyone knows the foundation of this country is the purchasing power of the people. Instead of doing some-thing that may tend to increase their purchasing power, everything we do is something to decrease it. We have to-day 8,000,000 idle people in the country. They can not purchase. The farmers of the country can not purchase. Now, we hear we are going to have an international conference for the purpose of raising commodity prices, and yet in the very face of that announcement of the intention to raise commodity prices we are going to cut the wages of Government employees on the theory that commodity prices are low. If it were totally impossible to find any source of revenue other than we have by which we could hope to take care of the obligations of the Government, of course this would be necessary; but until my mind is convinced that it is necessary I shall not vote for such a policy.

I do not think there is such a hurry that I should be jammed into something that is violative of my whole theory of the economics of the country. I can not stand it and do not believe in it a single minute. I can not help looking back when I think of the defeatist policy of this Government. Whenever the retailers can not find a market for their goods they stop purchasing from the wholesaler, and the wholesaler stops buying from the manufacturer and the manufacturer discharges men, and thus adds to the nonpurchasing power of the country. We have done everything we could to destroy the purchasing power of the country, and yet now we propose to reduce wages to add to the lack of purchasing power. If the Government is to cut down the purchasing power of its employees, then, of course, it should follow that the wages of everyone in industry should be cut down proportionately, and we should even take into consideration the higher wages for the same services that they are receiving. That is the ultimate end of this defeatist policy. Instead of attacking, we retreat.

I can not help but remember the first Battle of the Marne, when the life of France was in the balance; when destruction far greater than anything of which we can now conceive not only faced France but faced the Allies and probably faced this country; when Foch sent his celebrated message to Joffre.

My left wing is crumpled; my right wing is falling back; I have ordered a charge all along the front.

And that turned the history of the war from defeat to victory.

There has not been a voice raised with any force or any effect, certainly not by the administration, to meet the crisis that is threatening us, but constantly there has been the admission that it is overpowering, and, instead of an attack all along the line, we are now directing not only that our left and right wings retreat but that we retreat all along the line. We have been retreating for two years under the advice of those who consider themselves the great economic and financial advisers of this country. They have made a mess of the whole thing by their cowardice, or, if that word is too abrupt, call it overcaution; by their constant drawing in even after every facility has been offered to them to advance; by their constant advice not to aid in increasing the purchasing power, but by every act known to those who are selfish further to decrease the purchasing power, further to decrease the ability of those who are fortunate enough to have a wage to aid their suffering relatives.

I can not stand for such a policy. I am not so much interested that we should balance the Budget to-day so as to give a psychological effect upon foreign countries or our bond buyers. The taxing power of this Government goes to capital as well as to income; it goes to every piece of property in the United States, the richest property in the world; and if we were not pursuing this defeatist policy and would announce that we had the revenue available and would get it, without constantly humiliating ourselves in the face of the world by this constant surrender and defeatist policy. the disastrous psychology that has been aroused not only in the last two years in the minds of the people of our own country but of the world would not exist; but we will never banish that psychology; we will never overcome that lack of confidence or that fear when we have to resort to this pusillanimous method of balancing the Budget.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I find myself to a very great extent in complete agreement with the Senator from Nevada. I have been voting for amendments and propositions here for two or three weeks which I did not like. If last December when the present session of Congress convened I had been asked to vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] which was recently defeated I certainly would have supported it. I would have favored going higher than the figures embraced in that amendment. I believe if we had taken the right step at the beginning and, as the Senator from Nevada has said, "made an assault all along the line," we would not be in the condition we now find ourselves. However, we were unable to do it. Our commander was not like the commander in France. We are not in command of the army; to a great extent we are merely soldiers in the army, and no order came to advance all along the line.

The first order which came from our commander was to pass the moratorium bill, and to pass it awfully quick. Like good soldiers, we did it. Then came the other commands, every one of which was going to clear the atmosphere and clear the field of all obstacles, and we were going to live in peace and prosperity ever afterward. However, we have been going around that "corner," chasing the phantom of prosperity, from that time to this, and conditions have been getting worse and worse and worse, until we are now confronted with propositions which are entirely different, and, after all these failures, we are compelled, I think, because of the very condition in which we find ourselves, to vote for a great many propositions which, under ordinary circumstances, we would never vote for or support.

I realize that cutting down wages destroys, to some extent, the purchasing power of a large number of people. I may be wrong in my figures; I may be wrong in the line that I have drawn in my amendment of $1,500. Certainly,

I would not have drawn that line six months ago, but I have drawn it at $1,500, and propose making an exemption of $1,500 because, in the first place, I believe that it is probably the highest point that we can fix an exemption and succeed.

I realize also, Mr. President, that everybody must, to some extent, share the responsibility and the distress that must come from the raising of the money to be derived by the provisions which we have already embodied in the tax bill. I see no escape from it. I was desperately——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment—I was desperately opposed to the proposition of the committee to make a flat cut in salaries. To my mind, there is no justice in that proposal; to my mind, that is bearing down the hardest upon those who are already overburdened.

The committee says, "Here are $120,000,000 that we are going to save from this source by cutting down salaries; we ask the poor to stand half of it, and a little more than half of it; we ask those who are hardly making a living to stand one half of this burden and let those in a better condition stand the other half." A tax levy upon the big salary is no material hardship, but upon the small salary the further you go down the greater the hardship. When you get down to the lowest salary the proposition of a 10 per cent flat cut, it seems to me, is the very essence of cruelty and injustice. Have we come now to the position where we must lay the heavy hand upon those who are scarcely able to live and support their families? I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska called attention to the injustice of having the poor pay for the suffering and the misery of the depression. As a matter of fact, we are now paying for the mistakes we have made as a Government during the last 15 years under the leadership that has determined the policies in which have been incorporated these mistakes. Of course, if those who are responsible could be compelled to pay for their mistakes, the poor would not have to pay; but now we must all pass the hat to pay for the mistakes of the Congress and the administration. That is where the injustice comes; that those who carry no responsibility must pay.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada told us another thing that, as an abstract proposition, as a fundamental principle of philosophy, it seems to me is 100 per cent correct. He spoke of the contributions for charity and then said, "There ought to be no charity." A properly organized government, Mr. President, would be one where there would be no necessity of taking up charitable contributions from the people of the country. If we had laws that were just to all and did not give privilege to those who have more than they can possibly enjoy, our charitable organizations could disband. But we do not have that condition, we are not confronted with an ideal condition, we are confronted with an abnormal and illogical condition, and we have to make the best of it.

I may not be right in the amendment which I have offered, Mr. President, and I realize that it is subject to the criticism that it will not produce as much money as will the committee's proposal. That is true; it will produce much less; the experts say that my amendment, by the reduction in salaries it proposes, will make a saving to the Government of but $23,000,000, while the committee's proposal will result in a saving of more than $100,000,000; but why must we say, Mr. President, to those who are laboring, especially to the lower-paid officials and employees of the Government, "We have a budget proposition here; we are going to tax you $120,000,000?" There is not any law that requires that; there is not any justice that requires it. That claim is not made on any theory of logic or fair dealing, but it is arbitrary. Those upon whom the heavy hand is to be laid are not here; they can not defend themselves; but we say to them, "We are going to cut your salary 10 per cent."

Those who are drawing salaries of $10,000 a year, such as Senators and Members of the other House, can stand a 10 per cent cut; but the man who is drawing $1,000, if it takes $1,000 to support himself and his family, will fail in that obligation. If he has to suffer a 10 per cent cut in the wage he is now receiving, he can not live; he can not support his family; and we shall have added to those who must be supported by public charity.

If the figure fixed in my amendment is not right, of course, we ought to change it. The first bracket in this amendment proposes a reduction of only 5 per cent, and then the rate of reduction increases until it applies to everybody drawing salaries of $7,500, with a cut of 25 per cent. Even this proposition will be much easier upon those who are drawing higher salaries than it will upon those who are drawing low salaries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Has the Senator made an estimate of how much the amendment, if adopted, would reduce the pay roll? In other words, how much would it save the Government?

Mr. NORRIS. It would save the Government $23,000,000.
Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I should like to ask another guestion. I understand that the report of the committee indicates that the committee amendment, if adopted, will save the Government approximately $121,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator's amendment should carry, it would leave a deficit of approximately $100,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Has the Senator given consideration to any plan for raising that $100,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. If I had my way, I think I could raise it; but, for argument's sake, if I admitted that it could not be raised, I would still say that that is no excuse for levying this heavy tribute upon the lower-paid employees.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes: I vield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is the Senator's contention, then, that this item in this bill should be considered wholly from the standpoint of the human element?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator yield for me to have read at the desk an amendment which I propose to offer in the event the Senator's amendment is carried?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to finish this, and then do that? I should be glad if he would do that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will say to the Senator that my amendment is to eliminate from all appropriation bills items for construction like public buildings, flood control, highway improvement, and other permanent improvements; to take those from all the bills and set them over in the form of relief legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator's proposition. He spoke of it here the other day. I think he offered an amendment the other day in regard to it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I said I was going to, and I intend to.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to vote for the Senator's amendment. I think it is good logic. I think it will be a great help.

In other words, Mr. President, when we reach the stage where there is not anything to take, we can not get anything, can we? We are now approaching the man with the $1,000 income, with a wife and family, perhaps, and we are going to take $100 from him, according to the committee's theory. We can not do it. It can not be done. These people must live; and if we take their income away from them, then we must support them by some other means of taxation. We can not afford to drive the children out upon the streets unfed and unclothed, and if we do we will have to pay the bill. So it is not economy to take away from the man with an income already too small something that will make it impossible for him to make both ends meet.

The question that the Senator asked me reminds me of something I referred to on the income tax—and this is just like an income tax bill. It has the same effect. We are levying upon the man with a salary of $1,000 an income tax of 10 per cent. When we were levying the income tax we never dreamed of levying such a high tax. That is unheard of and unspeakable, Mr. President. So in reducing these salaries it is important, it is vital, to consider how much the man has left after we have lowered his salary. When we do that we can not avoid the conclusion that we can not, we must not, in the discharge of the duty that we owe to humanity and to our people, take away this enormous amount from the lower-paid officials.

How can we defend a proposition that in raising $120,-000,000, which we do by the committee's saving—which is just the same as raising it—is going to take half of it from the poor and the other half from the people who can stand it better?

The Senator asked me where we would raise it. I have in my hand a letter which came to me this morning through the mail. It is from Branch 541 of the National Association of Letter Carriers at Lebanon, Pa. I want to read some of it to the Senate. The first paragraph says:

Shall all the postal workers and all other Federal employees have the satisfaction of knowing that we are part in a saving of $121,000,000, and at the same time to continue payments of present mammoth subsidies to certain steamship companies at the rate of $50,000 a day and $45,000 a day to air-mail contractors?

I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that there is one source where we can save expenses. Instead of paying subsidies to the Shipping Trust and paying these huge prices for carrying the mail in the air, we had better cut down those appropriations and go a little easier upon the people who toil.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What did the Senator say was the figure for subsidizing the air mail service?

Mr. NORRIS. Forty-five thousand dollars a day.

I do not want anybody to get the idea that I would like to see the carrying of mail by airplane abolished; but I would rather abolish it under the conditions that exist now than to make a levy upon those who are already overburdened; and I think we ought to abolish it entirely until we reach a period in our history, which we all hope will not be far distant, when prosperity will again smile.

Let me read some more of this letter:

Another glaring example: An American steamship line-

And this is nothing new. It has been related to us by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] over and over again; but this only shows that the people out in the country are realizing it and knowning about it and writing about it.

Another glaring example: An American steamship line plying between Galveston and San Domingo carried mail with $665 in postage thereon since October, 1926, and received $789,256 from the Treasury for carrying it. The regular mail facilities would have given them for that work $665; but we paid them as a subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States $789,256.

There is a place where we can save more than anything that is in this item—in that one steamship subsidy. I am opposed to a subsidy under any conditions; but those who believe in subsidies, and are conscientious, as I know they are, ought to say, "We can not pay it now. We must first let our people live before we squander the money in such large quantities."

Another American line, making six sailings, carrying 6 pounds of letters—

Just think of that! Six pounds of letters in six sailings, averaging 1 pound per each sailing.

And they also carried 6 pounds of printed material, amounting to $5.28 all told.

carrying 6 pounds of letters and 6 pounds of printed matter-12 pounds?

Under a Government contract, this line received from the Treasury for carrying these 12 pounds of mail on these six sailings $59,620.

Almost $5,000 a pound. We could save a little money there; could we not? Would it not be better to stop paying that enormous subsidy to a company that probably got its ship from the Government of the United States, built and paid for by the taxpayers, and got it for practically nothing, and then borrowed money from the Government at less than 2 per cent interest to put it in shape and operate it, and in addition to all that we pay them practically $5,000 a pound for carrying the mail?

This information is contained in Senate Document No. 69 of the present Congress.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. May I say to the Senator that there were those of us on the Appropriations Committee who would very gladly have required the rescinding of those contracts if it could have legally been done; but we ascertained that it could not be done, and therefore we were helpless.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with the committee for reporting it. I think they would have been justified in cutting it out, and let me say to you why: In other words, we are said to be bound by a contract. There is a question, I understand from the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKel-LARI, as to whether it is legal or not; but, assuming that it was legal, why not declare a moratorium and suspend that contract? A railroad company that is carrying mail, running a train across the continent, is liable any day, by an order from the Post Office Department, to have that mail cut off from that train and carried in some other way.

Now, let me call attention to what the Government is doing:

Away out on the plains in southwestern Nebraska there is a little town called Lebanon, in the Beaver Valley, one of the most beautiful valleys in the great West, the home of the alfalfa, surrounded as that town is by what a few years ago was a prosperous community of farmers, Americans-99 per cent of them-intelligent, with their children going to school, everything lovely until this depression came on. There was a cooperative organization of farmers at that town. Under the law that we passed-and no one will dispute but that it is a just law; no one will deny, at least, that it is the law-we relieved cooperative organizations of that kind from the payment of an income tax under certain conditions that we provided in the law.

That little organization of farmers, whose board of directors and manager and everybody were actual dirt farmers, owned an elevator. They were operating it. They made a return showing that they were entitled to exemption; that they did not owe any tax. But a smart aleck from the Bureau of Internal Revenue came along and dropped in on them, scared them to death, made them believe they were about to go to the penitentiary, and when he left he had in his pocket a check for over $2,000 that he said they owed the Government. They paid it.

After a while they commenced to think the matter over. They made an investigation, got somebody to look it up, and finally induced the department here in Washington to make an investigation of that payment of $2,000 and over. twenty-two or twenty-three hundred dollars. What happened? The Bureau of Internal Revenue under its own agents, under its own investigation, reached the conclusion that they were wrong; that the fellows who went out there and mulcted this organization for $2,000 had no authority to do it; that they did not owe a dollar; that they were exempt; not a dollar did they owe; and that is the record of the Bureau of Internal Revenue from their own investigation.

In the meantime, while all this was going on, the statute of limitations expired; and when this little organization of farmers wanted their $2,000 that the Government had

That is the postage on them. What did we pay them for | and was never entitled to, that it had forced them to put up, almost, you might say, at the mouth of a gun, what did the Government representatives do? They said, "Oh, the statute has expired; you can not get it."

When a bill was introduced and went to the Committee on Claims, it was referred to the Treasury Department, and the great philanthropist Andrew W. Mellon advised the committee of the fact that the time had expired. They admitted the Government owed the money, they admitted the Government had no right to take it, but these farmers had lost their day in court, the statute of limitations had run, and Mr. Mellon advised the committee to make an adverse report and not to pay the money.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President— Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield. I want to finish this story.

The committee, nevertheless, unanimously turned down the recommendation of Mr. Mellon and reported the bill. The committee's report is on file. The Senate passed the bill and it went over to the House.

That is a case where the Government is declaring a moratorium against these farmers. We will not pay a cent. although we admit we took this money unlawfully and wrongfully, that we had no right to it. We forced it out of the farmers. We refused to pay it back because the statute of limitations ran against it.

Day before yesterday in the House of Representatives, when they were calling the Unanimous Consent Calendar, that bill met defeat. Why? The only reason given was that it would take some money out of the Treasury, and we are too hard up and could not pay it. The next day the very man who objected to that bill was pleading with the House to pass a bill to give $5,000 annual pension to the widow of a President.

If the Government can refuse to pay these farmers, from whom it has taken money unlawfully and wrongfully, I wonder why it can not declare a moratorium against a shipping concern which is getting $5,000 a pound for carrying mail.

Now I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I simply wanted to remind the Senator that four years ago on the Senate floor I called attention to an almost identical case and charged, without any denial, that an employee of the Internal Revenue Bureau deliberately delayed the mailing of a check to an industry in my State for several days in order to enable the Government to make a plea of the statute of limitations. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that the law ought to be so modified as to make an infamous thing like that impossible.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we have the remedy. would not be in favor of eliminating the statute of limitations, because a good many times it is all right to take advantage of it. But in a case of this kind, or in a case like that the Senator recites, I can not conceive of my country taking advantage of a statute of limitations. If the Senator from Virginia got money from me under those circumstances and took advantage of the statute of limitations, I would not be able to find words in the English language severe enough to condemn him.

Mr. GLASS. I can supply the language right here and now. It is nothing in the world but legalized theft by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not think that half expresses it. I could add some emphasis to the Senator's language, but I would not dare do it on the floor of the

Mr. GLASS. I find myself using that language now with greater facility than I ever said my prayers in my life.

Mr. NORRIS. When we get along so that the Senator from Virginia and myself will be allowed to express ourselves as we want to, we will have to change the rules; and when we do that, we will give the Senate an exhibition of what language can show in cases of this kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it does not seem to me to be wrong to say to this shipping concern, "We have not the money. We can money.'

That is what I say when the Senator from South Carolina says to me, "The mortgage on your farm is due, $5,000," and I say, "Well, I can not pay it. I know that I am legally bound, but you go ahead and collect it, foreclose and take the land or do what you please, but I can not pay it."

I think we would not be doing any worse at least if we treated the Shipping Trust the same as we treat the farmers, who are toiling to produce the food that feeds the Nation.

Mr. President, I am not alarmed because there would not be as much money raised under this amendment as under the provision in the bill. If we never raise the money, we will not balance the Budget by a few dollars; but who cares about that? This bugaboo, this buncombe, about balancing the Budget has run its course and done all the damage it can do. It is an overexaggerated phrase that has been put out only in a great propaganda in order to compel Congress and the people to do things they would not do under ordinary. circumstances.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am certain that it is as distressing to me as it is to the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Nebraska to vote in favor of reducing the salaries of Government employees. I think the Senator from Nebraska might well dispute with Abou Ben Adhem his right to the first place among those who love their fellow men.

I have heard a good deal about painless surgery. I have never had much faith in that process. I have had less experience. The operation of reducing these salaries is certainly not a painless operation. It is not painless to those who suffer a cut in their salaries. It certainly is not painless to those who feel obliged to vote in favor of a cut in the salaries.

Mr. President, I look upon this process as an operation, dictated by necessity, not a matter of choice but a matter of necessity. No one desires to undergo an operation, and no one desires to perform an operation. But occasions arise when there is no choice. I will join the Senator from Nebraska in voting to abolish the ship subsidies to which he has referred. I regard them as a scandal. I will vote with him to place the air mail service upon a rational basis. I would rather vote to abolish subsidies than to reduce salaries.

This, in a sense, is a contest between the head and the heart. No Senator, if he consulted his feelings alone, would vote in favor of reducing these salaries. But some of us. when we consult our judgment and the public exigency which now prevails, are constrained, against our feelings, to vote in favor of these reductions.

I believe Calhoun divided the people into tax eaters and tax payers. I had a letter on yesterday from a constituent who divided the citizens of this country into tax spenders and tax payers. He insisted that the taxpayers had received too little attention, too little consideration at the hands of Congress. He insisted, in language which I thought significant, that the expenditures for government, from the county, the city, the State, up to the Nation, must be reduced; that we must practice economy, that we must lighten the burden of the taxpayer. I agree with him. Virtually every family beneath the flag has been obliged to practice economy.

Much has been said about the charwoman, naturally one of the first to challenge our sympathy. I remember that when I was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture an old charwoman who had been discharged from the Department of Agriculture came to me and appealed for help. She spoke to me in the broken accents of a foreign tongue. She had 10 children depending for their daily bread upon her daily toil. I intervened and had her restored to her place and her pay.

Naturally, Government employees receiving the lower salaries have a stronger appeal to our sympathy, and, when possible, to our protection. Take those who receive $1,200 a year, insufficient, of course, to live in accordance with standards which every citizen, every Senator, desires to see maintained in this country. But when that salary was fixed at $1,200 four years ago, 12 bales of cotton would pay a full not pay this. We will not pay it now. We have not the | year's salary. To-day it takes 60 bales of cotton to pay a $1,200 salary.

> When that salary was fixed at $1,200 four years ago, the clerk who drew such a salary could have bought only 12 bales, and to-day he can buy 60 bales of cotton.

> If we reduce their pay 10 per cent, or $120, that would save six bales of cotton, and the pity of it is that the cotton farmers down South have to dig that cotton out of the ground and pay the taxes which pay these salaries.

> When we reduce a $1,200 salary 10 per cent, we save $120, or the price of six bales of cotton. The Senator from South Carolina will bear witness to the fact that six bales of cotton is the average crop of the average 1-horse farmer down South. When we save six bales of cotton in this reduction, we save the average cotton crop of an average farmer in Georgia and in Alabama. A Government clerk receiving $1,200 a year can now buy 60 bales-the whole crop of 10 average cotton farmers in Oklahoma. This gives point to this tragedy. These salaries must be paid with 5-cent cotton.

> Unfortunately, this takes the form of a contest between the salaried clerk on the one hand and the driven taxpayer on the other. Senators hesitate to reduce these salaries, and I appreciate their feelings. I, too, hesitate to reduce salaries, but I hesitate even more to maintain these unbearable burdens on the bended backs of our taxpayers.

> Take wheat: When these salaries were fixed four years ago at $1,200 a year, 800 bushels of wheat would pay an annual salary of that amount. To-day it takes more than 3,000 bushels of wheat, farm value, to pay a $1,200 salary to a Government employee. The farmers in Oklahoma and Nebraska must deny themselves the necessaries of life to pay these taxes in order to pay these salaries. They must dig this wheat out of the ground. When we reduce a $1,200 salary 10 per cent—that is, $120—at present prices it saves 400 bushels of wheat, farm value. We save that much and still leave the employee $1,080, ten times as much as the average wheat farmer is receiving to-day over and above the cost of operating his farm-enough to buy the aggregate crop of 10 average wheat farmers.

> It is a distressing issue between the wheat farmer on the one hand and the Government employee upon the other. I join Senators who regret to reduce these salaries. I know in their hearts they regret their inability to maintain these salaries without at the same time perpetuating burdens that are too grievous to be borne. Our farmers have to pay these salaries with 30-cent wheat.

> Take cattle: When these salaries were fixed four years ago at $1,200, twelve steers, which had required three years to produce would have paid the yearly salary of one of these employees. To-day it takes 40 steers to pay one of these salaries. Four years ago the Government clerk with his $1,200 salary could have bought only 12 steers. To-day he can buy 40. If we cut his pay down 10 per cent he loses only 4 steers; he can still buy 36; but the taxpayer who produces the steers in Wyoming and Montana can have those four steers with which to pay State taxes, interest on his mortgage, and other inescapable obligations. The farmers are paying these salaries—are paying their taxes with 3-cent

> Take hogs: When these salaries were fixed four years ago at $1,200, 1,500 pounds of pork on the hoof would have paid an annual salary. To-day it takes 60,000 pounds of pork on the hoof to pay one of these $1,200 salaries. Reduce that salary $120, distressing, of course, to the employee, but you save 6,000 pounds to the farmer-to the taxpayer. When we save $120 we leave the employee $1,080, or ten times as much as the average farmer is realizing to-day.

> It should be remembered that the proposed cut in salaries is a uniform percentage; it applies to the great and the small, to the high and the low alike. The committee has devoted much time and much thought to this measure. I feel bound in a way to support their recommendations.

> Mr. President, these jobs or places, as I conceive it, are not created primarily or exclusively for the benefit of those who hold the places or perform the services or draw the pay.

The Government is under obligation to discharge certain | functions to its citizens—the public. It parcels out those services, and stipulates to pay a certain amount for certain services in proportion to time, the place being created for the public or the citizenship of the country and not primarily for the person who fills the post, not primarily for him who receives the pay.

I think that enters into this equation; and while this sympathy for these employees is certainly to be commended, there are, after all, two sides to the question, two horns to the dilemma. It is a distressing dilemma, and we must be impaled, it seems, upon one horn or the other. We must either reduce the compensation of employees or we must increase the burden upon the backs of our taxpayers. I do not complain of Senators who vote against such reductions. It is to the credit of their hearts. I am sure they will not complain of us who feel constrained to vote to protect the taxpayer in this distressing dilemma. The farmers are paying these salaries with 2-cent hogs. Taxes everywhere are being defaulted. The farmers are losing their farms. Sixty thousand farms were sold in one day in Mississippi. The taxpayers in the towns are in like distress.

Mr. President, the public press reported some time since, when a motion was made in the Senate to make a flat reduction of 10 per cent in the appropriation for the Post Office Department, that the chief of that department stated that if such a reduction were made he would feel obliged to discharge 36,000 employees. No one would be willing to see such a wholesale catastrophe. No one could tell upon whose neck that heavy ax would fall. Every neck would be on the block, the guillotine would hang over everyone, every postal employee, every letter carrier, whether in the country or in the city. This plan at least will result in no discharges. Everybody will be able to hold his position, at reduced salary, it is true, but infinitely better than to lose their employment entirely and to lose their compensation entirely. I think the Senate will have to do one or the other, and I would prefer this uniform reduction of salaries rather than outright dismissal from the service, and thus protect the employees themselves against the possibility and mayhap the certainty of such indiscriminate dismissals.

Mr. President, an army of unemployed-an army of unemployed soldiers-is assembling in this city this day. How many of the unemployed, how many million men, how many million women-hungry and naked and homeless-would be transported with joy to have these places, to render these services, and receive these salaries, diminished not by 10 per cent alone but diminished even as much as 50 per cent? Our Government provides, as it should provide, for its multiplied thousands of employees here in Washington comfortable quarters, reasonable hours, certain pay, and life tenure with retirement pay during life's evening twilight. How many soldiers, how many citizens, how many taxpayers are yearning this day for one of these salaried positions?

In remembering the salaried employees let us not forget the unsalaried citizen, the citizen who toils and pays the taxes. The only way to reduce taxes is to reduce expenses.

I feel certain, sir, that we can not tax ourselves out of distress; that we can not borrow ourselves out of debt; that we can not spend ourselves out of adversity; that we can not squander ourselves out of this depression.

Mr. President, I doubt not that in the years to come, when this storm has spent its fury, I doubt not that the employees of our Government who are called upon to make this sacrifice will rejoice that they made their contribution in this hour of their Nation's need.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, it is quite apparent the issue in the Senate is now between a graduated scale of reduction and a flat reduction of 10 per cent. Senators are practically united in the judgment that there should be reductions in salaries of Government employees. The proposal of the Senator from Nebraska is objectionable in that it does not provide the amount of revenue that ought to be obtained if we enter the field of reduction of salaries at all. Furthermore, it is not graduated scientifically. It is apparent a majority of the Senate want reductions substantially amounting to $100,000,000. I want reductions, but I want the reductions to be graduated on the basis of ability to spare. I shall vote against the amendment because it does not go far enough in providing the saving that ought to be secured if we undertake to make reductions in salaries. though it has my general approval as to graduating reductions.

Whether the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is adopted or not, I shall propose immediately the amendment which the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and I have been working on for several days, together with the generous assistance of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], which provides for a graduated reduction beginning at 3 per cent in the brackets between $1,000 and $1,500 and reaching 15 per cent in the brackets of $10,000 and above. That proposal, which I shall offer after the vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, will bring approximately a saving of between $90,000,000 and $100,000,000. I shall amplify my statement when the time comes.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement of Mr. Charles F. Trotter, superintendent of post-office service in the Post Office Department, before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on February 3, 1932; also a statement by Mr. Coleman in the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on the 1933 appropriation bill.

These statements show that there will be an automatic decrease in the pay of numbers of postmasters throughout the country because of the falling off of business. I want it to be understood clearly that the straight 10 per cent cut will therefore work an injustice to many of our postmasters because it will mean a double cut.

Without objection, it is so The VICE PRESIDENT. ordered.

The statements are as follows:

STATEMENT OF CHARLES F. TROTTER, SUPERINTENDENT POST-OFFICE SERVICE, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS ON FEBRUARY 3, 1932

Mr. TROTTER. Mr. Chairman, I have before me H. R. 142. in some respects, is the same as the bill that was considered in the last session, on which I was heard. That bill, however, prothe last session, on which I was heard. That bill, however, provided that no reduction should be made for the one year 1932; this provides that no reduction shall be made in 1932, 1933, and 1934, on account of reduction in receipts, and includes postmasters and offices as set forth in the act of 1925.

So far as 1932 is concerned, those reductions have already been made. The reductions were based on receipts for the calendar year December 31, 1930, and became effective July 1, 1931, and are now in effect. The reductions for that year, as I recall, amounted to $691,422, as follows: Of postmasters' salaries 4,631 were reduced, amounting to a total reduction of $575,900; assistant postmasters amounting to $24,000; supervisors 323, amounting to $40,700; amounting to a total reduction of $575,900; assistant postmasters 232, amounting to $24,200; supervisors 323, amounting to $40,700; clerks, in the 94 offices that were reduced from second to third class, 125 clerks, amounting to $234,800.

Mr. Brunner. How many clerks?

Mr. TROTTER. One hundred and twenty-five clerks in 94 post

Mr. Brunner. You mean 125 in all? Mr. Trotter. Yes. Mr. Brunner. And how much money? You say 125 men were

Mr. Brunner. And now much money? You say 125 men were reduced how much money?

Mr. Teotrer. The money involved in these 125 reductions amounted to $234,000. However, there were some offsets, because when these offices went back to the third class they were given allowances from the appropriation for clerk hire at third-class post offices, amounting to $184,178. So the net reduction at those offices amounted to only $49,822.

The total reductions for all these postmasters, supervisors, and clarks amounted to $601,422.

While we have no figures for 1933, the adjustment of the post-masters' salaries is in process of being made now. It will not be completed until about the 1st of May, but we have no doubt, the way the business has been falling off during the four quarters ending December 31, 1931, that the reduction will amount to as ending December 31, 1931, that the reduction will amount to as much as last year and probably more.

As to 1934, which will be based on receipts for the four quarters ending December 31, 1932, we can not say but we hope there will not be a greater loss than in 1933, but that is only a hope. The way it is headed now, it will be greater.

I can only say for this bill that the Postmaster General does not look with favor upon it, not only on account of the money involved, but on account of making a law that will operate in only one direction and will not operate in another. Under the present law the postmasters and superintendents go up as receipts. present law the postmasters and superintendents go up as receipts increase, and they have been going up for years and years, but under this law when they turn and go down, if they are going down, they would not suffer any loss. For that reason the Postmaster General does not believe that the bill is equitable.

Mr. Kelly Mr. Trotter, these employees that you mention have actually suffered a reduction in compensation, have they not?

Mr. TROTTER. Yes, sir; the order has been made on the books reducing all of them.

Mr. Kelly. Is there any other group in the Postal Service that has suffered actual reduction so far?

Mr. TROTTER. No; I do not think so. Mr. Kelly. I do not know of any other.

Mr. TROTTER. Only postmasters and supervisors, and clerks at offices relegated to the third class.

Mr. Sweeney. You state this system has been going on for ars and years. Is it not a fact that this became operative in years 1925?

Mr. TROTTER. The original law providing for the basing of postmasters' salaries has been in effect since 1883, with some amendment since.

Mr. Sweeney. Substantial amendments were added in 1925?

Mr. Trotter. Yes; 40 years ago it was provided that the salaries of postmasters went up as receipts increased and down as they decreased.

Mr. Sweeney. That refers to supervisors also? Mr. Trotter. Supervisors did not come in so early as that. supervisors started in 1907, I think. But all supervisors, including assistant postmasters, superintendents of stations, have salaries to-day based on the receipts of their offices and stations. If the receipts go up sufficiently to increase them, they get an increase; if they go down, they unfortunately have to take a reduction, under the present law.

From statement of Mr. Arch Coleman, First Assistant Postmaster General:

COMPENSATION TO POSTMASTERS

The CHAIRMAN, For compensation to postmasters and for allowances for rent, light, fuel, and equipment to postmasters of the fourth class, you are asking $51,000,000 for 1933, and your current appropriation is $53,000,000.

Mr. Coleman. Yes. sir.

The Chairman. I notice your estimated expenditures for this year are $51,420,000. Is that correct?

Mr. Coleman. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. You will have a balance there. How did you arrive at that, Mr. Coleman?

Mr. Coleman?

Mr. Coleman. We arrived at it in this way. The receipts have been steadily declining, and, of course, the postmasters' salary is fixed according to the receipts of the office.

In view of the decline in revenues, we have estimated the lower amount needed for paying postmasters for the coming year. These readjustments are made on the 1st of each July, based on the readjustments are made on the 1st of each July, based on the receipts of the office for the previous calendar year.

The Chairman. I notice you have a reduction of something over $1,500,000 in actual expenditures as compared with 1931. I am referring to your estimated expenditures for this year.

Mr. Coleman. Our estimated expenditures—

The Chairman (interposing). You only reduce your estimated expenditures by $420,000 for the next year? Do you anticipate that your revenues are going to increase next year?

Mr. Coleman. We anticipate that they will not continue to fall. The Chairman. Just how did you arrive at that figure. Was that a guess?

that a guess?

Mr. Coleman. No: it is based on the changes in previous years, and also to compiling the reduction in revenue during the past CHAIRMAN. You fix your salaries upon the gross receipts.

When are those fixed?

Mr. Coleman. Those are fixed on July 1 of each year, according to the receipts during the previous calendar year ending December 31.

The CHAIRMAN. How is the compensation of fourth-class postmasters fixed?

Mr. COLEMAN. That is fixed by cancellations.

The Charrman. It is fixed on the basis of 160 per cent of the first $75 or less per quarter, 85 per cent on the next $100 or less per quarter, and 75 per cent on all the balance over $175 per

Mr. Coleman. Yes, sir. All we have to go by there, of course, is the receipts of the previous year.

REDUCTION IN COMPENSATION OF POSTMASTERS THROUGH REDUCTION IN RECEIPTS

The CHAIRMAN. Did you anticipate the closing of any offices next year in making this estimate?

Mr. COLEMAN. Yes; but that is usually almost offset by the third-class offices going back, and some of them will, under present conditions

Mr. THATCHER. There will be as many coming into service of this type as will go out of service; is that your idea?

Mr. COLEMAN. I think that is practically so. It may reduce a few, but it will be a small number. Of course, those that are few, but it will be a small number. Of course, those that are reduced are very small offices, and usually the compensation is around $100 or $200 per year. So if we have reduced a few of them, it will not have any appreciable effect upon the cost.

The CHAIRMAN. To what extent do you anticipate the compensation of postmasters to be reduced by the falling off of receipts?
Mr. COLEMAN. We have anticipated here in the neighborhood of $400,000. Of course, it is pretty hard to determine that accurately. Some of them go up, even during these days. We have never had a falling off as large as that, that I know of, in the never had a falling off as large as that, that I know of, in each history of the service.

The Chairman. I understood the Postmaster General to say this morning—and I think he was speaking of this year—that there had been a 7 per cent reduction in the receipts of the post office.

Mr. Coleman. That was for the last fiscal year.

The Chairman. What is it this year?

Mr. Coleman. It will probably be the same.

The Chairman. What do you anticipate for 1933—the same?

Mr. Coleman. No; I do not anticipate it, but we have not anything to base any opinion on.

thing to base any opinion on.

The Charman. I have been wondering, if there is a 7 per cent reduction in receipts, why the compensation for postmasters would not be reduced to a certain extent.

Mr. Coleman. That does not fall off in anything like the proportion you might think. There may be a falling off in receipts, with no change in postmasters' salaries, because they only jump at stated intervals, and the increase might be within those two standards for payment.

FARM ORGANIZATIONS AND THE SALES TAX

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we have three great nation-wide farm organizations represented here in the Capital. These organizations represent the farmers and agricultural interests of the United States. The leaders of these farm groups embrace some of the outstanding men of the country. Fred Brenckman is the Washington representative of the Grange, John A. Simpson is the national president and representative of the Farmers' Union, and Edward A. O'Neal is the president and representative of the Farm Bureau. The total membership of these organized groups runs into the hundreds of thousands. Agriculture is our largest and most numerous group, embracing some 6,500,000 farms and some 30,000,000 of our population. These farms and farm population dot and cover the entire country. No policy or program which does not take into consideration the interests of this most numerous class can possibly succeed. Recent developments have convinced all other groups that unless the farmer is prosperous no other class can survive. To-day, with agriculture impoverished and destitute, we find labor unemployed, banks failing, businesses bankrupt, and our largest concerns, such as the railways, life-insurance and trust companies, compelled to ask the Federal Government for direct aid and relief in the form of loans. Government aid, in the form of loans to "big business," will not give permanent relief. If the 10,000,000 men out of work and the 30,000,000 farm population without buying power are not helped, then at the end of the year, when the loans to "big business" come due, receiverships and bankruptcies are inevitable.

For the first time in history the three great farm organizations have agreed upon a program of relief for the masses. This program embraces a joint demand for:

A reduction of expenses of government-township, town, city, county, State, and National.

An increase in the amount of money in circulation so that money will be more plentiful, thereby cheaper, which will mean increased farm and commodity prices.

A reduction and equalization of tariff rates to end that the burdens and benefits of the system will be more equally distributed.

Prevention of further centralization and control of money and credits in the hands of eastern banking groups.

A system of public works so elastic as to provide jobs for wage earners in times of depression.

A financial policy permitting farmers to refinance their existing farm mortgages at rates of interest comparable to rates charged big business concerns.

An economic policy wherein farmers may secure at least the cost of production for that portion of their crops consumed in the United States.

An immediate adjustment and redistribution of the wealth of the country through higher income, estate, and inheritance taxes upon swollen fortunes.

These reforms are not only desirable but they must be carried out if our Government is to survive.

To carry out their joint program bills have been prepared, introduced, and urged for passage by the Congress. To increase the money in circulation the farmers demand the passage of the Wheeler bimetallism bill; to secure cheaper funds for refinancing farm loans they demand the passage of the Frazier bill; and to secure the cost of producing farm commodities they demand the passage of the Swank-Thomas bill. Already, through the efforts and influence of the three farm groups, the Frazier bill and the Swank-Thomas bill have been reported favorably by the Senate Agricultural Committee.

As a concrete illustration of the activities and great influence of the farm organizations, I call attention to the farmers' successful fight against the sales tax. It was proposed to place a tax upon the things the people have to buy, exactly as the tax of 1 cent per gallon was placed on gasoline. The farmers' organizations opposed the sales tax, and defeated the scheme save on a few articles which they opposed but could not defeat.

On May 28 the three national farm organizations joined in sending a letter to each Senator demanding that the sales tax be defeated. The text of the letter was as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 28, 1932.

To the Members of the Senate:

The three national farm organizations are definitely opposed to any form of a manufacturers' or sales tax. They stand now as they have always stood. We remember, and the Senate should not forget, that in 1927 and 1928, as well as in other former periods when the sales-tax issue was being considered, its consideration was always connected with a reduction or abolition of income, corporation, and inheritance taxes. The imposition of a consequence corporation, and inheritance taxes. The imposition of a general sales tax in any form will add to the inequitable distribution of wealth in our Nation. In addition it will lay a burden on those who should not be asked in their daily purchasing of the necessities of life to pay a hidden Federal tax. Such a tax will not be absorbed by the manufacturers.

A sales tax, a manufacturers' excise tax, or any tax of similar character once incorporated in the Federal tax structure never will character once incorporated in the Federal tax structure never will be removed. It will be enlarged and multiplied at every financial emergency which confronts the National Government. One amendment doubling a sales-tax rate will be found the easiest way to secure taxes for the Federal Government rather than changing the rates of other Federal taxes. Our support to such a tax can not be secured by having certain of the necessities of life exempted. Exemptions, after a while, will cease, but the operation of the tax will be continued.

We have been in constant touch with our membership through-

We have been in constant touch with our membership through-out the sales-tax controversy this session of Congress. We assure the Members of the Senate that there has been no change in farm sentiment in its absolute opposition to the sales or manufacturers' excise tax.

Very respectfully,
National Grange Patrons of Husbandry,
By Fred Brenchman, Washington Representative.
Farmers Education and Cooperative Union of America,

JOHN A. SIMPSON, President.
THE AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,

By EDW. A. O'NEAL, President.

This fight over the sales tax was a contest between the masses of the people and the privileged and favored few. If taxes can be saddled upon wage earners and farmers, then the big income-tax payers can escape the payment of additional taxes.

After the farm organizations had sent their letter to the Senators, the President hurriedly prepared a message and with less than one hour's notice came to the Senate Chamber and recommended the passage of the sales-tax plan of raising revenues with which to run the Government. The vote came just a few hours after the President had spoken, and when the roll was called the sales-tax plan was defeated by a two to one vote. The following is a copy of the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (pp. 12048-12049):

The result was announced-yeas 27, nays 53, as follows:

Yeas—27: Austin, Barbour, Bingham, Broussard, Coolidge, Copeland, Dale, Fess, Goldsborough, Hale, Hastings, Hawes, Hebert, Kean, Keyes, Metcalf, Moses, Reed, Shortridge, Smoot, Tydings, Vandenberg, Wagner, Walcott, Walsh of Massachusetts, Watson, and White and White.

Nays—53: Ashurst, Bankhead, Barkley, Black, Blaine, Bratton, Bulkley, Bulow, Byrnes, Capper, Caraway, Carey, Cohen, Connally, Couzens, Cutting, Dickinson, Dill, Fletcher, Frazier, George, Glass, Gore, Harrison, Hatfield, Hayden, Howell, Johnson, Jones, Kendrick, King, La Follette, Lewis, McGill, McNary, Neely, Norbeck, Norris, Nye, Oddie, Pittman, Robinson of Arkansas, Robinson of Indiana, Sheppard, Shipstead, Smith, Steiwer, Stephens, Thomas of Idaho, Thomas of Oklahoma, Trammell, Walsh of Montana, and Wheeler.

Not voting—16: Bailey, Borah, Brookhart, Costigan, Davis, Glenn, Hull, Logan, Long, McKellar, Morrison, Patterson, Schall, Swanson, Townsend, and Waterman.

So the amendment proposed by Mr. Walsh of Massachusetts was rejected.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, there are many people here in Washington, and among them high officials, who do not realize the desperate situation of the farmers of this country. As evidence of this fact, I quote in part from the Washington Star of yesterday, June 3:

FARMERS ARE HELD BEST OFF IN NATION—ASSISTANT SECRETARY DUNLAP DEFENDS ADMINISTRATION IN ADDRESS HERE

"The farmers are the folks who are best off in this country," Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Dunlap told the District Young Republicans' Membership Committee here last night in defending the Hoover administration against charges that its relief program favored large banks and corporations rather than small business men and farmers.

Only a small proportion of farm property is incumbered by mortgages, Dunlap said, and curtailed crops promise increasing

Can it be possible that such ignorance of farm conditions is responsible for the apparent paralysis of Congress and official Washington in connection with agricultural relief?

Mr. President, conditions on the farms of this country are so deplorable that it is difficult to picture them accurately. Agriculture can not endure much longer such injustice and oppression. Farm leaders know the situation throughout the country. They realize the desperate plight which now confronts the farmer and the imperative necessity for immediate action, not only for the benefit of the farmers themselves but for the benefit of the country generally, which can not hope to enjoy adequate and permanent recovery from this depression unless the nearly one-half of our population directly dependent upon agriculture is rescued.

Mr. President, in this connection, I request unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a recent Associated Press dispatch from Chicago, which is indicative of the gravity of the situation and shows that farm leaders realize keenly that something must be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The dispatch referred to is as follows:

FARMERS WILL DEMAND ACTION BY CONGRESS-MID-WEST AGRICULTURAL BODIES "TO STAY IN WASHINGTON UNTIL SOMETHING IS DONE

Representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Illinois Agricultural Association, and the Iowa Farm Bureau announced last night they will leave to-day for Washington "to stay there until Congress does something to raise the price of farm

"Farmers are in the market for almost everything, but they have no money to buy," said Earl C. Smith, president of the Illinois Agricultural Association. "If farmers get better prices, every kind of business will improve. We shall insist that Congress do something before adjournment."

Accompanying Smith to the Capital will be Edward A. O'Neil, president of the American Farm Bureau, and Charles E. Hearst, head of the Iowa Farm Bureau.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say to the Senator that I am in hearty agreement with his effort to aid agriculture. I have a bill pending providing for an amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act permitting it to use $250,000,000 of its resources to loan to exporters or foreign purchasers in order to get rid of our surplus cotton and wheat. Would the Senator think well of such a proposal? Does he not think that we have got to get rid of the surpluses before we can do anything substantial for agricul-

Mr. HOWELL. There is no question that if the farm surpluses now in the country could be removed the prices of agricultural products for this crop year would be greatly improved.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would react very favorably upon the agricultural situation?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes. I will take under consideration the Senator's proposed amendment with great interest, because something of that kind ought to be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator that when the bills for relief-the administration bill to increase the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and to give it more money, the bill proposed by the Speaker of the House, and the one proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]-come before the Senate it is my purpose to offer the bill which I have pending as an amendment to either one or all of them. I commend the matter to the consideration and attention of the Senator from Nebraska, because I want to join him and aid him and cooperate with him in doing something; but it seems to me that the first thing we have got to do is to make easy the marketing of these surpluses and getting them abroad and having them consumed in the regular channels of trade.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOWELL. I vield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to say that in the bill introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] there is just such a provision, which appropriates $40,000,000 out of the funds at the disposal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in the exporting of agricultural products.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield? Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Montana if he thinks that $40,000,000 is quite adequate to aid the exportation of the tremendous surpluses of cotton and wheat? Does he not think that the ratio of $40,000,000 for agriculture to a billion and a half dollars or $2,000,000,000 for other purposes somewhat out of the proper ratio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not think that the mere matter of helping the export of agricultural products would by any means meet the necessities of the agricultural situation, whatever the amount might be.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all. We can not do it all at once, but certainly we have got to get rid of our big stocks now on hand before we can ever hope for profitable reproduction of more of those commodities. The trouble with the market is that people in Europe who want to buy have no credit with which to buy, and our domestic dealers and cotton merchants and wheat merchants are not in a position to offer credit to foreign purchasers. That is the want and the need that I am seeking to supply. I will say to the Senator that my bill is not limited to the Farm Board or cooperatives, but it is available to anybody who is in the business of buying and selling these commodities or producing them, in order to stimulate the normal channels of trade in wheat and cotton for foreign consumption.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HOWELL, I yield.

Mr. GORE. I dislike to trespass upon the Senator's time, but I wish to observe that we tried the policy for a number of years of loaning money to the peoples of Europe with which to buy our goods. So long as we did that they bought and we had a fine market and we had fair prosperity, but that sort of policy could never be permanent, and it broke

To signify my contribution to this proposition, I wish to state that I have also introduced two bills, one dealing with cotton and one with wheat-the wheat and cotton impounded by the Farm Board-regulating how it should be held and when it should be sold. I do not doubt that if these measures shall be passed they will enhance the price of cotton 2 or 3 cents a pound and of wheat 5 cents a bushel.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is very worthy of consideration whether the contention is not eminently sound that any nation that becomes a creditor nation can only retain its prosperity by loaning its excess in some form or other to develop foreign markets.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to make one more observation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. GORE. We have a number of international institutions in this country which have had a good deal of experience and rather too much success in the marketing of foreign securities in this country, the proceeds of which, no doubt, were largely used to purchase our products.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I am, indeed, gratified to observe, as I have heretofore, the interest in the agricultural situation that is constantly evident on the part of the able Senators from Texas and from Oklahoma.

There is more than one branch to this agricultural question. One of the things-the primary thing-we must do is to afford the farmers of this country a United States price for that which they produce, inasmuch as they must pay a United States price for that which they buy.

The next important problem that confronts us is this: There is a large class of farmers in this country who have equities in assets; they are solvent; but, because they are unable to borrow or renew their loans, they are being foreclosed. We ought to go to the rescue of that class of

There is another class of farmers which it is far more difficult to aid, and that is the class of farmers whose equities have become so small they are practically bankrupt at the present time. It is regrettable that we can not assist them, but, unfortunately, all we can do for them is to afford them an economic equality and absolute security, inasmuch as farmers are now receiving but 56 per cent of the average they received from 1909 to 1914 for their products. That is the tremendous problem that is before us. and until agriculture is rescued in this respect we can not hope for general prosperity in this country, because, as I have heretofore stated on this floor, 44 per cent of our people are directly dependent upon agriculture, either as producers or as those who serve such producers. I am speaking of all the ruralists of the country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield. Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As a representative of an industrial State, I want to express my approval of the sentiments just cited by the Senator from Nebraska,

Mr. HOWELL. I, indeed, thank the able Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, farm leaders of the country have served notice on Congress that the responsibility is now upon official Washington to do something. This position is set forth in a letter signed by representatives of the American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, and Farmers' Union.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent to insert that letter in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1932.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,

Chairman House Committee on Agriculture,

Washington, D. C.
My Dear Chairman Jones: The three national farm organizations, representing 2,000,000 farm people in the United States and constituting the only organized groups in our Nation which speak for all the farmers in the country, have appeared before the House | Committee on Agriculture in regard to amendments to the agricultural marketing act.

This was not done merely as an idle gesture to keep our records straight or to advocate certain specific methods to assist in solving the surplus problem. It was done because of a strong feeling among the leaders and throughout the membership of these organizations that until constructive and effective legislation is passed to assist agriculture in marketing her crops, particularly in the domestic market, all else which Congress does will be largely interfective. ineffective

On February 4 and 5 the Farmers' Union appeared and offered its arguments in regard to this general proposition. On February 16, 17, and 18 the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau 16, 17, and 18 the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau Federation appeared. On January 12 another appearance was made before your committee covering the same subject matter. Then for the fourth time, on May 4, the organizations came before you briefly and presented a composite measure, which now lies before your committee.

This last measure is proof positive that the three national farm organizations are in agreement on this matter of amending the marketing act and securing effective surplus-control legislation.

As a result of this last appearance there now lies before the marketing act and securing effective surplus-control legislation.

As a result of this last appearance there now lies before the House committee a responsibility to act upon this measure which the three farm organizations are agreed upon, and upon which they expect action. This is a responsibility which the farm organizations have not shirked, nor do they expect the House Committee on Agriculture to shirk its responsibility.

Only 23 days remain in this session of Congress, if adjournment is taken on the date now tentatively agreed upon by the congressional leaders. This is a short time, but it is not too short to secure a favorable report upon this measure, and action by the entire Congress, before adjournment.

secure a favorable report upon this measure, and action by the entire Congress, before adjournment.

The prosperity of our Nation depends upon the prosperity of that approximate half of our population which has its first hope of prosperity in the welfare of agriculture. The Nation is expecting the Congress to enact legislation which will again start the wheels of industry turning. The wheels of industry can not turn unless agriculture is moving forward in her prosperity. This measure will start agriculture upward and, as a result, will aid undoubtedly more than any other legislation thus far passed in curing the causes of this depression. the causes of this depression.

Very respectfully, American Farm Bureau Federation,

By EDW A. O'NEAL, President.
THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
By FRED BRENCKMAN, Washington Representative.

FARMERS EDUCATION AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA, By JOHN A. SIMPSON, President.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the farm-relief measure referred to in this letter is now on the calendar of the Senate. Certainly, it should receive early consideration, not only by the Senate but by the House. Both Houses of Congress must act.

In short, the farmers have agreed upon a program, and their leaders have presented it again and again to the proper committees of this Congress. Therefore, so far as initial action is concerned, these farm leaders have discharged their responsibility in the premises. Therefore, that responsibility now rests squarely upon the Senate and House of Representatives. Each House has the power to provide the legislation deemed necessary.

The question is, Are we to have prompt consideration of this measure? Or are we to acknowledge, by inaction, that there is not the will in Congress to act in behalf of agri-

Mr. President, agriculture must be rescued.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am as anxious as anyone to vote on the matter now pending before the Senate, and I shall not take up the time of the Senate further than to say a word about agriculture.

Kentucky is one of the greatest agricultural States in The farmers in that State, however, are not the Union. asking anything in the world of Congress except that Congress help to keep other people's fingers out of their pockets. We want no bonuses; we want no appropriations for our benefit; we would like the time of payment on our interest to be extended a little bit; but the farmers of Kentucky are the equal of the lawyers or the doctors or the preachers or any other people on earth. They know that there is nothing that Congress can do to help them except to give them equal standing before the world.

They also have no very great admiration for those who express so much sympathy for them, who talk about the poor farmer and how much he needs to be relieved; and yet, when the opportunity comes to vote to charge the farmers $3 a thousand on the lumber they need to build their little houses, they vote that way with a good deal of gusto and say, That is all right," and then insist that there ought to be a cut in the salaries of poor Government employees because it will help the farmer.

What I am about to say does not apply to anything just now; it is apropos of nothing in the world; but it has come to my mind several times, and I want to make the statement. Senators who are students of the Bible-and all of them ought to be for they need it just now-will remember that at one time the prophet Elijah had a great contest with the priests of Baal upon Mount Carmel. It will be recalled how the priests of Baal prayed to their God all day, and Elijah made fun of them and ridiculed them. Then later in the afternoon when the sacrifices were prepared and the ditches were filled with water, fire came down and consumed the sacrifice, and Elijah won a great victory over the priests of Baal. Now, if Elijah were still living, he would have to thank his God every day that the contest he had was not with the "priests of bunk" instead of with the priests of Baal, because he certainly would have lost.

I have a word more to say on this question of making cuts in salaries. I have no objection to reducing salaries: I believe that every one is willing to stand a reduction if it is fairly made. What I am objecting to is that we are concealing our dereliction of duty by reducing the salaries of those who are unable to stand it, and leaving those with large appropriations to which they are not entitled in the enjoyment of such appropriations, when we ought to take them away from them. Many of them have been mentioned. There are others.

The one particular thing that makes me feel badly about this whole matter is this:

When the sons of Mary come asking for help, we greet them with outstretched hands filled with gifts. We kill the fatted calf, and put purple robes upon them and rings upon their fingers, and send them away rejoicing. But when the sons of Martha come and humbly pray for lowly bread, we contemptuously give them a stone.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. and for other purposes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement about my position on the pending measure, because it now appears that in all probability I shall not be present in the Senate when the vote comes. I am going to be compelled to be absent for some days on a matter that all of my friends understand.

My concern is to keep the expenditures within the income of the Government; and in order to do it we necessarily must cut where we can on the expenditures, and impose additional taxes to make up the difference where the cut will not be sufficient.

I regret exceedingly that the country is misinterpreting our problem. A great number of our people throughout the land who ought to know seem to think that this problem can be solved easily by reducing Government expenses; that that is all that is necessary to be done. I have stated to them that even if we abolished the entire pay roll of the legislative department of the Government it would be only a drop in the bucket in the emergency that faces us. Notwithstanding that, I think that there is no choice left for us; that we must make such reduction as is demanded, and I am going to go along in doing that.

I should prefer very much to have the furlough system, if it is workable. It seems to me that it has some very strong points. In the first place, it would maintain the salary scale, and it would be a step in the direction of the shorter week, which it looks to me as if industry is going to come to in time; and instead of laying off people it would employ a large number. There are, however, some objections to it. I will vote for it if an opportunity is given, believing that it is a sound procedure.

If that could not be, I should prefer then the graduation plan; and I should not be willing to exempt as has been proposed in the pending amendment here; I should prefer the measure that is suggested by the cooperation of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New York.

As I say, I think the graduation plan is the most feasible, the most workable, and it appeals to me as equitable. I should not want to go down to the point where anyone with a reasonable salary would not be taking part in this contribution. I think every person ought to participate in helping solve the problem, but it ought to be at the minimum in percentage. Then I should be perfectly willing to go up to 20 per cent, if necessary, in the $10,000 rank.

If the graduation plan is not accepted, or we have no opportunity to vote for it, I am going to vote with the committee on the plan that has been reported by the committee.

In other words, what I would do is in obedience to the effort to balance the Budget. I think that is absolutely necessary.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will state to the Senator that, after the Norris amendment has been voted upon, if it is rejected, I shall offer my amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I wanted to make this statement, so that in case a vote comes while I am not in the Senate Chamber the Senate and the country will know my position. I am convinced that it is unwise to do anything short of making our expenditures stay within the limits of our income. There are two courses to follow: One is to reduce the expenditures where we can to the degree that we can. The other is to impose additional taxation where we can not avoid it. We shall really finish the tax problem so far as we can go probably on Monday. It is not likely that we will get the tax bill to-day. That leaves us with the problem of reduction.

I shall vote in accordance with the proposal to make the reduction sufficient to balance the Budget, and I have stated the ways that I would prefer. The furlough plan appeals to me greatly. The graduation plan is a better plan than the one the committee has presented; but if neither one of these is adopted, then I am going to vote for the flat 10 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I feel exceedingly sorry for the committee. I know how hard they worked, and the very fact that we have taken two days to discuss this question is an evidence of the difficulties involved in the problem which confronted them.

I am fully convinced, however, that it would be unthinkable that we should impose upon these low-paid employees, those from $1,000 down, a 10 per cent reduction. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and I spent a lot of time in consultation with other Senators. I am sure he will agree with me that doubtless our plan is not a perfect one, but at least it is an equitable plan. When we impose an income tax we impose a tax proportionate to the ability to pay, and we have tried by a graduated plan to put the tax where it would cause the least suffering.

To take 10 per cent off an employee getting a thousand dollars means a whole lot. On a very limited budget $100 is a lot of money. I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson], because I wanted to be on record right away as being in favor of a graduated plan of reduction. I hope we may hit upon something that will be fair and just.

I am in harmony with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says about the need of balancing the Budget. We must do that. At the same time we do not want to balance the Budget at the expense of many underpaid employees of the Government, and I believe that is the sentiment of the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the pending committee amendment is entitled "Compensation Reduction of Federal Employees." A more appropriate designation would be "A proposal to legalize the picking of the pockets of those who give to the United States Government their labor, their liberty, and their life." My vote will be cast for the most drastic available proposal to reduce my own salary and that of every other Member of Congress. Not because I believe that any Member of the House or Senate is overpaid, but for the reason that—Mankind are unco weak, And little to be trusted, If self the wavering balance shake It's rarely right adjusted.

Until it is conclusively proved that it is justifiable to commit grand larcency, common burglary, and highway robbery, my vote will be recorded against every measure designed to reduce the compensation of Federal employees who receive less than $2,500 a year. As a rule, the employees of private corporations are paid much higher salaries or wages for given services than are paid for the performance of similar duties to Government employees.

The Government servant habitually sacrifices something of compensation for the prospect of permanency of employment and stability of wages. Thus, the intended victims of the committee amendment have regularly contributed more than their share to the Government throughout the period of their employment. The Federal wage earners should not, for their generous sacrifices in the past, be subjected to unnecessary, distressing penalties in the present.

During the last two years practically every great corporation in the country has reduced salaries and slashed wages for the alleged purpose of hastening the end of the depression and speeding the return of prosperity. But every reduction that has been made in the compensation of the toilers has been followed by an aggravation of every symptom of the financial, industrial, and economic diseases which have for three years afflicted the country as it has never been afflicted before.

Recent experience teaches and common sense proclaims that to reduce wages is to diminish the purchasing power of the people. To diminish the power of the people to purchase the necessaries and comforts of life is to prolong the panic. To prolong the panic is to commit treason against a distressed, distracted, and discouraged world. To vote for the committee amendment in its present form would be to vote to increase poverty, delay the return of prosperity, and irreparably injure the faithful Federal employees.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. BLAINE (when Mr. La Follette's name was called). My colleague [Mr. La Follette] has a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WHEELER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho, and not knowing how he would vote. I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. It has been announced, however, that that Senator would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut | Mr. Bingham |. Being advised that if present that Senator would vote as I have voted, I will permit my vote to stand. The Senator from Connecticut is necessarily absent, and is specially paired on this question.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend]. I understand that Senator is not in the Chamber, and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is absent from the city. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL].

I also desire to announce that if present the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King], and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] would vote "nay," and that if present and voting, the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes], the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart], and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 54, as follows:

REVENUE AND TAXATION-CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I am informed that the House of Representatives, without a roll call, agreed to the conference report on the revenue and tax bill. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report may be taken up in the Senate on Monday at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. WATSON. I know it is a privileged matter, but I just want to have an agreement as to the time when it will be taken up.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, why not take it up this afternoon?

Mr. WATSON. I do not suppose the report could be agreed to this afternoon, because I am told there are various controversial questions which will provoke considerable discussion

Mr. JONES. I think we ought to adopt the report this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. WATSON. We do not need unanimous consent, but I just wanted an understanding on the part of the Senate that when we meet at 12 o'clock on Monday we can take up the conference report on the tax bill.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection, but I do not think it is

Mr. JONES. I may say to the Senator that I intend to ask for a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. WATSON. Even if we meet at 10 o'clock, we can take up the tax bill at 12 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. I may as well ask for the agreement now. I ask unanimous consent that when we conclude our business to-day, we take a recess until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. I object. Mr. WATSON. I renew my request that we proceed with the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill at 12 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. WATSON. Now, I renew my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, we were told almost every day during the consideration of the tax bill that it was a matter of life and death, and that one day's time would wreck a large portion of the world. Why not take it up now?

Mr. WATSON. I am entirely willing to take it up now, except that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, is not well and has gone home.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator did not make that excuse a while ago.

Mr. WATSON. I did not think I needed an excuse.

Mr. CONNALLY. If there is going to be a lot of talk on it, the sooner we begin to talk the better.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that there are several controversial propositions that will be debated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the fact that the House yielded on every important amendment, what is there to talk about any further in the Senate? If the conferees struck out all the controversial matters and put in a lot of amendments that have been agreed to, what is the occasion for further discussion?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I am not much given to going out and meeting trouble in advance, but I have stated that there are two propositions that will occasion debate in the Senate. I do not care to mention what they are, for it might stir up some one who has not found them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator couple with his request the further request that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock?

Mr. WATSON. Yes; that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Let us hear what the request is now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday, and that the conference report on the revenue bill be then taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the other agreement will have to be set aside, will it not?

Mr. JONES. No; the other request was objected to.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course, I will cheerfully withhold objection to any proposition that the esteemed Senator from Indiana shall propose; I seldom disagree with his conclusions; but I am unable to perceive why practical men should not proceed with the conference report this afternoon, and for the following reasons: The conference report has been agreed to by the House. No Member of the Senate believes that it will be defeated here, no matter what the conferees have inserted. No Senator would risk his reputation as a practical man by asserting that any debate, no matter how learned nor how protracted, would defeat the conference report.

Since all men know that to be so, why wait until Monday to do that which can be done to-day? Everyone who indulges in the luxury of thinking knows that the report will be adopted. Why, then, not proceed this afternoon? It is too late to go to the ball game, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none.

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Massa-

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The matter has been closed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has announced that unanimous consent is granted.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Chair.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. President, I offer, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. Cope-LAND] and myself, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words inserted by the committee and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

By the amount provided in the following table:

Sal	lary:			uction r cent)
	$1,000	to	$1,500	5
	$1,500	to	82.000	6
	$2,000	to	$2.500	7
			$3,000	10
	$3,000	to	85.000	11
	$5,000	to	$10.000	13
	$10,000) a	nd over	15

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget is authorized and directed to establish the actual rates of compensation which most nearly reflect these percentage reductions, while also preserving so far as possible the existing relationship between compensations in the various brackets.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I do not care to debate this amendment at length; it was debated yesterday, and the reasons in favor of it were advanced by the Senator from New York, by other Senators, and by myself. I think it is agreed by even the members of the committee that if we enter the domain of reducing salaries gradually this amendment meets the objection of the committee better than any other amendment, in that it provides a saving to the Government of between ninety million and one hundred million dollars. In addition, it reduces our own salary more than other Government employees.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will yield in a moment. It has also this advantage over the committee amendment. in that it makes the reduction of salaries under $2,500 less than 10 per cent. Under the amendment the 10 per cent rate begins with salaries of $2,500, but in the bracket between $1,000 and $1,500 the rate is 5 per cent; between $1,500 and $2,000 it is 6 per cent; between $2,000 and $2,500 it is 7 per cent; and then it commences with the committee rate of 10 per cent on salaries of $2,500, and increases the rate to 15 per cent on salaries of $10,000 and over. Now I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the proposed amendment, what is the rate of reduction on salaries between $5,000 and $10,000?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Between $5,000 and $10,000 the rate is 13 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the amendment as read did not indicate that clearly, at least, I did not get it from the reading.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I will read it again for the benefit of the Senate.

Under $1,000 there is no reduction; between $1,000 and $1,500 the rate of reduction is 5 per cent. On salaries from $1,500 to $2,000-

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The rate of 5 per cent applies to salaries up to $1,500?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. To salaries just under $1,500, or those between $1,000 and $1,500.

On salaries of $1,500 to $2,000 the rate of reduction proposed is 6 per cent; on salaries of $2,000 to $2,500 it is 7 per cent; on salaries of $2,500 the rate recommended by the committee begins to apply, namely, 10 per cent which rate is proposed on salaries between $2,500 and $3,000. On salaries of $3,000 to $5,000 the rate proposed by the amendment is 11 per cent; on salaries of $5,000 to $10,000 the rate proposed is 13 per cent, and on salaries of $10,000 and above the rate proposed is 15 per cent.

The issue here is very clear. The committee thinks we ought to adopt a flat rate of 10 per cent. I believe that that is a mistake. Some of us insist that the rates ought to be graduated. The amendment will give Senators favoring equitable reductions an opportunity to go on record for a system of graduated rates that will provide for larger reductions in the higher salaries and lower in the smaller salaries. It will not produce quite so much of a saving as the committee amendment but it is more equitable; it does begin with a lower rate in the lower brackets, and makes the rate of reduction less on the smaller salaries. I do not care to debate the amendment longer, having debated it yesterday, but I should like to have a record vote on it, and I ask for the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's amendment, it will produce almost as much by way of a saving as the committee amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It will produce a saving of between $90,000,000 and $100,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. And the $90,000,000 saving is accomplished by reason of the reduction on the low salaries? Is not that a fair statement?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not think that is exactly true. It was my opinion that under the amendment we considered yesterday—and the one I have now offered does not vary from that—about 20 per cent of the savings would come from salaries under $2,000. It is not as satisfactory an amendment as I would like but it is the only amendment that has a chance of adoption with rates under the committee rate of 10 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. There is this about it which I think is apparent on its face—I have not had an opportunity to study it—that it does about what the committee amendment does; it gets about half, I should judge, of the saving from the low-salaried men and women.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I undertook to make some figures for the Senator from Massachusetts a few minutes ago in respect to his table, and it appears to me from the proposal that the amendment will fall at least $20,000,000, and probably nearer $30,000,000, short of the amount of the estimated saving under the committee proposal, and that all of that $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 will be saved in the lower brackets. I think that is the mathematical situation.

Mr. NORRIS. What does the Senator mean by "the lower brackets"—how high up?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should say the entire twenty million or thirty million saving is made by the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts on salaries under $3,000.

Mr. NORRIS. That still leaves it, it seems to me, very objectionable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator permit me to add that there is a complete exemption, as I understand, under the plan of the Senator from Massachusetts of salaries below $1,000?

Mr. NORRIS. That still means that the bulk of the sacrifice has got to be made by employees of comparatively small salary.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. It is probable that the large percentage of it—I do not think it would be one-half but a considerable percentage—would come from employees now receiving from $2,000 to $2,500.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator please repeat his statement?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator inquired whether the lowsalaried employees would pay it?

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. COPELAND. Under the operation of this amendment up to $1,000 there will be no reduction made. Then from $1,000 to $1,500 the reduction will be 5 per cent, and from $1,500 to $2,000, 6 per cent. When we reach salaries from $2,000 to $2,500 there is where the major part of the money will come from.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the rate of reduction on those salaries?

Mr. COPELAND. I should say that there would be saved about $40,000,000 in that bracket.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the rate?

Mr. COPELAND. Seven per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not help but believe that the experts who figure these things jump to a good many conclusions.

The amendment that the Senate has voted down went higher than this amendment does in the higher brackets and pretty nearly as low in the lower brackets, and I was told that the experts had estimated it would save the Government $23,000,000. Now, here is this amendment with only a 5 per cent rate on salaries from $1,000 to $1,500, and not going as high in the maximum rate of reduction as the other amendment, and yet we are told by the experts it will save for the Government about $94,000,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. But the Senator understands that the great bulk of the postal employees are in the bracket between $2,000 and $2,500, and the very largest number of Government employees are in that bracket. My amendment lowers by almost one-third their reduction.

Mr. NORRIS. Still the employees in that class would have only a 7 per cent cut, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is all.

Mr. NORRIS. While under my amendment the same class would pay 10 per cent, but it seems that we will get more money out of a 7 per cent cut than we will out of a 10 per cent cut. If that is so, I would be delighted to have the saving brought about in that way; but, of course, there must be some magic about it, for I do not understand how we can effect a greater saving on salaries of poor clerks by levying a tax, so to speak, of 7 per cent than we can by making them pay 10 per cent. If that is so, I think we ought to adopt that plan; it is a pretty fine business operation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that the confusion, perhaps, arises from the fact that the Senator's 10 per cent applied only to the last thousand dollars of a $2,500 salary and therefore when calculated on the basis of the entire bracket it becomes very much less than the percentage under the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, but I have just been told by my friend from Massachusetts that the reason this bracket raises so much more is that it catches the postal employees, and that they have more money than anybody else.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the largest bracket of the various salary classes?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the bracket between $2,000 and $2,500

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And we levy a tax of 7 per cent on them, and under the other proposal we would levy a tax of 10 per cent on the same employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; the other proposal levied a tax of 10 on the last thousand dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; from $1,500 to $2,500.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's amendment would have raised $50, while the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will raise $70.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is a big improvement over the committee amendment, and I am going to vote for it, although we are taking it without very much consideration. I should like to have had some opportunity to consider it, and to have it examined by the so-called experts, to see just what it will raise. Have the experts given us any figures on it?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the Senator will call the Senator from New York an expert, and the Senator from Michigan an expert, I would say that they have spent a great deal of time in figuring this matter out.

Mr. NORRIS. I will take their figures quicker than I will those of anybody from the Treasury Department. Their figures seem to be pretty reliable. What is their estimate of the saving that will be effected?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is estimated that there will be a saving of between ninety and a hundred million dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is another reason why I feel inclined to vote for the amendment, because by levying a lesser rate we get more money. That is the thing that appeals to me. I can not help but believe that somewhere, with some of these experts' figures, either on this amendment or on the committee amendment or on the other amendment that was voted down, there must be something wrong somewhere. It is suggested that the matter may be taken up in conference. Yes; it will be taken up in conference, I presume, by receding from the Senate amendment. That is what was done on the tax bill. They worked everything out in conference to suit the conferees, but if they did not like an amendment adopted by the Senate they got in the conference room, in a secret chamber, and simply said, "We will recede," and that ended that.

I will not say that in connection with the debate on this bill; I am going to say it when we get to the tax bill. There was not any reason on earth why the Senate should have debated the questions involved. It did not do any good to adopt amendments, for if the conferees did not like what we did, they simply threw it out of the window when they got out of the Senate Chamber, and now we are going to approve it, and nobody dare be against it, because it balances the Budget.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before I make up my mind on this amendment, I should like to ask whether I am going to get an opportunity to vote on the amendment that has been framed by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will be very glad to make a brief statement on the whole subject from my viewpoint as soon as the Senator from Nebraska has concluded.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator going to offer his amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I am not. I think that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts affords as good a means of testing the sentiment of the Senate, the philosophy of the graduated scale, as any other. I beg the Senator from Nebraska's pardon; I did not mean to take him from the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not need to beg my pardon, for I am through.

Mr. VANDENBERG. First, referring to the seeming discrepancy in arithmetic of which the Senator speaks, his 5 per cent rate on $2,500 applied only to the last $1,000 of that rate, which, therefore, became but 2 per cent on the entire $2,500. Therefore the comparison is between 2 per cent in his instance and 7 per cent in the rate indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts. Hence the large difference in the amount of saving produced by the two plans.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has asked about the tables upon which I was at work yesterday in this same matter. I undertook to perfect a consecutive mathematical table which I felt would have the fewest "humps" in it and, therefore, would approximate the fairest net progression in reduction spread; but the result of that calculation, as finally determined this morning, when it was surveyed by other Senators interested in the same problem, demonstrated that a resort to this consecutive progression would impose an entirely unfair portion of the load in the particular bracket to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred. Therefore it seemed to me it would be necessary, in fairness, to abandon that method of progression whereupon the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New York submitted the general scale which is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. There is this thing that I think exists in the pending amendment: There will be a so-called "hump" every time another bracket is entered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is entirely true, except that the Senator has added a sentence to his schedule which directs the Budget to straighten out the "hump."

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but they can not do it, of course.

 Mr. VANDENBERG. I should assume that it could be done in precisely the same fashion that it is done in similar scales in connection with other phases of the Government's business.

Mr. President, all I wanted to say was that I do not undertake particularly to approve the schedule which is submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have had no chance to give it any particular study. The figures which I gave to the Senator in respect to his table were made in a moment, but I am reasonably sure that they approximate the net result he has indicated. I think that if we come in the $90,000,000 bracket, or thereabouts, of total savings, we have gone as far as it is necessary to go even in the theory of those who are depending upon this particular contribution to complete the so-called balancing of the Budget. The best possible substantiation of that fact is that if the furlough plan were adopted—the plan which, I understand, continues to be preferred by the administration—it would not produce any larger saving than does the amendment submitted by the Senators from Massachusetts and New York.

Personally I continue to believe that the furlough plan is the preferable plan, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall hope ultimately for an opportunity to register that preference; but, pending the opportunity to substitute the furlough plan, I think the plan submitted by the Senators from Massachusetts and New York is infinitely preferable in justice and fair play to the committee amendment, and therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator tell us how much will be saved by the furlough plan?

Mr. VANDENBERG. My understanding is that the saving under the furlough plan runs between eighty and ninety million dollars.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly the same as under this amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should not be surprised if this amendment would save more than the furlough plan.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have the choice of voting for the committee amendment, which seeks to extract from all employees, regardless of the amount of salary paid, the sum represented by 10 per cent of the salary, and this amendment which we have offered, which imposes no tax on the $1,000 employee, and from $2,500 down to $1,000 is a material reduction from the amount proposed by the committee amendment.

The postal employees, for instance, from $2,000 to $2,500, under the committee amendment will be cut 10 per cent. Under our amendment they will be cut 7 per cent. From $1,500 to $2,000 the cut will be 6 per cent instead of 10, and from $1,000 to $1,500 it will be 5 per cent instead of 10. Then, when we get to $2,500, from $2,500 to $3,000 the cut is exactly the same as the committee proposes—10 per cent. When we get to $5,000, from that point upward there is a larger reduction than is proposed by the committee; and it was our feeling that it was a proper thing that there should be a larger reduction.

No one of us in the Senate is anxious to have his salary reduced. Under the committee amendment it would be reduced $1,000. Under the amendment which we have offered it will be reduced $1,500. I can not see how we can go home and face the Federal employees if we do not show our own willingness to go the very limit in the reduction; so I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Just one moment, and I will yield.

As to the furlough plan, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] will recall that the teachers in the District and all of the employees of the District are in this reduction plan. Of course, the teachers work 9 or 10 months a year, and the furlough would be utterly impracticable as | and his children in any respectability or decency; and it applied to them.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, as I understand, the proposal is to tax salaries beginning with $1,000, 5 per cent on whatever the salary may be, up to but not including $1,500. Mr. COPELAND. That is right.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, beginning with $1,500, up to $2,000, but not including $2,000, what per cent?

Mr. COPELAND. Six per cent.

Mr. BLAINE. And from $2,000 up to $2,500, but not including $2,500, 7 per cent?
Mr. COPELAND. That is right.

Mr. BLAINE. What does the Senator figure that the reduction of 7 per cent on the class beginning with $2,000 up to $2,500 would be?

Mr. COPELAND. About $40,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. I am quite sure the Senator's calculations are erroneous, because if we add the totals of each of those classes, roughly speaking, they are as follows:

From $2,000 to $2,100, $48,000,000.

The next is $242,000,000.

The next is $28,000,000.

The next is $57,000,000.

The next is $56,000,000.

That makes a total in round figures of $431,000,000, which at 7 per cent is $30,170,000. I do not believe I am incorrect in my addition and multiplication.

Mr. COPELAND. I went over the figures yesterday myself on the basis of 5 per cent for salaries from $2,000 to $2,500, and at that rate it made $30,000,000. We are proposing 7 per cent at that point now.

Mr. BLAINE. It is a very simple calculation to add the figures which I have mentioned, and that amounts to a certain aggregate, which is $431,000,000. In round numbers, 7 per cent of that is $30,170,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I can not carry the figures in mind; but yesterday, when we went over the figures from $2,000 to $2,500 at 5 per cent, it was found that the saving would be $30,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the Senator regard a 5 per cent reduction on a salary under $1,500 as rather a severe reduction?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BLAINE. That means $75 on $1,500.

Mr. COPELAND. I do. I regard all these reductions as very cruel. If I had my way, there would not be any. I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson]. I wish we did not have to make any reductions, but that seems to be the order of the day; and unless we offer some substitute for the plan proposed by the committee, we are going to have a straight 10 per cent cut. So, between the two evils, I am choosing the lesser, and am out of sympathy with both.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have no objection to making a reasonable reduction on salaries of $2,500 and upward on a graduated scale, letting the higher salaries bear the larger reduction; but it seems to me that it is very unjust to take 5 per cent from the salary of an employee who is receiving $1,400 a year. That is $70. That leaves that employee only $1,330. There is not any Member of the Senate who can figure out how a married man with a family is going to pay his rent and buy his fuel and the necessary food and clothing and the medical attendance that is essential with that amount of income. I am sure that there is not anyone in this Chamber who can honestly say that $1,330 will pay for those necessities of life here in the city of Washington, where rents, food, and clothing run high and have not been substantially reduced.

In the city of New York it is the same. It is the same in the city of Chicago, in the city of Milwaukee, in the city of Detroit, in the city of Cleveland-all of the large cities where the larger number of the Federal employees are employed. We are simply putting that man on a salary out of which he can not hope to maintain himself and his wife would be far better to wipe out entirely the provisions of law that provide for those salaries.

Mr. BORAH. But this is much better than the 10 per

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Exactly. It is a practical question. They are going to get 10 per cent reduction instead of 5 if we do not agree to something of this kind. That is the issue here now. Every other issue is gone.

Mr. BLAINE. Not if the Senate has the courage to vote

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The very people the Senator is pleading for are going to get a 10 per cent reduction if this amendment is defeated.

Mr. BLAINE. They might just as well get 10 per cent reduction as to get 5 per cent. There is not very much difference.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. There is some difference.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; there is a little difference. Mr. BORAH. There is 5 per cent difference.

Mr. BLAINE. We make their agony just a little bit less; that is all; but we will create a condition where they will have extreme distress.

I do not believe that any such reduction is justifiable. I am perfectly willing to vote for some reasonable reductions on the salaries of $2,500 or more, on a graduated scale, so that those who are receiving the highest salaries and are best able to bear the reduction will bear the larger portion of the reduction.

I also appreciate that there are certain classes of employees who receive twenty-four or twenty-five hundred dollars where there might be an entirely different classification in a rural community; but the number of those employees is so small that it is scarcely worth while to consider the proposition of reclassification. But on the general, broad principle, any reduction in such percentages as are suggested by this amendment on these low-paid employees is not justifiable; and I hope the Senate will have the courage to defeat the committee's amendment.

I should much prefer to accept the furlough plan, where there will be no reduction of salary; but there will be what has become commonly known as staggering the employment. That system would discourage private industries from demanding a straight cut on their employees. The Government would take the first step in establishing a less number of days per week, which is going to be necessary in this country if we are going to restore to employment our 8,000,000 men who are now out of employment.

So, Mr. President, I can not bring myself to the conviction that this amendment is just; but I shall vote for it as less obectionable and it will not incur as great hardships as does the committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say one thing, if the Senator will let me. He hit on a very important topic when he spoke about rents.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Capper] in the District of Columbia Committee the other day called the attention of the committee to the many complaints he has had relative to combines of agents and real-estate men in this town for the purpose of maintaining high rents; and the committee went on record unanimously as favoring presenting to the Attorney General the charge that there is such a combine, and also renewed its conviction that rentals are affected with a public interest, and that it may well be that the time has come when we will have to renew the rental commission which we had here. But if these employees working in the District of Columbia are reduced from 5 to 10 per cent or more in their salaries, certainly the rentals in this community will have to come down correspondingly; and it would not be decent if there were a refusal on the part of those in the ownership of real estate to effect these economies in rentals.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from New York respecting the rentals in the District of we have not created any rent commission to regulate rents in the District of Columbia. I have not any doubt but that there is power in the Congress to set up a regulatory body for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not believe, however, that we can apply the same rules to the city of New York or the city of Philadelphia or the city of Detroit or the city of Cleveland.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree to that.

Mr. BLAINE. There is an entirely different constitutional prohibition against what the State legislatures may do than we have respecting what the Congress may do respecting the seat of government.

I agree to that fully; but we have Mr. COPELAND. already demonstrated that we have the power in the District of Columbia when in 1919 we passed the act providing for the Rent Commission; and then in 1924 I served myself on a joint committee of the two Houses on the question of continuing that commission. There is not any doubt that so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, regardless of what might obtain in New York or Chicago, we have the right to enter upon a review of the rents charged.

Mr. BLAINE. There is not any question about the authority of Congress in that respect; but the Senator will appreciate that it will take more than a year before any such legislation can be put through the Congress, because of the objection to it or opposition to it outside of Congress, which is powerful enough to prevent the passage of legislation within the time that these reductions are to take place.

There is exactly the same situation in all the large cities. There are not very many Federal employees in the rural communities, and in those communities the cost of living is much reduced. They could much better bear a reduction of salary than those living in the large cities, where the greater portion of the Federal employees live. They could much better afford to bear a reduction than those living in the larger cities. I repeat, in rents, clothing, medicines, streetcar fare, fuel, electric service, and substantially all of the necessities of life there has been no material reduction in the larger cities of the country. So you are simply going to put the employees in those cities on salaries far below what will enable them to secure the necessities of life.

I do not believe Congress can afford to do that in these times. This is no time to encourage private industry to slash the salaries of workingmen. This is no time to reduce the purchasing power of these lower-salaried employees. That program is going in the face of the depression, and would have a tendency toward a deepening and broadening of the depression. I think it is shortsighted; I think it is unwise; and, as I argued here yesterday and to-day, there is no necessity for any such program so far as the balancing of the Budget is concerned. Under the present conditions, we may balance the Budget to-day and adjourn to-night and within 30 days we will have an unbalanced Budget. But the question of balancing the Budget is not material in the consideration of this proposition. That can only be a temporary affair. You should not engage in the perpetration of the injustices which are proposed against the low-salaried employees of the Federal Government.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this is a matter of a great deal of importance to many hundreds of thousands of people, and the public generally throughout have their sympathies either one way or the other. I have found throughout my years of experience in public life that we can estimate that 80 or 90 per cent of all of the American people believe in the administration of law and in the enactment of law in such terms that justice is accorded to those with whom we are dealing. I will say that from 10 to 20 per cent. depending more or less upon the issues involved, are actuated by selfish grounds or selfish motives.

Certainly we have before us a matter of a great deal of importance. I suggested when this subject first arose that I thought the better plan was one embracing a sliding scale,

Columbia is a matter that is very easy to talk about, but | or the graduated plan of reduction, advocating that policy because it has been the policy that has largely guided both branches of Congress in other legislation for the purpose of raising revenue for the support of the Government.

It has been made plain—and I think every Member of the Senate fully appreciates the fact—that a person who is getting a salary of only six or seven hundred to a thousand dollars a year has not sufficient remuneration to justify the Government, however distressed may be the situation, in taking from him part of the compensation which he is to-day given under the law.

The amendment pending does not impose a tax upon salaries, as I understand, of less than a thousand dollars. I feel that it must be the sentiment of every Senator that people drawing salaries of such small amounts are not in position, if they are to continue to exist with any of the ordinary comforts, to have any of their salary taken.

The amendment meets with my approbation. Then, when we start from that amount and climb on in the different brackets, the amount of reduction in percentages increases, which I believe to be the proper policy. After we get beyond the amount a person requires for the ordinary necessities of life, then, whatever he receives in the way of salary or in the way of income from capital invested is a surplus which he can use for demands upon him or for luxuries, and that part of his income can stand a greater proportion of taxation than the sum of money which is necessary for sustaining life in the ordinary living conditions. I heartily approve of the graduated plan.

There are two roads, either of which we may travel. We can travel the road which imposes a flat 10 per cent reduction upon all salaries, upon the humble worker who receives only five or six hundred dollars a year just the same as we impose it upon the person receiving a salary of $8,000 or. $10,000 a year, or perhaps more. We must either adopt that course or we must adopt the graduated plan which has been proposed by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Federal employees are helpless; they have no voice upon the Senate floor; they have to accept whatever is inflicted upon them, whether it is justice or injustice; but I do not think it is quite consistent to impose upon people who are not able to pay and whose salaries are not sufficient to pay the same percentage of reduction imposed upon the higher-salaried brackets, where the salary is sufficient to stand a greater assessment and reduction. So I must prefer the plan proposed by the Senators, and we have only the two propositions confronting us.

I believe those who favor the idea of some adjustment, trying to raise the burden from the shoulders of those who can not stand it, and those who believe that the highersalaried official should pay more than the lower-salaried person, should support this amendment, and I am going to support it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to another thing in favor of this amendment, a very decided factor, that it reduces our own salaries more than those of anyone else?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I look upon Government employees as so many American citizens. Their rights are just as sacred as those of others, and they are entitled to the same consideration any other American citizen receives.

I never have mentioned the question of a Senator's salary heretofore; I have avoided it; but it has been mentioned a number of times yesterday and to-day. I do not care to go back to my State and make the plea that I have been doing all I can for Government economy, reducing expenses, and have some one back in the audience say, "You voted, didn't you, to strike $100 off the salary of a man who got only $1,200 a year, or 10 per cent?" I would say, "Yes." He would say, "Did you not also vote to strike only 10 per cent from the salary of a man who received $8,000 a year or a salary of $10,000 a year? It is true that you saved a very large sum of money for the Government, but where did you make the saving? Did you save it at the expense of the poor employees making salaries of six or eight hundred or a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a year, or at the expense of those who were more fortunate, enjoying big salaries of from five to ten thousand dollars a year?"

As far as the question of public sentiment is concerned, I think a person has to confront upon this question not only the employee, but when he begins to make his claims and his contentions about what a great service he has rendered to his Government, the average citizen will want to know how he effected that saving, how he brought about this great amount of saving, and when we tell him we took a major portion of it from the people who receive salaries of, we will say, from five hundred to fifteen hundred dollars a year, I do not think at first we are going to impress him that we are doing exact justice to that class of employees.

I think the amendment proposed by the Senators from New York and Massachusetts is preferable to a flat cut, and I am going to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Couzens in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland].

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating my previous statement respecting my pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend]. I am informed, however, that if that Senator were present, he would vote as I intend to vote, and I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], and vote "nay."

I wish at this time to announce that if the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] were present he would also vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. I understand that if that Senator were present he would vote "nay." Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], and in his absence I withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is absent from the city. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] are paired. If permitted to vote, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay" and the Senator from Idaho would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the following special pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcort] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes].

Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. KING, and Mr. WALCOTT would vote "nay," and Mr. DILL, Mr. BROOKHART, and Mr. HAWES would vote "yea," if present and not paired.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 39, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. Walsh of Massachusetts to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, earlier in the day I was granted unanimous consent to present an amendment which was ordered to be printed and lie upon the table. In view of the disposition made of the other amendments which have been proposed, and in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska during the colloquy that followed the presentation of my amendment, I now ask formally to offer my amendment so that it may be pending whenever we resume the consideration of the measure, my understanding being that several Senators who had wanted to study my amendment and vote upon it have left the Chamber for reasons which were wholly beyond their control.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not withdraw that part of his request to have the amendment printed and lie on the table, will he?

Mr. MOSES. No; but I want to offer it formally now, so that it may be pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that, but I should like to have a printed copy of it.

Mr. MOSES. I may state further to the Senator from Nebraska, unanimous consent having already been granted for taking up the conference report on the tax bill at 12 o'clock on Monday, that will consume some time, I assume, which will enable Senators who want to study my amendment to do so; and if the Senator from Washington, who is in charge of the bill, will accept the suggestion which I am about to make that may readily be done. I formally offer my amendment now, Mr. President, in order that it may be pending, and I suggest to the Senator from Washington that the Senate recess until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Oklahoma has an amendment which he desires to

I recall the ruling of the Chair this morning, individual amendments would have precedence over the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, which, as I understand, is a substitute.

Mr. MOSES. No; mine is an individual amendment, just as is that of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES. I understand that the Senator's amendment is practically a substitute.

Mr. MOSES. Yes. Mr. JONES. And so I think that if there are further perfecting amendments they should be disposed of first.

Mr. MOSES. That is quite in order.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Mr. MOSES. I thought the perfecting amendments had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not correct. Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES. I supposed the Senator from Oklahoma had one; I do not know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I not make another unanimous-consent request which, if agreed to, will assist in solving the problem? In addition to having my amendment printed and lying on the table, I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD and then Senators will get it to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

The amendment offered by Mr. Moses is as follows:

Strike out Title I of Part II, beginning on page 44, line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I-FURLOUGH OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

"FURLOUGH PROVISIONS

"Sec. 101. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933:

"(a) The days of work of a per diem officer or employee receiving compensation at a rate which is equivalent to more than \$1,200 per annum shall not exceed 5 in any one week, and the compensation for 5 days shall be ten-elevenths of that payable for a week's work of $5\frac{1}{2}$ days: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as modifying the method of fixing contained shall be construed as modifying the method of fixing the daily rate of compensation of per diem officers or employees as now authorized by law: Provided further, That where the nature of the duties of a per diem officer or employee render it advisable the provisions of subsection (b) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection.

"(b) Each officer or employee receiving compensation on an annual basis at the rate of more than $1,200 per annum shall be furloughed without compensation for 1 calendar month, or for such periods as shall in the aggregate be equivalent to 1 calendar month, for which latter purpose 24 working days (counting Saturday as one-half day) shall be considered as the equivalent of 1 calendar month: Provided, That where the nature of the duties of any such officer or employee render it advisable, the provisions of subsection (a) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection.

In the case of a corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, the holders of the stock on behalf of the United States, or such persons as represent the interest of the United States in such corporation, shall take such action as may be necessary to apply the provisions of sections 101, 102, and 103 to offices, positions, and employments under such corporation and to officers and employees thereof.

"REMITTANCES FROM CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICERS

"SEC. 110. In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person, and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

"APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

"SEC. 111. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any purpose other than the payment of salaries, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"LIMITATION ON JURISDICTION OF COURTS

"SEC. 112. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application of any provision of this title unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that the record may be kept clear, I propound this parliamentary inquiry: What is the pending question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the amendment of the committee, on page 45, beginning in line 6.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As I understand, that amendment proposes a flat reduction in salaries of 10 per cent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment for two reasons: The first reason is that it taxes the salaries of the Federal employees in the lower brackets too much; and the second reason is that it does not tax those in the higher brackets enough. Having that conviction, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45 it is proposed to strike out the last word in line 10 and all of line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

As follows: Compensation to sum of $1,200 shall be exempt from reduction; compensation on that portion above $1,200 to $2,000 shall be reduced by 5 per cent; compensation on that portion above $2,000 to $3,000 shall be reduced by 10 per cent; compensation on that portion above $3,000 to $5,000 shall be reduced by 15 per cent; compensation above $5,000 to $10,000 shall be reduced by 20 per cent; and compensation above $10,000 shall be reduced 25 per cent of the amount thereof.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just a few words in explanation of the amendment. If this amendment should be adopted any employee of the Government who receives a salary not exceeding $1,200 would suffer no reduction whatever; any employee who receives a salary in excess of $1,200, but not in excess of $2,000 would suffer a reduction of 5 per cent on that portion above $1,200, so that if he should receive a salary of $2,000 he would contribute $40. On salaries from $2,000 to $3,000 the reduction would be 10 per cent on the $1,000 above $2,000 or any part thereof; so that any employee receiving a salary of $3,000 under this amendment would contribute $140.

The reduction on salaries between $3,000 and $5,000 as provided in the amendment is 15 per cent on any portion thereof, so that an employee receiving a salary of $5,000 would pay a total of $440. The reduction on that portion of the salary in excess of $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000 would be 15 per cent, so that on a salary of $10,000 per year the total tax would be $1,440. On salaries in excess of $10,000 the tax proposed would be 25 per cent. I submit the amendment and ask for a roll call.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he takes into consideration the amount of the income taxes which will be paid by those in the higher brackets receiving above $2,000?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have not had the opportunity to submit the amendment to experts, and I have not the figures. I have prepared the amendment entirely from the standpoint of the human element in this controversy; and if this amendment should be adopted, or if any similar amendment should be adopted, I propose to offer an amendment directing the Appropriations Committee to leave out of the appropriation bills, all items for construction such as public buildings, Army housing, flood control, river and harbor improvements, and set those over into the unemployment relief bill that will come along later, and finance that portion of our appropriations by a bond issue. Such a policy will relieve us of the necessity of raising some $300,000,000 in taxes this year.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator has answered my question. I asked whether he had figured on the amount of income taxes that would be paid by the employees receiving salaries in the higher brackets.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I regret that I have not the information requested by the Senator from New Jersey.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I am ready to vote, but I should like to ask a question or two. May I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma, has he estimated the amount of revenue to be derived, assuming the adoption of his amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no facilities for making that computation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Is the Senator able to tell us how many employees of the Government would be affected, meaning those receiving the lowest amount named in the proposed amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The great mass of Federal employees would not be affected materially; thousands of them would not be affected at all. The limited few receiving the higher salaries would pay a substantial tax, but such would not run into a great amount of money.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And all those receiving less than $1,200 a year are exempted?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They will suffer no reduction in salary whatever under the proposed amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follettel. I am not informed as to how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as on previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement as to my pair made on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Referring to my previous announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). Upon this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. I understand that if present he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called), Making the same announcement as before with reference to my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Wagner] is detained from the Senate. If he were present and permitted to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] are paired. The Senator from Mississippi if present would vote "nay" and the Senator from Idaho if present would vote "yea."

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FRAZIER (after having voted in the affirmative). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Brookhart

Florida [Mr. Fletcher], and will therefore withdraw my vote. I understand that the Senator from Florida, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following pairs: The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. King] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 40, as follows:

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "by" and all of line 10 and to insert:

(1) Rates less than $5,000, by 10 per cent; (2) rates of $5,000 or more but less than $5,000, by 15 per cent; (3) rates of $8,000 but less than $10,000, by 20 per cent; and (4) rates of $10,000 or more, 25 per cent: Provided, That the application of these reductions shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation below that of the next lower salary rate in the same service, to which no reduction applies or to which no reduction applies. percentage of reduction applies or to which no reduction applies.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, most of the conflict has been between those who want an exemption and a graduated rate, on the one side, and the committee, which insists on no exemption. This amendment ought to satisfy both groups. It provides for no exemption whatever, but graduates the rates as follows: Up to $5,000, 10 per cent; from $5,000 to $8,000, 15 per cent; from $8,000 to $10,000, 20 per cent; and $10,000 and over, 25 per cent.

This will secure greater savings than any proposition pending before the Senate; and those who believe in the graduated rates have an opportunity now of demonstrating their zeal and sincerity. On the other hand, those who do not believe in any exemption whatever also have an opportunity of showing their devotion to that principle, because this makes no exemption whatever.

I believe that in this time there should be no exemption; and I have voted consistently with the committee against all amendments seeking to exempt anyone's salary from a cut. This is a time when everybody ought to be willing to make some sacrifice, as the people over the country have been forced to do by the exigencies of conditions and the irrevocable constitution of ecenomics. On the other hand, those who are more able to bear the cut will take cuts at a graduated rate.

This amendment would operate to reduce our own salaries to the level which was in effect before the war and was in effect until the salary was raised some years ago. It operates for only one year; and I commend it to Senators for their favorable consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated? There was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not hear the amendment when it was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 45, line 10, strike out the word "by" and line 11 and insert:

(1) Rates less than $5,000, by 10 per cent; (2) rates of $5,000 or more but less than $8,000, by 15 per cent; (3) rates of $8,000 but less than $10,000, by 20 per cent; and (4) rates of $10,000 or more, 25 per cent: Provided, That the application of these reductions shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation below that of the next lower salary rate in the same service to which have the reconstruction applies or to which no reduction a lower percentage of reduction applies or to which no reduction

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee

Mr. ASHURST. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand seconded? Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in view of the fact that sufficient Senators have not seconded the demand for the yeas and nays-

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a minute; the Chair has not so announced.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senate refuses to permit a yeaand-nay vote, so that each Senator can go on record as to how he stands on this question, I wish it understood before the vote is taken that I am voting for the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair on this bill with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. I am not informed as to how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Respecting my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair that I made on the last roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Referring to my former announcement, I vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). I have a pair on this question with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Understanding that he would vote "nay" were he present, I am free to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Again announcing my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH. On this subject I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. If he were presBarbour ent, he would vote "nay," and if I were at liberty to vote I my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi should vote "yea." I withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long]:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]; and

So Mr. Connally's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, as follows:

Provided, That on all salaries of $2,000 or less the reduction shall be 5 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this matter I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas]. I find that I can transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. Walsh]. I do so, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATFIELD. Respecting my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent, and withhold my vote.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following pairs: The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. King]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes].

So Mr. Norris's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it seems to me there is one amendment which the Senate should be willing to inject into this tax, in perfecting it, before we proceed to the ultimate alternative of the furlough plan. There is one amendment which can be injected which involves comparatively little revenue, and yet involves a large number of employees in the final, lowest brackets.

If in line 11, page 45, there were added the words "except that no compensation shall be reduced below $1,200," the cost would be only $8,000,000, and it would still leave $113,-000,000 in the bill. It certainly can not be said that we have avoided the ultimate sum total of our obligation if in this relatively minor respect we at least acknowledge the humanities in insisting that these reductions shall not proceed below $1,200.

I therefore move, on page 45, line 11, to add after the word "thereof," the language:

Except that no compensation shall be reduced below $1,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the | posal of a straight 10 per cent cut all along the line and the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG | to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I think it has become perfectly obvious that it will be impossible to dispose of this bill to-day; the number of controversial subjects in the bill is so large, and will involve so considerable a debate, especially those provisions relating to the veterans. I therefore suggest that we pass over the consideration of salary reductions until we have an opportunity, by Monday, to study the plan submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the substitute proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is different from what I thought it was. It is a substitute for Title I of part 2 and takes in the whole title. We can vote on this, if we are ready, and after a few other amendments have been made to it I will be perfectly willing to allow his substitute to be proposed and to be pending on

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, by courtesy of the Senator from Wisconsin, the pending committee amendment contains the crux of the entire controversy. While it is true that the amendment which I have proposed is a substitute for the entire Title I in part 2, the textual changes, as differing from those made by the committee in connection with the House text, are not especially at variance.

I think a much more logical method of proceeding would be to permit my amendment to come up while we are still considering the committee amendment on page 45, because then we go to the heart of the entire controversy, which is a question of policy.

I know that I am impeded by a unanimous-consent agreement already entered into that the committee amendments must be disposed of first. If I have to abide by that literally. I can not present my amendment until the whole bill has been traversed. I must ask unanimous consent at some time. If the Senator from Washington maintains his present attitude of resistance, I will have to ask unanimous consent, when we have finished with the committee amendments to Title I of part 2, to present my amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, myself, that we go through Title I, and then I will be perfectly willing to allow the Senator's substitute to be taken up and voted on as to that title. That is what it affects. I am perfectly willing to do that. But, of course, we would have to vote on the pending amendment before voting on the Senator's substitute, the way it is framed. It is a substitute for the whole title, and, under our rules, the title must be perfected first.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator means under the unanimousconsent agreement.

Mr. JONES. No; under the rules of the Senate that title will have to be perfected before the Senator's amendment in the nature of a substitute would be in order.

Mr. MOSES. I am not clear about that. I am clear that under the unanimous-consent agreement to take all the committee amendments first, we will have to traverse the whole bill before I can offer my amendment.

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing myself to agree upon the proposition that when we conclude the consideration of the amendments we have proposed to Title I. the Senator's substitute may be taken up and acted on.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator, I take it, is therefore unwilling to grant unanimous consent that my amendment shall now be formally proposed and pending?

Mr. JONES. Before the Senate can vote on that we will have to vote on the pending amendment, and I propose that Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am attempting to raise the issue directly, nakedly, even, as between the committee pro-furlough system; and the Senator knows, not only as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senator in charge of the bill, but he knows also as the chairman of the special subcommittee that dealt with the subject that that is the crux of the whole subject.

Mr. JONES. I know, but the Senator's substitute does not put us in that position.

Mr. MOSES. Absolutely. Mr. JONES. The Senator's substitute is a substitute for the whole title.

Mr. MOSES. Certainly, because the whole title is based upon the 10 per cent reductions, so far as the committee amendment is concerned, and the whole title is based on the furlough system, so far as my amendment is concerned.

Mr. JONES. Let us perfect the title, and then I will be perfectly willing to have the Senator's substitute taken up. But unless the Senator puts it that way, we must act upon the committee amendments to the text before we act upon the Senator's substitute. That is the common rule. That is all I would like to do to-night.

Mr. MOSES. I realize my hopelessness and helplessness in the situation.

Mr. JONES. Let us vote on the text of Part I.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, permit me to make an appeal to the Senator from Washington, on the basis of the fact that the passage of this bill will be expedited if the Senate is permitted to vote upon the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am sure that is true.

Mr. JONES. That is what I want to arrange for.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senate has been in session every day this week, during some of the days working long into the night, as I recall, once as late as 1 or 1.30 o'clock in the morning, until many of the Senators are literally going on their nerves. There are many controversial subjects in this bill, and unless we can take a recess, or in some way mollify or assuage that which exists, I think, within every Senator here this afternoon, we are simply going to get into an irritable state and a protracted discussion of the bill, and accomplish little. I think, in the interest of expedition, and in the interest of intelligent consideration of the bill, and, as well, in the interest of deliberate judgment in coming to our conclusions, if the Senate will recess at 4 o'clock until next Monday, we will then be in much better shape to expedite the passage of this bill, and I want to expedite the passage of the bill and take a final vote on it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that we have been voting on amendments to this one committee amendment. Apparently we have voted on all the amendments that Senators desire to offer. I want to expedite the consideration of the bill. Why can we not take our vote on the pending amendment, and the other amendments to Title I probably will not take 10 minutes to dispose of; then the Senator from New Hampshire may offer his substitute, and I am perfectly willing that he shall not be forced to wait until we get entirely through the bill, but I am willing that he shall offer his substitute for Title I as soon as we get through with this amendment, and allow that to be pending on Monday. I think we can close it up in 10 minutes.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I have a feeling that if the committee amendment on page 45 is agreed to, just to that extent my amendment is going to be foreclosed from consideration, because many Senators will feel that the matter has been disposed of, and that I can not raise the direct issue between the 10 per cent cut and the furlough system, as I could raise it if I were permitted to offer my amendment now.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator had offered his amendment as a substitute for, say, the paragraph we are considering, without including all of that title, it would have been

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I could not do that, as the Senator will discover when he studies the text of my amendment, because my amendment applies to all the other pro-

Mr. JONES. That is true, not to this one provision. The Senator is not satisfied with that. He has several other

Mr. MOSES. The Senator quite misinterprets what I say. I am not satisfied with the 10 per cent cut; that is true.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. Mr. MOSES. But, in addition to that, the committee having framed this title upon the 10 per cent cut, I had to frame my amendment in the same method and go through the whole title, in order to make it all conform to the furlough system.

Mr. JONES. That is what I say.
Mr. MOSES. There are 12 sections in this title, and the Senator asks me to make 12 bites at the cherry.

Mr. JONES. No; I do not ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. MOSES. That is what it comes to.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator does insist on including all those things in his substitute, I say that we must have the text of the title perfected before the substitute will be in order. We have a right to vote on the pending amendment, just as we have been voting on every other amendment.

Mr. MOSES. Certainly; but the Senator is wholly dogmatic in what he is saying.

Mr. JONES. I am sure the Senator as a parliamentarian will agree with me in the stand I take.

Mr. MOSES. From a strictly parliamentary point of view. I do agree; but I say that the Senator is taking a position of extreme resistance, dogmatically, in connection with the matter. He knows it requires unanimous consent to do what I want, and I can not get that consent.

Mr. ASHURST. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I make the point of order that the rules of the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, will require us to perfect the text. All other Senators who offered amendments could not have the advantage sought by my learned friend from New Hampshire. They had to take their chances. He must take his chance, as they did. The unanimous-consent agreement requires us to perfect the text.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A parliamentary question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is a motion to recess a privileged motion?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, as soon as I can get the complete text of my amendment, I will see if it is possible for me to offer a portion of it as a substitute for the section on page 45, and if so, we can raise the question immediately.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, we already have a unanimousconsent agreement for a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We have a unanimous-consent agreement to recess, at the conclusion of business today, until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I was not aware that a unanimousconsent agreement had been entered into to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday. Therefore I change my motion, and move that the Senate now take a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. JONES. I hope that will be voted down.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). In view of my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). Announcing once more my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Conen]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the following pairs: The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes]; and Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I submit a short amendment and ask unanimous consent that it may be reported for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from West Virginia proposes to strike out all of sections 101 and 102 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation of the Members of the House and Senate and all other Federal employees whose salaries are $10,000 a year or more is hereby reduced 15 per cent of the amount thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. NEELY. I ask to have it printed and lie on the table. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at the place designated by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], I offer this amendment:

Provided, however, That no salary shall be reduced to less than

That would take only about $2,000,000 from the amount estimated to be saved, and it would keep intact the pay of those who are the lowest paid in the entire Government service. It would mean that only $2,000,000 of the contemplated saving would be lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] The aves seem to have it. The aves have it, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has announced the vote

Mr. ASHURST. I move for a reconsideration of the vote. The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Maryland to state his amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at the same place as that designated by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Van-DENBERG] for his amendment, I propose to add the words, "Provided, That no reduction shall reduce any salary below $1,000."

That would mean that only $2,000,000 of the contemplated savings would be lost, and it seems to me that if we are to be actuated by the humanities, at least we should make this small concession, without destroying either the spirit or the letter or the essence of the committee amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The meaning of that amendment probably would be that any Government employee now drawing less than a thousand dollars would have his pay reduced 10 per cent; but any employee who gets a little more than a thousand dollars would not have his reduced if it brought him down below a thousand.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator misunderstood me. I said that "no reduction shall be made upon any salary of less than a thousand dollars."

Mr. BARKLEY. The way the Senator stated it there would be no reduction in a salary less than a thousand

Mr. TYDINGS. I read it correctly the first time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator tell us where he gets the figures to justify his statement?

Mr. TYDINGS. I introduced the figures from the record furnished by the Bureau of the Budget that the total salaries of persons drawing $1,000 a year or less were about $43,000,000. Therefore the contemplated saving by a 10 per cent reduction would be about $4,000,000. A lot of them are not getting a thousand dollars. So, suggesting a round figure, I thought that it would be somewhere between two and three million dollars. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. I am not able to follow the Senator in his figures. I was simply trying to learn from what source he got the information. My information is that it would cause a greater loss in the total amount.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest to the Senator that probably the language I am about to suggest would be better than that proposed, namely, "Government employees receiving less than $1,000 shall suffer no reduction "? That is what the Senator means, I think.

Mr. TYDINGS. I accept that interpretation or wording in lieu of that which I sent to the desk. That is what I thought I said at first.

Mr. JONES. I know that is what the Senator meant.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield. I am trying to get it fixed in my mind how many employees this affects. There seems to be a dispute as to whether there are 4,000,000 or 43,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. The employees receiving salaries of a thousand dollars a year or less draw $43,000,000 in Federal pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, $43,000,000. Mr. TYDINGS. So that if there were a 10 per cent reduction in those salaries the saving would be $4,300,000. There are a number of employees who do not get a thousand dollars a year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that include also the fourth-class postmasters, whose compensation is regulated by commissions and many of whom, in fact, probably most of whom, draw less than a thousand dollars a year?

Mr. TYDINGS. It applies to everybody in the Government service who draws a salary of less than a thousand dollars a year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then, in all probability, a large proportion of the employees who draw less than a thousand dollars may be fourth-class postmasters. I can not understand how there could be such an enormous list of employees drawing less than a thousand dollars a year so as to make up the total of $43,000,000 unless it did include fourth-class postmasters.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I just want to say to the Senator that, according to the experts, the amount of salary reduction for the group under a thousand dollars would be $3,910,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is about right. In other words, at the most it would be under $4,000,000.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). In view of my general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Because of my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it. Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If a Senator votes in the affirmative, in this instance, on the committee amendment, he votes to reduce the pay of all Federal employees regardless of the amount of salary or wages received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except as to those receiving below $1,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Excepting the limitation provided by the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, which has just been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That means that if there are some of us who are opposed to reducing the pay of Federal employees in the lower brackets, but are perfectly willing to reduce our own salaries and those in the higher brackets, in order to register our protest we must vote "nay" against the entire amendment. With that understanding, I shall certainly vote "nay."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

I want to suggest that the language of the latter part of the amendment as read by the clerk is not that which was agreed to a while ago. I ask that the clerk read it. As he has read it it does not express, I think, what the Senator from Maryland wanted or what we really agreed I refer to the latter part of it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Except that no compensation shall be reduced below $1,000.

Mr. JONES. That is not correct. It should read "except that no compensation less than $1,000 shall be reduced."

Mr. MOSES. Oh, no.
Mr. JONES. Yes; that is correct.
Mr. BARKLEY. "That no compensation of a thousand dollars or less shall be reduced."

Mr. JONES. The thousand-dollar salary was not included. but it should read, "except that no compensation less than $1,000 shall be reduced."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the way in which the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES. That was the amendment suggested, and I want it worded that way in order to express the idea agreed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended, on which the Senator from Wisconsin has demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. I am not informed as to how he would vote. I am informed, however, that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], and doing that I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." As I intend to vote in the affirmative, I feel free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). Repeating my last announcement as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). Because of my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Referring to my former announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). Announcing again my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], and not knowing how he would vote were he present, I must withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore as to my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Cohen], I withhold my vote.

Mr. WHEELER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]. I am not informed as to how he would vote. I transfer that pair to my colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Cohen], who is absent, is paired upon this question. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 45, line 11, after the word "thereof," the Senator from North Dakota proposes to add the following:

Provided, That any reduction in the compensation of any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is adjustable to conform to the prevailing rates of pay in private employment for similar classes of work shall not exceed the reduction in the total compensation of other employees of equivalent compensation covered by this section.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement that the amendments of the committee should be considered first, I hardly think that amendment is in order just now. We have adopted the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that that amendment is not in order at the present time.

Mr. NYE. Do I understand that this amendment will not be in order?

Mr. JONES. We have just voted on the committee amendment. We have adopted it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is too late.

The committee amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. NYE. I understood that the vote just recorded was upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is in error. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland was adopted before the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES. The Senator's amendment will be in order when the time comes.

Mr. NYE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 11, to strike out:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Walcott] with the enator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes]; and working days, or the number of working days on the basis of which such compensation is calculated, whichever is the greater.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have on the desk an amendment relating to this matter. It is to include the police and firemen of the District. May I ask whether it is to be found on the desk? I am very sorry to detain the Senate a moment; but the amendment has been printed.

On line 17, page 46, I move that there be inserted:

Excepting the Metropolitan police department and the fire department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, where does the Senator offer that amendment? It might go in as a separate amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it properly belongs on line 17; and let me say why I am doing this.

It was strongly impressed upon the committee that the enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy should be exempt from the cut, and in my opinion the same argument holds with reference to the policemen and firemen of the District. It may well happen that they might be called upon in exactly the same way as the Army and Navy: and I am strongly of the belief that they should be exempt from the operation of the cut.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, can not a policeman or a fireman in the District of Columbia resign?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; he can resign.

Mr. GLASS. An enlisted man in the Army or the Navy can not resign. That was the argument presented to us, and the one that impressed me.

Mr. COPELAND. -Mr. President, there are some phases of this subject that I really hate to discuss on the floor; and yet at the same time I think that if Senators will pause for a moment, they will see that in case of rioting, in case of disturbance, in case there should come in here fifteen or twenty thousand persons, forming a petition in boots, there should be no question that the members of the police and fire departments should be on the job. I have no reason to question that they would be. I think the same thing would be true of the enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy; but if we make an exemption in regard to them I think the same exemption should be made with regard to the men who in this community represent the same function, the protection of public safety.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I suggest to my colleague that the policemen and firemen in the District of Columbia are not technically Federal employees? I do not think the reduction applies to them anyway.

Mr. COPELAND. As a matter of fact, the bill is worded so as to include the employees of the District of Columbia. I thought myself that it ought not to include them.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a moment?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I gave notice of intention to move | an amendment to achieve the same result as the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. I propose to insert on page 46, after line 17, the following:

The members of the Metropolitan police force and the fire department of the District of Columbia, or-

For reasons which I think must be manifest, I fully agree with the thoughts of the Senator from New York; and I submit to brother Senators that the members of the fire department and the police department of this District should be put, as it were, on the same level or in the same status as the active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine

Mr. JONES. They can quit whenever they want to, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from California. Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will not enlarge upon my own views. If the matter is going to be debated, I will take some little time of the Senate; but I hoped the proposed amendment of the Senator from New York would not require

Mr. COPELAND. I hoped the Senator in charge of the bill would accept the amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I hoped he would, as a matter of course. It is indifferent to me whether the amendment bears the name of the Senator from New York or mine; it is the end that I have in view.

Mr. COPELAND. I share the generous sentiment of the Senator from California. I will yield to him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I thank the Senator, I will speak later.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I only want to say this: There is absolutely no justification for the exemption of the officers suggested in the amendment of the Senator from New York. The reason for the exemption of the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps was, as has been heretofore suggested, that when a man enlists in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps, he enlists for a term of years. If there is a reduction of salary, he can not resign. If he leaves, he is court-martialed; he is a deserter; and therefore this reduction should not apply to

A man who is a fireman or a policeman here in the District of Columbia, if he is not willing to continue in the employ of the District of Columbia government with the reduction of 10 per cent, can resign at any moment he wants to; and if they should in a body give notice that they would resign, and the newspapers carried it to-morrow morning with the announcement that their places could be filled from the country, the march on Washington on Monday and Tuesday would exceed anything known in the history of the city of Washington. They would come from all corners.

There is no excuse for our planning an exemption of this kind. In charge of all public buildings there are guards. Shall they be exempted? Why should not they be granted the same exemption that is suggested in this amendment of the Senator from New York? It could be extended to an unlimited number of employees. I hope the Senate will not agree to it, but will stand by the amendment which is in the bill, exempting only the enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the committee proposed that the active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps be exempted from this reduction. It is not my immediate purpose to pay eulogy or tribute to the members of the police department or to the members of the fire department of this District. That they are brave, that they are vigilant, that they are fearless and faithful in the discharge of their several duties, must be cheerfully admitted by us all. They are the District's first line of defense.

It is quite true that they have the privilege of resigningthat is, of course, manifestly so-but who shall say that they are now overpaid? Fully 82 per cent of them receive $2,400 or less annually. Who shall say that they are unfaithful to their duty? Who shall say that they are not ready at any better elsewhere, they are perfectly free to do it.

moment, by day or night, to respond to the call of distress, to obey the call of duty?

It is a manifest fact that while in a sense they are limited in hours, they repeatedly labor in the discharge of duty far beyond the prescribed hours of duty. By night, by day, when you and I and our wives and children are asleep, they are on guard to protect the lives and the property of the citizens of this District, even as members of the Army and the Navy are on the alert to perform their duty and to protect the property and lives of our people.

It is not out of any desire to curry favor with them, nor to indulge in words of eulogy, that I urge that this amendment be adopted. From their peculiar position and duty as policemen, risking their lives, as firemen, imperiling their lives, they are entitled to the most sympathetic consideration of the Senate.

With great respect for the committee and the views that have been expressed to the contrary of mine, I submit to the Senate that there should be no reduction in the salaries of the policemen or the firemen of this District.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I simply want to say to the Senator that the committee had the same opinion of the policemen and the firemen of the District that he has expressed.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have no doubt they had.

Mr. BYRNES. They would have joined in eulogizing their service. They agree that they are fearless, brave, and everything else the Senator has suggested. This bill does not seek to change their salaries, however; and the committee thought there was no reason why the policemen and firemen should be exempted, any more than the enlisted men of the Coast Guard or thousands of other employees, fearless and faithful, just as the firemen and the policemen are, who in this emergency are asked to accept 10 per cent less for this one year. It does not mean that we have any opinion that the policemen or firemen are overpaid, or that they are not faithfully performing their duties.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask my colleague under what category he would put the policemen and firemen as Federal employees? How do they come in the category of Federal employees?

Mr. BYRNES. Under the language of the bill they are included.

Mr. SMITH. I know they are included, but by virtue of what? We do not fix their salaries. We do not employ them. It is not done by an act of Congress, except perhaps by our participation in the lump-sum appropriation for running the District.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to my colleague that we do fix their salaries, and that is why they are in the bill. Congress fixes their salaries.

Mr. SMITH. Congress does fix their salaries, rather than the District Commissioners?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; their salaries are fixed by the Con-

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I vield.

Mr. BRATTON. The committee took this fact into consideration also. This bill was written behind closed doors. No one affected was given an opportunity to be heard. Every other class with which we dealt has the opportunity of resigning if its members feel that they can do better elsewhere; but not so with the enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. Unless this exemption applies to them, the result will be that without any opportunity to be heard, without any opportunity to protest, we cut their compensation, and they are denied the opportunity to quit and undertake to improve their condition elsewhere.

The policemen are not in that class. They have no period of enlistment compulsory in character; and although the cuts are harsh and will not be welcomed by a great many, if they feel that they are too harsh and that they can do

It occurred to us that the cut of 10 per cent upon the class not free to go into other channels and do better was against our concept of fairness. So we said that, as to the men occupying this peculiar position, we would not impose upon them in this manner. In that respect I do believe that the policemen are not in the same class. They are just as free to leave as are policemen in New York or Chicago or any place else.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. So is a Senator at liberty to resign. Mr. BRATTON. Yes; if any of us want to resign as a result of the cuts we have voted to-day we are free to do so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And, of course, there will be a great exodus. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRATTON. I do not look to see any resignations announced in the papers.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I suggest to my colleague that even had the enlisted men the right to resign, and there should be such an exodus of enlisted men as the Senator from California assumed there may be in the Senate, it is very doubtful whether the Government could fill their places.

Mr. BRATTON. Quite so.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In respect to the thought just expressed by the Senator from New Mexico, to restate my view. Take, for example, a given policeman who entered the service when he was a comparatively young man. He has devoted many years to that service, he has been faithful to duty, he has grown old, he has a family, a wife and children.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is not that equally true with reference to these other employees?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Of course it is. It is true as to all in the public service.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not conceive for the life of me why any preference should be given to policemen or firemen. They are not doing any more than any of the others are doing. Some of the others have grown old in the service, at very much less pay than policemen and firemen receive.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am seeking to impress upon the minds of Senators the type of service which has been rendered and is being rendered and must be rendered by the police, and likewise the type of service that has been rendered and is being rendered and must be rendered by members of the fire department, hazardous service.

I do not wish to draw pictures of possibilities, but it is quite conceivable that policemen and firemen may risk their lives to-night, to-morrow. They have done so in the past. They may do so to-night or to-morrow, and I am insisting, first, that the salaries now are moderate, not excessive; second, that they are paid to men who have spent many years in the service; third, that the service necessarily is attended with exceptional danger; and, finally, that this service is so essential to public safety, to the lives and the property of citizens, that we should not reduce their salaries. Nor is it any answer to say they have the privilege of resigning. I would not invite the resignation of an old and faithful policeman or of an old and faithful fireman. We need their service, and we should not reduce their salaries. I repeat, it is no answer to say they have the privilege of resigning.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator could add this, that it is a highly specialized service.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Not every man is qualified to be a policeman or a fireman. To be on one of those forces a man has to have, in the first place, a peculiar type of physical bravery. It is the business of a policeman or a fireman to die if necessary. He has to give up all thought of his own person. It is an entirely different service from other Government service. I think the Senator from California well states it when he describes it.

We talk about how easily we could fill the places. It is not easy to fill places in the fire and police departments. It takes long training for a man to fit himself for one of those services. A man goes through the period of being a rookie, he has to develop his knowledge of how to deal with crime, he has to know what the limitations are. It is a highly specialized service. Boston found out one time what it meant to have the policemen off duty. I do not anticipate, of course, that such a thing would happen here, but it would be a dire calamity if it should happen.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I did not intend to take up the time of the Senate, and I can hardly justify myself in saying more; but I express the hope that the Senators present have appreciated and approve the views I have endeavored to express.

Pursuing for a moment the thoughts just expressed by the Senator from New York, this is a specialized branch of the public service, it is a hazardous service, as must be admitted, and we can not supply the personnel of the police or the fire department overnight. I do not say that if this reduction is made the policemen will resign, because, having spent their lives in this special service, to what would they turn? They would have to suffer the reduction in salary. But suppose they should resign in considerable numbers; how could equally competent men be speedily called into the service, having due regard for the safety of the city?

I submit to the Senate that in reducing salaries an exception should be made in respect to men engaged in these hazardous services for the District. I assume, as the chairman of the committee has stated, that the bill applies to this District the same as it does to the Army and the Navy.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think we ought to distinguish between a policeman and a soldier. As has already been suggested, the soldier, when he gets into the service, can not leave. If he leaves, he is a deserter, and he may be captured and punished as a deserter. A policeman is just like any other official. Of course, we recognize the importance and the character of a policeman's work, but he is just like any other official of the Government in that he can quit when he wants to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not so sure of that, under existing laws and regulations.

Mr. JONES. He is not subject to punishment for desertion, or anything like that. We make the laws to govern him, and he can quit whenever he chooses. He may have to give a little notice, possibly, or something of that kind, but even if he quits without that, he can not be put into jail or incarcerated in the penitentiary, or anything of that sort.

Furthermore, if the policemen are exempted, why not exempt patrolmen along the border, who are looking out for smugglers, taking just such risks as a policeman takes?

I think it would be very unfortunate if we should exempt policemen and firemen, and I can see no justification for it any more than exempting civil officers of the Government. So I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dickinson in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 46, after line 17, to insert:

(f) Insolvent bank receivers and bank examiners whose compensation is not paid from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, which is not at variance with the purpose of the committee, and I think no member of the committee will object to it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will not the Senator submit his amendment?

Mr. GLASS. My amendment is to strike out the words "insolvent bank receivers and bank examiners," on page 46, line 18, and to insert the words "public officials and employees," so that the sentence will read:

Public officials and employees whose compensation is not paid from the Federal Treasury.

This is the amendment to which I have heretofore called the attention of the chairman of the committee. Mr. JONES. I think that it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will state it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have an amendment addressed to the same subject matter. Is it permissible now to offer it or to call it up, or may I call it up on Monday morning?

Mr. JONES. It is not an amendment to a committee amendment?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is.

Mr. JONES. Of course, if it is an amendment to a committee amendment, it will be in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am asking whether I may call it up on Monday.

Mr. JONES. What is the amendment, and where is it to come in the bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is addressed to the same point as the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. JONES. His amendment was defeated.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I grant it was.

Mr. JONES. Then to what committee amendment is the Senator's amendment offered?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is an amendment addressed to the same proposition.

Mr. JONES. I would like to know what the amendment is in words, and to what committee amendment it is offered. Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is to be inserted on page 46.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that the amendment of the Senator from California refers to page 46, line 17.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To insert the words "or the members of the Metropolitan police force and the fire department of the District of Columbia."

It is the understanding of the Chair that the Senate has passed upon that subject, and that the amendment to the amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has already been voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment has already been voted down.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; my amendment has not been voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The same amendment has been acted on.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not care whether it has been or not, my amendment has not been voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment covers the same subject matter covered by the other amendment, and therefore it is out of order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will wait until Monday to discuss the matter further; but I do not agree with the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there was no record vote on my amendment, and the Senator from California may give notice of a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I am wondering whether the Senator from California, if I may have his attention-

Mr. JONES. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 19, to strike out:

(e) commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, mem-bers of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agri-culture), members of the International Joint Commission, United States section, or members of the Board of Mediation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 18, to strike out:

REDUCTIONS INAPPLICABLE WHEN COMMODITY PRICE LEVEL RISES

SEC. 106. If at any time prior to June 30, 1933, the President finds that for a period of 120 days the average wholesale commodity price level is within 10 points as high as the average wholesale commodity price level of the year 1926, indicated by the figure 100 in the revised index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, he shall issue a proclamation to that effect, and upon the issuance of such proclamation the foregoing provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 12, after the name "United States," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein shall preciude the recovery of overpayments as found and certified by the Comptroller General of the United States.

So as to read:

LIMITATION ON JURISDICTION OF COURTS

SEC. 106. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application of any provision of this title, unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein shall preclude the recovery of overpayments as found and certified by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Permanent salary reductions," on page 48, after line 15, to strike

SEC. 108. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salary of each of the members of the International Joint Commission, United States section, shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 109. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salaries of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), and the members of the Board of Mediation shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 24, to strike out:

SEC. 110. Beginning July 1, 1933—

(a) The salaries of the appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

(b) The salaries of all judges (except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office), if such salaries are in excess of $10,000 per annum shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

annum, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

SEC. 111. After June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum.

And to insert:

And to insert:

SEC. 107. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salaries of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), the members of the Board of Mediation, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, the American commissioner of the General Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, and the umpire and American commissioner of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum; and after June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the Federal Farm Board, the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, or of any governmental function named in this section, shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum. The provisions of section 102 shall apply to the compensation of offices and positions provided for in this section.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, yesterday I called attention to the fact that the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] had stated on the floor that General Hines, of the Veterans' Bureau, in addition to his salary of $12,000 a year as director of that bureau, was drawing his Army retirement pay of $4,000, making his salary $16,000.

I do not know how other members of the Committee on Appropriations were affected by that statement, but I know that it impressed me, and for that reason I raised no objection in the committee to the reduction of General Hines's commissions which might very readily be abolished altogether and the entire salaries saved to the Government.

I have followed the committee's report all the way through, and voted with the committee all the way through.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. As chairman of the committee, I am glad to accept the amendment the Senator is about to propose. General Hines is not drawing retired pay.

Mr. GLASS. Very well. I move to strike out the language covering the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs from the provision just read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves to strike out, on page 49, in lines 19 and 20, the words "the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator's position is well taken, and I would like to see the amendment agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I share the views of the chairman, and am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Is the amendment as amended agreed to?

Mr. COUZENS. No.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I rise to give notice of an intention to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from New York was

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be entered. Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to ask the committee what consideration, if any, was given by the subcommittee to the president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Senator in charge of the bill, who is very familiar with shipping matters, realizes that the merchant fleet is a liquidating proposition. There is no tenure of office, and we hope it is not going to be very long that this position will be needed by our country, but this is the most drastic cut I have heard of. This man gets $18,000.

Mr. JONES. There is another cut, in the salary of a man getting $20,000.

Mr. COPELAND. That is as to a lawyer.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. He can go back into the law.

Mr. JONES. If he has any law business, he can go back to it.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume he might get some, whether he would get paid for it or not.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that the committee considered this very carefully and took into consideration the very matters the Senator is mentioning, and we thought that under the conditions which confront us the wise thing to do was to put all these officials on the same basis.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in perfect harmony with what has just been done with reference to General Hines, but why should not an exception be made with reference to this office, which is very important to us? No ordinary man can serve in this place. We can not go out and get somebody to enlist for it.

Mr. JONES. I recognize the importance of it, but this man came here, I think, just about a couple of years ago, at $10,000.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is entirely mis-

Mr. McKELLAR. I think he will stay after his salary is cut. Certainly he is not any more important than members of the Shipping Board themselves.

Mr. COPELAND. The members of the Shipping Board are given appointments, are confirmed by the Senate, so they have a tenure of office more or less permanent; but when it comes to this particular position, where we need a man of expert training in shipping, whose job it is to sell off the ships which we have on our hands, it seems to me no salary. He is classified here along with a lot of moribund | more than right and sensible and businesslike to retain this man in office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. Is it possible that this man has been selling our ships recently? I happen to have-

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am not going to get into any argument with the Senator. He is just as tired as I am and, I think, more so. There is not any use of our arguing that question. I am bringing to the attention of the Senate the fact that we are doing a very unbusinesslike thing if we permit this man to have his salary cut practically in two. We have done many foolish things to-day, but if there is anything that is worse than this, I do not know what it is. However, it is time to adjourn now, Mr. President; and I move that the Senate take a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order, under the unanimous-consent agreement which has been entered into.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, I move that we carry out the agreement and take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold the motion for a moment, the Senator from New Hampshire, I think, will probably appreciate the situation confronting us now. I thought he probably would want to have these amendments disposed of so that he could have his substitute pending, but I understand the pending amendment is going to take considerable time.

Mr. MOSES. I shall interpose no objection to carrying out the unanimous-consent agreement, but I want to give notice that immediately upon the completion of the consideration of this title I shall ask unanimous consent that my amendment may be in order.

Mr. JONES. I will be glad to give such consent, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator in charge of the bill, I move that the Senate carry out the unanimous-consent agreement and recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon withhold his motion?

Mr. McNARY. I withhold it for a moment.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] a question. I desire to ask whether the limitation imposed by this section on salaries extends to the salary of Mr. Milner, who is receiving $50,000 a year, as I understand, as the general agent of the National Grain Corporation and the Grain Stabilization Corporation; and also whether it extends to the $75,000 salary of Mr. Creekmore, who is connected, I believe, with the American Cotton Cooperative Association; or do these salaries have a charmed life beyond the power of the committee and of Congress?

Mr. BYRNES. I can answer that the last statement of the Senator is correct; they have "a charmed life," and notwithstanding the fact that I have introduced a bill to abolish the Farm Board, I think the Farm Board, too, has "a charmed life," for I have never been able to get that bill reported from the committee to which it was referred.

Mr. GORE. I will be glad to disenchant the charm.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dickinson in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I renew my motion that, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement entered into earlier, the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being under the order previously entered until Monday, June 6, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 4 (legislative day of June 1), 1932

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Harry A. Weiss, of West Virginia, to be United States marshal, northern district of West Virginia. He is now serving in this position under an appointment which expired January 11, 1932.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named assistant dental surgeons to be passed assistant dental surgeons, with the grade of passed assistant surgeon, in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

John A. Hammer, June 20, 1932. Fritz R. Jackson, July 10, 1932.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1932

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we draw to Thee, not unto One who is an avenging God but unto One who is as a high priest, touched with a feeling of our infirmities. We rejoice that in Thee all humankind shall find rest. Let Thy blessing come upon all who are perplexed, upon all who are borne with care and anxiety; direct for them the way. Do Thou show us the higher revelation of Thy nature, which is paternal. Be a merciful Providence unto the poor and rich, unto the bond and the free. Reveal unto us Thy heart with its noblest moods-where love suffers and smiles as it suffers and where mercy blesses those who deserve no mercy. Lead us to temperance in all things, to purity of thought, to a fine sense of justice, and to unselfish ambitions. Above all, our Father, may we achieve successfully our tasks for the sake of the other man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following

S. 326. An act for the relief of Abram G. O'Bleness.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 811) entitled "An act for the relief of Sophia A. Beers," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Howell, Mr. Steiwer, and Mr. Logan to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2458) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917.

SECTIONS 304 AND 305, H. R. 12353

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement I have obtained from the Post Office Department relative to cost and upkeep of public buildings in the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following analysis of sections 304 and 305 of the Garner-Rainey bill, showing the population, postal receipts, and rent now paid for leased post offices in towns included in the above sections of the bill.

The following table gives the population, postal receipts. and rent now paid for leased post-office buildings of the towns included in section 304 of H. R. 12353. The approximate average cost of buildings contemplated by this section will be a little over $70,000 per building.

Estimated annual cost of maintenance of proposed Federal buildings, including interest, depreciation, and upkeep, $7,478,100.

The total rent now paid for post-office quarters in all towns under section 304 is $1,488,597.41. It is conservatively estimated that the annual cost of maintenance of the proposed Federal buildings, contemplated by this section, including interest, depreciation, and upkeep, will be $7,478,100. The increased annual burden on the Federal Treasury will thus be $5,989,502.59. Interest, depreciation, and upkeep for a building costing $70,000 comes to about 9 per cent of the cost as an annual charge. It is subdivided as follows: Heat, $230; light, $400; supplies, $170; custodial force, $2,500; interest at 3 per cent, $2,100; depreciation at 2 per cent, $1,100; totaling $6,500, or about 9 per cent of the cost of the building.

The following table gives the population, postal receipts, and rent now paid for the leased post-office buildings of the towns included in section 305 of H. R. 12353.

The approximate average cost of buildings contemplated by this section will be about $55,000 per building.

Estimated annual cost of maintenance of proposed Federal buildings, including interest, depreciation, and upkeep, $2, 240.000.

The total rent now paid for post-office quarters in all towns under section 305 is $397,700.16. It is estimated that the annual cost of maintenance of the proposed Federal buildings, contemplated by this section, including interest, depreciation, and upkeep, will be $2,240,000. The increased annual burden on the Federal Treasury will thus be $1,842,299.84. Including heat, light, supplies, interest at 3 per cent, and depreciation at 2 per cent, the annual cost will be over 10 per cent of the cost of the building if custodial force charges are included and about 9 per cent if they are not included.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 8, 15, 16, 35, 40, 41, 42, 45, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 71, 72, 76, 113, 114, 115, 146, 174, 193, 207, 212, 214, 254, 257, 262, and 267.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 73, 74, 77, 79, 80, 81, 83, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 116, 117, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 141, 142, 145, 147, 148, 149, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 183, 185, 183, 189, 190, 191, 192, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 208, 209, 210, 211, 213, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 221, 222, 223, 224, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 234, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 255, 256, 258, 259, 260, and 261, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2 of the Senate engrossed amendments, under the heading "Title V—Miscellaneous taxes" and the subheading "Part II—Admissions tax," strike out "Sec. 712. Admission to Olympic games"; and on page 3 of the Senate engrossed amendments, under the heading "Title VIII—

Postal rates," strike out "Sec. 1002. Adjustment of postal rates"; and on page 3 of the Senate engrossed amendments, under the heading "Title IX—Administrative and general provisions," strike out all after "Sec. 1106. Refunds of miscellaneous taxes," the remaining portion of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 1107. Adjustments of carriers' liabilities to conform to recapture payments.

"SEC. 1108. Limitation on prosecutions for internal revenue offenses.

- "SEC. 1109. Special disbursing agents of Treasury.
- "SEC. 1110. Refund of taxes for taxable year 1918.
- "SEC. 1111. Definitions.
- "SEC. 1112. Separability clause.
- "SEC. 1113. Effective date of act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

- "(r) Limitation on stock losses-
- "(1) Losses from sales or exchanges of stocks and bonds (as defined in subsection (t) of this section) which are not capital assets (as defined in sec. 101) shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such sales or exchanges (including gains which may be derived by a taxpayer from the retirement of his own obligations).
- "(2) Losses disallowed as a deduction by paragraph (1), computed without regard to any losses sustained during the preceding taxable year, shall, to an amount not in excess of the taxpayer's net income for the taxable year, be considered for the purposes of this title as losses sustained in the succeeding taxable year from sales or exchanges of stocks or bonds which are not capital assets.
- "(3) This subsection shall not apply to a dealer in securities (as to stocks and bonds acquired for resale to customers) in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of his business, nor to a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, nor to persons carrying on the banking business (where the receipt of deposits constitutes a major part of such business) in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of such banking business."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On the last line of page 19 of the Senate engrossed amendments, after the word "coal," insert "mines"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(a) Earned income from sources without United States.—
In the case of an individual citizen of the United States, a bona fide nonresident of the United States for more than six months during the taxable year, amounts received from sources without the United States (except amounts paid by the United States or any agency thereof) if such amounts constitute earned income; but such individual shall not be allowed as a deduction from his gross income any deductions properly allocable to or chargeable against amounts excluded from gross income under this subsection. As used in this subsection the term 'earned income' means wages, salaries, professional fees, and other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually rendered, but does not include that part of the compensation derived by the taxpayer for personal services rendered by him to a corporation which represents a distribution of earnings or profits rather than a reasonable allowance as compensation for the personal services actually rendered. In the case of a taxpayer engaged in a trade or business in which both personal services and capital are material income producing factors, a reasonable allowance as compensation for the personal services actually rendered by the taxpayer, not in excess of 20 per cent of his share of the net profits of such trade or business, shall be considered as earned income."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following: "; except that for the taxable years 1932 and 1933 there shall be added to the rate of tax prescribed by sections 13(a), 201(b), and 204(a), a rate of three-fourths of 1 per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 78: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13% per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13% per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) The tax shall not apply to a transfer of property in trust where the power to revest in the donor title to such property is vested in the donor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such property or the income therefrom, but the relinquishment or termination of such power (other than by the donor's death) shall be considered to be a transfer by the donor by gift of the property subject to such power, and any payment of the income therefrom to a beneficiary other than the donor shall be considered to be a transfer by the donor of such income by gift."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(4) Crude petroleum, ½ cent per gallon; fuel oil derived from petroleum, gas oil derived from petroleum, and all liquid derivatives of crude petroleum, except lubricating oil and gasoline or other motor fuel, ½ cent per gallon; gasoline or other motor fuel, 2½ cents per gallon; lubricating oil, 4 cents per gallon; paraffin and other petroleum wax products, 1 cent per pound. The tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 140: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(7) Copper-bearing ores and concentrates and articles provided for in paragraphs 316, 380, 381, 387, 1620, 1634, 1657, 1658, or 1659 of the tariff act of 1930, 4 cents per pound on the copper contained therein: Provided, That no tax under this paragraph shall be imposed on copper in any of the foregoing which is lost in metallurgical processes: Provided further, That ores or concentrates usable as a flux or sulphur reagent in copper smelting and/or converting and having a copper content of not more than 15 per cent, when imported for fluxing purposes, shall be admitted free of said tax in an aggregate amount of not to exceed in any one year 15,000 tons of copper content. All articles dutiable under the tariff act of 1930, not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, in which copper (including copper in alloys) is the component material of chief value, 3 cents per pound. All articles dutiable under the tariff act of 1930. not provided for heretofore in this paragraph, containing 4 per cent or more of copper by weight, 3 per cent ad valorem or three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, whichever is the lower. The tax on the articles described in this paragraph shall apply only with respect to the importation of such articles. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this paragraph."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 143: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert "tooth and mouth washes (except that the rate shall be 5 per cent), dentifrices (except that the rate shall be 5 per cent), tooth pastes (except that the rate shall be 5 per cent)" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

" SEC. 616. TAX ON ELECTRICAL ENERGY

"(a) There is hereby imposed a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the amount paid on or after the fifteenth day after the date of the enactment of this act, for electrical energy for domestic or commercial consumption furnished after such date and before July 1, 1934, to be paid by the person paying for such electrical energy and to be collected by the vendor.

"(b) Each vendor receiving any payments specified in subsection (a) shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by such subsection from the person making such payments, and shall on or before the last day of each month make a return, under oath, for the preceding month, and pay the taxes so collected, to the collector of the district in which his principal place of business is located, or if he has no principal place of business in the United States, to the collector at Baltimore, Md. Such returns shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulation prescribe. The commissioner may extend the time for making returns and paying the taxes collected, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe with the approval of the Secretary, but no such extension shall be for more than 90 days. The provisions of sections 771 to 774, inclusive, shall, in lieu of the provisions of sections 619 to 629, inclusive, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this section.

"(c) No tax shall be imposed under this section upon any payment received for electrical energy furnished to the United States or to any State or Territory, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia. The right to exemption under this subsection shall be evidenced in such manner as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulation prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This amendment makes clerical changes; and the House recedes with an amendment making further clerical changes in the table of contents.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment is necessitated by the elimination of section 811 (c) of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: In the House bill the rates of normal tax were 2 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income in excess of credits, 4 per cent on the next $4,000, and 7 per cent on the remainder. The Senate amendment substitutes the rates of 4 per cent on the first $4,000 and 8 per cent on the remainder; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: In the House bill the surtax rates commenced at 1 per cent upon the portion of the net income in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $10,000 and increased progressively to 40 per cent on the portion of the net income in excess of $100,000. The Senate amendment changes the surtax beginning with net incomes in excess of $12,000 and increases the rates progressively to a maximum of 55 per cent on the portion of the net income in excess of $1,000,000. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6: These amendments make clerical changes in the cross references to the capital gain and loss section, necessitated by the increase in the normal tax and surtax rates; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 7: By this amendment a tax at the rate of 80 per cent is imposed upon the amount by which the compensation of any officer, director, or employee of a corporation exceeds compensation at the rate of $75,000 per year; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 8: By this amendment a tax at the rate of 100 per cent is imposed upon the amount of income derived through the willful violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State or Territory; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 9: This amendment increases the corporation tax rate to 14 per cent from the 131/2 per cent rate contained in the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the rate at 1334 per cent.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment makes a clerical change, necessitated by the elimination of the specific credit allowed under the House bill to corporations; and the House

On amendment No. 11: This amendment requires Presidents of the United States and judges of the courts of the United States, taking office after the date of the enactment of this act, to include their compensation in gross income, and amends all acts fixing the compensation of such officers so as to make it clear that the provision is intended as a reduction of such compensation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment eliminates the exemption of pensions and World War compensation payments allowed under existing law and under the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 13 and 14: These amendments make clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment makes a change necessitated by the elimination (by Senate amendment No. 59) from section 116 of the House bill of the exemption of earned income from sources without the United States. The exemption having been restored with restrictions, the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 16: This amendment prohibits the allowance of a deduction of the amount by which the compensation of any person for personal services exceeds compensation at the rate of $75,000 per year; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment makes a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment prohibits the deduction of interest paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred or continued in connection with the purchasing or carrying of an annuity; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment makes a clarifying change; and the House recedes,

On amendment No. 20: This amendment makes a clerical change: and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 21: This amendment and amendment No. 250 are complementary. Under the House bill certain casualty losses incurred during the settlement of a decedent's estate were allowed as deductions for income-tax but not for estate-tax purposes. Senate amendments Nos. 21 and 250 allow losses of this character to be taken as deductions either for one tax or for the other. Amendment No. 21 prohibits the allowance of a deduction for income-tax purposes if at the time of the filing of the return a deduction for such a loss has been claimed for estate-tax purposes in the estate-tax return, and amendment No. 250 correspondingly prohibits the allowance of a deduction for estate-tax purposes if at the time of the filing of the estate-tax return a deduction has been claimed for income-tax purposes in an income-tax return. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 22: This amendment makes a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 23: This amendment makes a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 24: This amendment provides that the deduction for a debt ascertained to be recoverable only in part shall not exceed so much of the debt as is charged off within the taxable year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment makes certain that the provisions respecting revised estimates of the recoverable content of property subject to depletion shall apply where the revision of the estimate results from the usual or ordinary operation of the property as well as from development work; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 26 and 27: These amendments make clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: This amendment permits any deduction allowable under the corresponding provision of the 1928 act (sec. 23 (q)) and apportioned under that act to any year or years subsequent to 1931 to be taken in the taxable year to which so apportioned; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 29: The House bill, in subsections (r), (s), and (t), placed the following limitations upon the amount of deductions allowable for losses from sales or exchanges of stocks and bonds:

(1) Losses on stocks and bonds which were not capital assets (within the meaning of sec. 101) were allowed only to the extent of the gains on such stocks and bonds;

(2) Losses on stocks and bonds which were capital assets were allowed only to the extent of the gains on such stocks and bonds;

(3) An excess of losses over gains on stocks and bonds in either category was allowed to the extent of any excess of gains over losses on stocks and bonds of the other category; but the deduction of excess losses on stocks and bonds which were capital assets against excess gains on stocks and bonds which were not capital assets was subject to the limitation that in such case the tax should not be less than a tax computed without reference to the provisions of these subsections.

The Senate amendment strikes out the limitation contained in the House bill on losses on stocks and bonds which are capital assets and allows such losses as deductions as under the existing law. The amendment provides the following limitations:

(1) Losses on stocks and bonds which are not capital assets are allowed to the extent of the gains on such stocks and bonds, including gains from the retirement of the taxpayer's obligations;

(2) Any excess of losses over gains in any taxable year on stocks and bonds which are not capital assets is allowed as a deduction in the succeeding taxable year to the extent of any excess of gains over losses in such succeeding year on such stocks and bonds, but the amount of the excess of losses over gains which may be so carried forward from any taxable year can not exceed the net income for such year.

The House bill excepted from the operation of these subsections dealers in securities in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of business with their customers; the Senate amendment enlarges the scope of the exception in the case of such dealers to include all transactions in the ordinary course of business (whether or not with customers) involving stocks and bonds acquired for resale to customers. The Senate amendment also extends the exception to (a) banks and trust companies incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, and (b) persons carrying on the banking business (where the receipt of deposits constitutes a major part of such business) in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of such banking business.

The House recedes with two amendments, one making a clerical correction in the parenthetical clause in paragraph (1), the other striking out a parenthetical clause in paragraph (2) which is unnecessary.

On amendments Nos. 30, 31, 32, and 33: These amendments make clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment restores the credit of dividends for normal tax purposes, allowed under the existing law but stricken out by the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: Under the House bill the personal exemption in the case of a head of a family or a married person was $2,500, without regard to the amount of the net income. The Senate amendment limits such exemption to $2,000 where the net income is in excess of $5,000, with additional provisions designed to avoid discrimination in cases where the net income is slightly in excess of $5,000; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment eliminates any credit for earned income; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment eliminates the specific credit against net income allowed under the House bill to corporations; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 38: This existing law requires, in the case of installment obligations transmitted at death, that there be included as income in the return of the decedent for the year of his death the unreturned profit represented by such obligations. This amendment eliminates such requirement if there is filed with the commissioner a bond conditioned upon the return as income, by the person receiving any payment on such obligations, of the same proportion of such payment as would be returnable as income by the decedent had he lived and received the same; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 39: This amendment makes a clerical change made necessary by amendment No. 37; and the House recedes

On amendments Nos. 40 and 41: These amendments require the filing of returns by married persons having net incomes of $2,000 or over, instead of $2,500 or over as under the House bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment provides that a farmers' cooperative marketing or purchasing association need only keep such records as will show the actual business done with nonmembers and the profit, if any, derived therefrom, and that exemption shall not be denied on the ground that the record of transactions between the association and nonmembers is not kept on ledger accounts. The amendment also provides that such an association shall be allowed to retain the profits, if any, derived from its business with nonmembers, subject to the right of any nonmember to use his share of such profits, if any, to qualify as a member of the association. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 43: This amendment restores the provisions of the existing law, in conformity with Senate amendment No. 56: and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment provides that where property was acquired by a corporation as a contribution to capital, as well as where it was acquired as paid-in surplus, the basis shall be the same as the basis in the hands of the transferor; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: This amendment is rendered unnecessary by reason of Senate amendment 46; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment makes it clear that the basis of property held during any period in the taxable year 1929 or any subsequent taxable year in respect of which a consolidated return was filed shall be adjusted in respect of items relating to such period in accordance with the regulations under section 141 of the 1928 act or of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment permits the taxpayer to capitalize taxes and other carrying charges on unimproved and unproductive real property, but precludes the taxpayer from capitalizing any such items for which deductions have been taken by the taxpayer or predecessors in title in determining net income for the current or any preceding year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 48: The House bill retained the provisions of existing law requiring the adjustment of the basis of property on account of depletion to be made without regard to discovery value or percentage depletion. The Senate amendment retains this provision for taxable years prior to 1932, but eliminates it for the taxable year 1932 and subsequent taxable years; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 49: This amendment makes a clerical change necessitated by the extension of percentage depletion; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 50: Percentage depletion having been extended to include metal, coal, and sulphur mines, this amendment provides that in the case of such mines depletion may not be computed on the basis of discovery value; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 51 and 52: These amendments make clerical changes necessitated by the transfer of the provisions relating to percentage depletion in the case of sulphur mines to a new subsection; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 53: This amendment makes it clear that in computing the gross income from the property for the purpose of determining the allowance for percentage depletion in the case of oil and gas wells, there shall be excluded from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 54: This amendment changes the rate of percentage depletion in the case of sulphur from 27½ per cent, as in the House bill, to 23 per cent of the gross income from the property, and allows percentage depletion in the case of coal and of metal mines, at the respective rates of 5 per cent and 15 per cent of the gross income from the property; the percentage depletion allowance can not in any case exceed 50 per cent of the net income from the property. As in the case of oil and gas wells the amendment makes it clear that rents and royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property are to be excluded in computing the gross income from the property. The amendment requires that the taxpayer make in his 1933 return an election, binding for 1934 and subsequent years, whether he will have the depletion deduction as to each property computed with or without reference to percentage depletion, and the failure so to elect will preclude the use of percentage depletion. The amendment also provides that if, because of the provisions of section 113(a) of the bill, the basis of property acquired after December 31, 1933, is determined either (1) by reference to the basis of the property in the hands of a transferor, donor, or grantor, or (2) by reference to the basis of other property previously held by the taxpayer, then the method of computing the depletion allowances in respect of the property so acquired shall be the same as the method previously used by the transferor, donor, or grantor, or by the taxpayer in respect of the property previously held. The House recedes with a clerical amend-

On amendment No. 55: This is a clerical change necessitated by Senate amendment No. 56; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment restores the provisions of existing law which exempt from taxation as ordinary dividends distributions of earnings or profits accumulated, or increase in value of property accrued, prior to March 1, 1913. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 57 and 58: These amendments restore the provisions of existing law and are necessitated by Senate Amendment No. 56; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 59: This amendment eliminates the exclusion from gross income, in the case of a nonresident individual citizen, of earned income from sources without the United States; and the House receds with an amendment which restores the exclusion except as to amounts paid by the United States or any agency thereof, and makes clerical changes.

On amendments Nos. 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65: These amendments make clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 66: This is a clerical amendment made necessary by the addition of paragraph (4) to section 114 (b); and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 67: This amendment results in net loss deductions being allowable for 1932, 1933, and 1934, as well as for subsequent years; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 68: This is a clarifying amendment which restores to the bill a provision of existing law; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 69 and 70: These amendments make it clear that a 1931 net loss is deductible in computing net income for 1932; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 71: This amendment eliminates from the House bill the provision limiting the credit for taxes paid to any foreign country to the same proportion of the tax as the income from that country bears to the total income and restores the provisions of existing law; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 72: This amendment, in conformity with Senate amendment No. 71, eliminates the requirement that the taxpayer supply information concerning the income derived from any foreign country when credit for the tax paid to such country is claimed; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 73 and 74: These amendments give effect (in so far as not inconsistent with this bill) to the consolidated returns regulations prescribed under section 141 of the revenue act of 1928, in order to provide for corporations the returns for which may be filed on a fiscal year basis before new regulations are promulgated under section 141(b) of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment eliminates from the House bill the provision increasing the corporate rate by 1½ per cent for the privilege of filing consolidated returns. The House recedes with an amendment increasing the rate by three-fourths of 1 per cent, in the case of the taxable years 1932 and 1933 only.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment carried out the policy expressed in Senate amendment No. 35; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment is made necessary by Senate amendment No. 102 increasing the normal rate on nonresident alien individuals from 7 per cent to 8 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 78: The House bill provides for with-holding at the source in the case of foreign corporations at the rate of $13\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The Senate amendment fixes the rate at 14 per cent. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the rate at $13\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

On amendments Nos. 79 and 80: These amendments are made necessary by Senate amendment No. 102 increasing the normal rate on nonresident alien individuals from 7 per cent to 8 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 81: This amendment is made necessary by the restoration of the credit for dividends for the purpose of the normal tax, which credit was eliminated in the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 82: The House bill provides for with-holding at the source in the case of foreign corporations at the rate of $13\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The Senate amendment fixes the rate at 14 per cent. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the rate at $13\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment is made necessary by Senate amendment No. 102 increasing the normal rate on nonresident alien individuals from 7 per cent to 8 per cent; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 84: The House bill provides for withholding at the source in the case of foreign corporations at the rate of 13½ per cent. The Senate amendment fixes the rate at 14 per cent. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the rate at 13¾ per cent.

On amendment No. 85: This amendment changes section 165 of the House bill to provide that only the excess of the amount distributed or made available to an employee over the amounts contributed or paid in by him to the trusts mentioned in that section shall be taxable in the year of distribution; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 86: By this amendment the scope of the section of the House bill relative to revocable trusts has been extended to include cases where the power to revest title to any part of the corpus is wholly vested in a person not having a substantial adverse interest; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 87, 88, 89, 90 and 91: These amendments extend the scope of section 167, taxing the income of certain trusts to the grantor, to cases in which the discretion as to the disposition of the trust income is in any person not having a substantial adverse interest in the disposition of such income, even though such discretionary power is not shared with the grantor; and the House recedes.

On amendment Nos. 92 and 93: These amendments increase the corporate rate on life insurance companies from 13½ per cent to 14 per cent to conform to similar action taken in respect of ordinary corporations in Senate amendment No. 9. The House recedes with an amendment making the corporate rate 13¾ per cent.

On amendment No. 94: The House bill substituted for the 4 per cent interest assumption rates provided for by existing law the rate of 3½ per cent in both types of reserves specified in the subsection. This amendment permits the use of the 4 per cent rate in cases of reserves required by law unless the reserve fund is computed at a lower interest assumption rate, in which case the rate of 3¾ per cent is required to be used. The amendment also provides for a uniform rate of 3¾ per cent in respect of reserves not required by law in the case of combined life, health, and accident policies. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 95: This is a clerical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 96: This amendment is made necessary by Senate amendment No. 37 eliminating the specific credit allowed corporation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 97: This amendment provides for the deduction of a proportionate part of the depreciation, taxes, and other expenses pertaining to real estate owned and occupied by a life insurance company, determined by the proportion which the rental value of the space not occupied by the company bears to the rental value of the entire property; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 98 and 99: These amendments increase the corporate rate upon insurance companies other than life or mutual from 13½ per cent under the House bill to 14 per cent, to correspond to a similar change made with respect to ordinary corporations. The House recedes with an amendment fixing the corporate rate at 13¾ per cent.

On amendment No. 100: This amendment requires the inclusion in the gross income of insurance companies other than life or mutual not only of investment and underwriting income, but also of all other items constituting gross income under section 22; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 101: This amendment eliminates the specific credit allowed insurance companies other than life or mutual to correspond to a similar change made with respect to ordinary corporations; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 102 to 108, inclusive: These amendments are made necessary by Senate amendment No. 3, increasing the normal rates on individuals; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 109: This amendment is made necessary by Senate amendment No. 37, eliminating the specific credit allowed corporations; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 110 and 111: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 112: The purpose of this amendment is to make it clear that estates, although not subject to estate tax under existing law, may be subject to the additional estate tax, in view of the lowering of the exemption from $100,000 to $50,000; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 113: This amendment imposes an additional estate tax upon Federal, State, or municipal securities the income from which is exempt from income tax; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 114 and 115: These amendments make clerical changes; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 116: This amendment is to make it clear that an estate tax return is to be filed in the case of nonresident decedents where the gross estate is less than $50,000; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 117: Under this amendment gifts by nonresident citizens of the United States are subject to the gift tax regardless of whether the donated property is situated within or without the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 118: This is a clarifying amendment to make it plain that the gift tax applies only to gifts made after the date of the enactment of the act; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 119: This amendment provides that the gift tax is not applicable to transfers in trust where the right of revocation is (1) in the donor, either alone or in conjunction with any person not having a substantial adverse interest, or (2) in any person not having a substantial adverse interest, but that the termination of such power (other than by the donor's death) shall be considered a taxable transfer. The House recedes with an amendment changing the rule in the case of transfers in trust when the condition referred to in (2) obtains, as a result of which amendment a transfer in trust, in respect of which the donor retains no power to revoke in himself, either alone or in conjunction with another, will be treated as a transfer subject to gift tax.

On amendments Nos. 120 and 121: Under the House bill gifts (other than of future interests in property) to any one person by the donor during the calendar year are exempt from the gift tax on the first $3,000. Under these amendments this amount is raised to $5,000; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 122 and 123: These are clerical amendments made necessary by Senate amendment No. 117; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 124: This is a clerical amendment; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 125, 126, and 127: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 128: This amendment makes it a felony willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the gift tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 129: This is a clerical amendment to the heading for Title IV; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 130: This amendment makes the imposition of the tax on imported articles subject to any exemptions from duty or preferential rates provided by treaties of the United States in so far as the treaties are applicable; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 131: This amendment includes imported coal, lumber, and copper in the exception from the provision making the drawback privilege inapplicable, with the result that the drawback provisions of the tariff act, unless restricted by their terms to other articles, will be extended to these articles; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 132: The House bill provided for the imposition in full of the tax upon imported articles notwithstanding any provision of law or treaty granting exemption from or reduction of duty to products of any possession of the United States or of any country. The Senate amendment makes this provision inapplicable in the case of imported oil, coal, lumber, and copper, and provides that in the case of these articles Puerto Rico shall be treated as a part of the United States. The effect is to provide that the imposition of tax on the importation of these articles, with respect to which no corresponding tax on domestic sales is imposed, will be on the same basis with respect to the possessions as a regular customs duty. The amendment also eliminates the references to treaties and to foreign countries, in accordance with the action on amendment No. 130. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 133: This amendment makes the tax applicable to all grades of lubricating oil without reference to the degree of viscosity. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 134: Since a tax on imported lubricating oils is provided for in subsection (c) (4), this amendment limits the tax under subsection (c) (1) to sales by domestic manufacturers or producers. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 135: This amendment increases the tax under the House bill on brewer's wort from 5 cents to 15 cents per gallon; changes the tax on malt sirup, etc., from 35 cents per gallon to 3 cents per pound, which is approximately equivalent; and adds an exemption of sales of malt sirup, etc., to manufacturers or producers of foods, cereal beverages, or textiles. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 136: This amendment changes the rate of tax under the House bill on grape concentrate, etc., from 40 per cent of the price or duty-paid value to 20 cents per gallon; provides that the tax shall not apply to finished or fountain sirups, which are separately taxed; and adds an exemption of sales of grape concentrate, etc., to manufacturers or producers of food products or soft drinks for use in the manufacture or production of such products. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 137: This amendment reduces the rate under the House bill on imported crude petroleum, fuel oil, and gas oil from 1 cent to one-half cent per gallon and increases the rate on imported gasoline from 1 cent to $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon. The amendment also provides import taxes on lubricating oils, other liquid derivatives of petroleum, paraffin and other petroleum wax products, asphalt, and bitumen. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the tax on asphalt and bitumen.

On amendment No. 138: This amendment makes it clear that the tax on coal shall apply to all sizes, grades, and classifications of coal other than culm and duff. The amendment contains a provision to exempt imports from any country which during the preceding calendar year has imported from the United States a greater quantity of all the articles described in the paragraph than it has exported to the United States. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 139: This amendment imposes a tax of $3 per thousand feet, board measure, on imported lumber, rough, or planed or dressed on one or more sides, other than flooring made of maple (except Japanese maple), birch, and beech. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 140: This amendment imposes a tax of 4 cents per pound on the copper content of imported ores and concentrates and the materials and semimanufactured articles enumerated in paragraph 316, 380, 381, 387, 1620, 1634, 1657, 1658, or 1659 of the tariff act. Compensatory rates are provided for other imported articles containing copper. The House recedes with an amendment exempting ores and concentrates imported for fluxing purposes in an aggregate amount of not to exceed 15,000 tons in any year.

On amendment No. 141: Under the House bill tires and inner tubes for automobiles, automobile trucks, and motor cycles were taxed as parts or accessories for such articles. The Senate amendment imposes instead a tax on all tires and inner tubes (whether or not for automobiles, automobile trucks, or motor cycles) at the rate of 2½ cents a pound on total weight (exclusive of metal rims or rim bases) in the case of tires, and 4 cents a pound on total weight in the case of inner tubes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 142: This amendment makes a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 143 and 144: These amendments eliminate tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes, and toilet soaps from the list of toilet preparations which were taxed at 10 per cent under the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment subjecting these articles to a 5 per cent tax.

On amendment No. 145: This amendment makes a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 146: The House bill imposed a tax of 10 per cent on the sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of articles made of fur on the hide or pelt or of which such fur is the component material of chief value. The Senate amendment substitutes a tax on the dressing of furs equivalent to 10 per cent of the fair market value of the dressed furs, to be paid by the owner of the furs, and an import tax of 10 per cent ad valorem on dressed furs. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 147: This amendment makes a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 148: This amendment exempts silverplated ware and frames or mountings for spectacles or eyeglasses from the tax under the House bill on articles made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 149: This amendment subjects to the 10 per cent tax parts for watches or clocks sold for more than 9 cents each. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 150: This amendment exempts from tax articles used for religious purposes and articles sold for less than $3. The House recedes with an amendment making it clear that this exemption shall not apply to parts for watches or clocks.

On amendment No. 151: This amendment makes a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 152 and 154: These amendments exclude tires and inner tubes from the category of parts and accessories for automobiles, automobile trucks, and motor cycles. All tires and inner tubes are separately taxed under section 602, added to the bill by Senate Amendment No. 141. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 153: This amendment increases the rate under the House bill on parts or accessories for automobiles, automobile trucks, or motor cycles from 1 per cent to 2 per cent. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 154: This amendment is explained in connection with amendment No. 152.

On amendment No. 155: This amendment allows a body manufacturer to sell bodies tax free to an automobile or automobile truck manufacturer for use in the manufacture of automobiles or automobile trucks to be sold by him, and makes the vendee liable for the tax on the body when he sells it separately or as part of a completed automobile or automobile truck; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 156: Under this amendment, if tires or inner tubes on which tax has been imposed are sold on or with automobiles, automobile trucks, or motor cycles, the manufacturer may take a credit against the tax due on the sale of such automobiles, etc., equal, as nearly as practicable, to the portion of the tax on such articles which is attributable to the tires or tubes. Such portion is to be determined by applying the percentage rate of tax applicable in the case of such automobiles, etc., to the price paid by the automobile, etc., manufacturer for the tires and tubes, or, if the tires and tubes have been manufactured or imported by the manufacturer of the automobiles, etc., to the constructive price determined under section 622 (inserted by Senate amendment No. 186), less in either case the part of such price attributable to metal rims or rim bases; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 157: This amendment provides for the refund or abatement of the tax on automobiles, trucks, motorcycles, tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories which are sold prior to the expiration date of the tax on such articles but are on such date held by a dealer for sale. The amendment contains administrative provisions for effecting this result and for assuring to a dealer recovery of so much of any tax so refunded or abated to the manufacturer as has been passed on to the dealer. To offset this concession, the taxes on these articles are (under amendment No. 204) kept in force for one month longer than other terms under Title IV. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 158: This amendment eliminates the tax under the House bill on sales of boats, in view of the tax on the use of boats added by amendment No. 247. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 159, 160, and 161: These amendments include tennis racket frames and strings and football uniforms in the list of articles taxed under the House bill as sporting goods and exclude canoe cushions and football goals from such list. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 162: This amendment excludes aerial cameras from the tax under the House bill on cameras. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 163 and 164: These amendments substitute for the rate of 4 cents per 1,000 provided in the House bill for all matches, the rates of one-half of 1 cent per 1,000 in the case of paper matches in books and 2 cents per 1,000 in the case of all other matches. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 165: This amendment reduces the rate of tax under the House bill on candy from 5 per cent to 2 per cent. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 166: This amendment reduces the rate of tax under the House bill on chewing gum from 5 per cent to 2 per cent. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 167: This amendment changes the rate of tax under the House bill on cereal beverages from 2 cents to $1\frac{1}{4}$ cents a gallon. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 168: This amendment imposes a tax of 5 cents a gallon upon unfermented grape juice containing 35 per cent or less of sugars by weight, which under the House bill was taxed at 2 cents a gallon. The House recedes with a clarifying amendment.

On amendment No. 169: This amendment is a clerical change in the paragraph number. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 170 and 172: These amendments exclude grape juice from the tax on unfermented fruit juices and the tax on still drinks, in view of the fact that a tax on grape juice is provided by amendment No. 168. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 171: This amendment is a clerical change in the paragraph number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 172: This amendment is explained in connection with amendment No. 170.

On amendment No. 173: This amendment is a clerical change in the paragraph number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 174: This amendment excludes from the tax on mineral or table waters waters exploited and advertised to the medical profession exclusively. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 175: This amendment is a clerical change in the paragraph number. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 176 and 177: These amendments provide that the rate of tax on finished or fountain sirups shall be 6 cents a gallon in all cases where under the House bill the rate was 9 cents a gallon. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 178 and 179: These amendments make clerical changes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 180: This amendment imposes a tax of 3 per cent of the sale price of electrical energy sold by privately owned, operating electrical power companies. The House recedes with an amendment substituting a tax of 3 per cent of the price paid for electrical energy for domestic or commercial use (as distinguished from industrial use), to be paid by the purchaser and collected by the vendor with necessary administrative provisions and an exemption in the case of electrical energy sold to the United States, any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia.

On amendment No. 181: This amendment imposes a tax of 1 cent a gallon on gasoline sold by the importer thereof or a producer of gasoline, except where sold to a producer of gasoline. The tax also attaches to the use by a producer or importer of gasoline purchased tax free or produced or imported by him if such gasoline is used otherwise than in the production of gasoline. The term "producer" is defined to include a refiner, compounder, or blender, or a dealer selling gasoline exclusively to producers of gasoline, and the term "gasoline" to include benzol and any other liquid the chief use of which is as a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motor boats, or aeroplanes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 182: This amendment makes a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 183: This amendment eliminates the provisions of the House bill relating to determination of the tax in the cases of sales at retail and sales at less than fair market price and provides (1) a method of determining sale price by including charges for containers and the like and excluding the tax under Title IV and transportation, delivery, and similar charges; (2) a method of determining sale price in the cases of retail sales, sales on consignment, and sales other than through an arm's-length transaction; and (3) the method of paying the tax in the cases of leases, installment sales, and conditional sales. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 184: This amendment permits an article which would be otherwise subject to tax (other than a tire or inner tube) to be sold free of tax for use as material for, or as a component part of, another article of the classes subject to tax under Title IV. A person selling an article which has been purchased tax free under this provision, is made subject to tax on the resale. The House recedes with an amendment making the provision inapplicable to articles taxable under the section relating to the tax on furs.

On amendment No. 185: This amendment provides for refunds or credits (1) where a manufacturer or producer has purchased tax-paid articles and used them in the manufacture or production of taxable articles, and (2) where the price on the basis of which the tax was originally computed is adjusted by reason of returns, discounts, etc. The amendment also contains administrative provisions governing the allowance of such refunds or credits, and prohibiting refund or credit of tax which has been passed on unless the ultimate consumer has been reimbursed or consents to the refund or credit. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 186: This amendment provides that any person (1) who manufactures, produces, or imports an article (other than a tire or inner tube, or, in the case of a manufacturer or producer of cereal beverages, other than brewer's wort) and uses such article except as material for, or as a component part of, another taxable article, or (2) who manufactures, produces, or imports a tire or inner tube and sells it on or in connection with the sale of an article subject to tax under the section imposing a tax on automobiles, etc., shall be liable to tax as though such article was sold separately by him and the tax shall be computed on a price at which the most nearly comparable articles are sold in the ordinary course of trade by him or other manufacturers, producers, or importers. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the exception of brewer's wort, which is unnecessary, since cereal beverages are taxable articles.

On amendment No. 187: This amendment provides that where any person other than the manufacturer, producer, or importer of a taxable article (such as an assignee in bankruptcy) acquires by operation of law or by any transaction not subject to the tax, the sale of such article by such person shall be taxable as if made by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. The House recedes with an amendment making it clear that the section applies only in cases of acquisition from the manufacturer, producer, or importer.

On amendment No. 188: This amendment provides an exemption from all taxes under Title IV in the case of articles of native Indian handicraft manufactured or produced by Indians on reservations, in Indian schools, or under the jurisdiction of the United States Government in Alaska. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 189: This amendment is a clerical change of a section number. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 190, 191, 192, 194, 195, and 196: These amendments are made to section 619 of the House bill, transferring the burden of the tax to the vendee in the case of contracts made before March 1, 1932. The changes are that the date is made May 1, 1932, and that provisions are added that the section shall not be applicable where the contract provides that the vendor shall pay the tax; that no tax shall be imposed where such a contract is with the United States or with an ultimate consumer, as distinguished from a vendee who intends to resell the article as such or as part of another article; and that in case the vendee refuses to pay the tax to the vendor, the facts shall be reported to the commissioner, who will effect collection from the vendee. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 193: This amendment excepted electrical energy from the scope of the provision relating to contracts before May 1, 1932. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 197: This amendment is a clerical change in the section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 198: This amendment makes it clear that the administrative provisions relating to the return and payment of manufacturers' taxes apply in all cases except where the tax is collected on importation by the Customs Service. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 199: This amendment is a clerical change of a section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 200: This amendment is a clerical change of a section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 201: This amendment provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and publish all rules and regulations under Title IV except those relating to the taxes which are levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as duties imposed by the tariff act of 1930, which shall be prescribed in the same manner as customs regulations. The House recedes,

On amendment No. 202: This amendment is a clerical change of a section number. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 203: This amendment is a clerical change of a cross reference. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 204: This amendment provides that no tax shall be imposed under Title IV on any sale (including use or payment which is treated as a sale) or importation after July 31, 1934, in the case of articles taxable under section 606, relating to the tax on automobiles, etc., or section 602, relating to the tax on tires and inner tubes; or after June 30, 1933, in the case of articles taxable under section 617, relating to the tax on gasoline. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 205: This amendment effects a change in the basis and rate of tax on telephone conversations, telegraph dispatches and messages, and cable and radio dispatches and messages. The House bill provided a tax of 5 cents in the case of any dispatch, message, or conversation for which the charge is more than 30 cents and less than 50 cents, and a tax of 10 cents where the charge is 50 cents or more. The amendment provides the following rates: Telephone conversations costing 50 cents or more and less than $1, 10 cents; costing $1 or more and less than $2, 15 cents; costing $2 or more, 20 cents; telegraph dispatches and messages, 5 per cent of the charge; cable and radio dispatches and messages, 10 cents each. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 206: This amendment reduces the

On amendment No. 206: This amendment reduces the rate of tax on leased wires and talking circuit special services from 10 per cent as proposed in the House bill, to 5 per cent. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 207: This amendment restricts the exemption provided in the case of payments for leased wires and talking circuit special services furnished to radio broadcasting stations or networks to cases where the station or network is used for noncommercial broadcasting. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 208: This amendment provides that the commissioner may extend the time for making returns and paying the taxes collected on telephone, telegraph, cable, and radio services and facilities for a period not exceeding 90 days. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 209: This amendment eliminates certain administrative provisions which are transferred to Part VIII, inserted in the bill by amendment No. 248. The House recedes

On amendments Nos. 210 and 211: These amendments provide that the tax on admissions shall apply when the admission charge is 41 cents or more instead of 46 cents or more as provided in the House bill. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 212: The House bill removed the exemption from tax provided in existing law in the case of admissions to wrestling matches, prize fights, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic matches or exhibitions for the benefit of religious, educational, charitable, municipal improvement, and similar institutions, societies, and organizations, and in the case of college or university games or exhibitions. The Senate amendment restores the exemption in so far as it relates to college games and exhibitions, including wrestling or boxing matches, etc. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 213: This amendment is a clerical

On amendment No. 213: This amendment is a clerical change to conform to amendments Nos. 210 and 211. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 214: This amendment provides a specific exemption from the tax in the case of admissions to the Olympic games to be held in the United States in the year 1932. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 215: This amendment exempts from the tax imposed on issues of bonds, and so forth, certain instruments under the terms of which the obligee is not permitted to make in any year a payment of more than 20 per cent of the cash amount to which he is entitled upon maturity of the instrument; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 216: This amendment makes it clear that the basis of computation of the tax is the par value of the certificate (where a number of shares is evidenced by a certificate) rather than the par value of each share; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 217 and 218: These amendments are in accordance with Senate amendment No. 216, except that they relate to no-par-value stock, where actual value is the basis for computing the tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 219: This amendment is similar in nature to Senate amendment No. 216, except that it applies to stock transfers instead of stock issues; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 220: This amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill making the tax on stock transfers not less than one-fourth of 1 per cent of the selling price. The House recedes with an amendment providing that when stock is sold for $20 or more per share the rate shall be 5 cents instead of 4 cents.

On amendment No. 221: This amendment exempts from the transfer tax certain transfers from a fiduciary to a nominee, or vice versa, and such transfers between nominees of the same fiduciary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 222: This amendment eliminates certain provisions included in the House bill, which were intended to prevent evasion of the tax on stock transfers by means of dealings on foreign exchanges by subjecting to tax transfers of stock made outside of the United States where either the transferor or the transferee was a citizen or resident of the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 223 and 224: These amendments make clerical changes in the subsection letters; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 225: This amendment makes a clerical change necessitated by Senate amendment No. 220. The House recedes with an amendment in conformity with the action on Senate amendment No. 220.

On amendment No. 226: This amendment makes it clear that bonds, such as Federal, State, and municipal bonds, which are exempt from the issue tax, are also exempt from the transfer tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 227: This amendment increases the rate of the bond transfer tax from 2 cents to 4 cents per $100; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 228: This amendment eliminates the provision of the House bill making the tax on bond transfers not less than one-eighth of 1 per cent of the selling price; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 229: This amendment exempts from the tax a transfer of bonds in connection with a reorganization if any part of the gain or loss from the transfer is not recognized for income-tax purposes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 230: This amendment provides an exemption from the bond transfer tax in favor of fiduciaries and nominees, similar to that provided in Senate amendment No. 221, relating to the stock transfer tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 231: This amendment exempts from the tax under the House bill on conveyances, deeds, etc., delivered in escrow prior to April 1, 1932. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 232: This amendment makes the tax under the House bill on transportation by pipe line applicable to crude petroleum and its liquid products instead of to oil only. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 233, 235, and 236: These amendments reduce the rate of tax on transportation of oil, etc., by pipe line from 8 per cent of the charge to 3 per cent. The House recedes with amendments making the rate 4 per cent.

On amendment No. 234: This amendment imposes the tax on the person furnishing the transportation of oil, etc., by pipe line rather than on the person paying for the transportation. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 235 and 236: These amendments are explained in connection with amendment No. 234.

On amendment No. 237: This amendment is necessitated by the imposition of the tax upon the person furnishing the transportation under amendment No. 234. The House recedes

On amendments Nos. 238 and 239: These amendments are necessitated by the change in the imposition of the tax under amendment No. 234. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 240: This amendment eliminates administrative provisions which are transferred to Part VIII, added to the bill by amendment No. 248. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 241 and 242: By these amendments the tax under the House bill on leases of safe-deposit boxes, instead of expiring June 30, 1934, is made permanent. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 243: This amendment imposes the tax on the person paying for the use of the safe-deposit box rather than on the person receiving payment for such use. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 244: This amendment requires the person receiving payment for the use of the safe-deposit box to collect the tax from the person making such payment at the time such payment is received. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 245: This amendment eliminates administrative provisions which are transferred to Part VIII, added to the bill by amendment No. 248. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 246: This amendment provides for a tax of 2 cents upon each check, draft, or order for the payment of money drawn (on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of the act and before July 1, 1934) upon a bank, banker, or trust company. The tax is to be collected by the drawee of the instrument at the time of payment of the instrument, by charging the amount of the tax against the deposits to the credit of the maker or drawer. The House recedes, with an amendment making the tax applicable to checks, etc., presented for payment during the period specified, instead of to those made or drawn during the period.

On amendment No. 247: This amendment imposes a tax upon the use of boats over 28 feet in length, except those used exclusively for trade, fishing, or national defense. The rate of tax is as follows: Over-all length over 28 feet and not over 50 feet, $10; over 50 feet and not over 100 feet, $40; over 100 feet and not over 150 feet, $100; over 150 feet and not over 200 feet, $150; over 200 feet, $200. The tax is to be paid on July 1 of each year, but expires on June 30, 1934. If a new boat is purchased on any date other than July 1, a proportionate part of the tax is imposed. In the case of foreign-built boats, not domestically owned on January 1, 1926, the rate of tax is doubled. Boats used for certain philanthropic purposes are exempt. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 248: This amendment consolidates a number of administrative provisions applicable to the taxes on telephone, telegraph, cable, and radio facilities, transportation of oil by pipe line, leases of safe-deposit boxes, and checks. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 249: Under the House bill additional time is granted to claim credit against the Federal estate tax for death duties paid to the States, except that the extension is not granted in cases where the right to claim such credit is barred at the time of the enactment of the act. Under the Senate amendment the provisions of the House bill are modified to permit the filing of claims in certain cases (even though the estate tax return may have been filed more than three years before the enactment of the bill) provided a petition was duly filed by the taxpayer with the Board of Tax Appeals. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 250: This amendment is explained in connection with Senate amendment No. 21. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 251: The House bill inserted a provision granting relief retroactively to estates whose assets greatly decreased in value subsequent to their valuation for estate tax purposes as of the date of death. The Senate amendment strikes this provision from the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 252: Under this amendment there is granted an extension of the time for payment of estate tax in certain cases where there is included in the gross estate the value of a remainder or reversionary interest; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 253: The House bill imposes an excise tax upon the transfer of stock or securities by a citizen or resident of the United States or by a domestic corporation to a foreign corporation as paid-in surplus or to a foreign trust. The House provision has been enlarged by this amendment to include not only transfers by a citizen or resident of the United States or by a domestic corporation but also transfers by a partnership or by a domestic trust, and furthermore, to include transfers to foreign trusts, foreign partnerships, and foreign corporations, whether made as contributions to surplus or to capital. The House provision relieving certain transfers from tax has been restricted by this amendment through the elimination of that portion which exempts transfers for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth. The definition of a foreign trust has been changed by the amendment; that is, a trust is classified as foreign if the profit from an assumed sale of the transferred property would not be included in the gross income of the trust, the classification not being dependent upon whether or not such profit would be taxable to the trust. The commissioner is given power under the amendment to abate, remit, or refund the tax imposed upon such transfers if he is satisfied that the transfer was not made in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of Federal income taxes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 254: Under this amendment the increased rates on first-class postage provided in the House bill expire on July 1, 1933, instead of on July 1, 1934. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 255: This amendment imposes on the advertising portion of any publication entered as second-class matter subject to the present zone rates of postage the following rates per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the eight postal zones established for fourth-class matter: First and second zones, 2 cents; third zone, 3 cents; fourth zone, 5 cents; fifth zone, 6 cents; sixth zone, 7 cents; seventh zone, 9 cents; eighth zone, and between the Philippine Islands and any portion of the United States, including the District of Columbia and the several Territories and possessions, 10 cents. These rates are effective on and after July 1, 1932, and expire on July 1, 1934. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 256: This amendment makes a clerical change in the subsection letter; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 257: This amendment provides that, effective July 1, 1933, the rates for each form or classification of postal service shall be based upon the actual cost, but no rate shall be reduced below that in effect during the fiscal year 1931, and, subject to certain limitations, such rates shall be fixed and determined from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The amendment also provides a special class of stamps for franking purposes. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 258: This amendment provides that the statute of limitations on bringing suit to recover internal-revenue taxes illegally collected shall be two years, such period to run from the date of mailing by registered mail by the commissioner of a notice of the disallowance of the part of the claim to which the suit relates. The provision does not operate retroactively. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 259: This amendment makes it clear that credits or refunds are to be considered as allowed on the date on which the commissioner first signed the schedule of overassessments, provided the schedule was signed after May 28, 1928; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 260: This amendment provides for immediate collection of miscellaneous taxes in certain cases where the commissioner finds that the taxpayer designs quickly to depart from the United States, or to remove his property therefrom, or to conceal himself or his property therein, or to do any other act tending to prejudice or to render wholly or partially ineffective proceedings to collect such tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 261: Under this amendment a refund of miscellaneous taxes can not exceed the amount of the tax paid during the four years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or, if no claim is filed, then during the four years immediately preceding the allowance of the refund. The amendment provides that it shall not bar from allowance a claim for refund filed prior to the enactment of the bill if such claim would have been allowable had the amendment not been enacted. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 262: This amendment provides that in certain cases where, by reason of the filing of a claim or request for credit, the collection of an assessed tax was postponed, any credit against the tax so assessed shall not be considered void and any payment of the part of the tax the payment of which was so postponed shall not be considered as an overpayment; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 263: This amendment provides for the adjustment of a carrier's tax liability resulting from recapture payments after the Interstate Commerce Commission has certified to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the amount and receipt of such payments. If the amount of recapturable income so paid differs from the amount previously allowed as recovable in computing the tax liability of any carrier the commissioner is authorized to assess any deficiency attributable to such difference within two years from the date of certification, and any overpayment attributable to such difference may be refunded within such 2-year period, but not thereafter, unless claim for refund therefor is filed within the period. This amendment does not reopen cases which have already been closed under final closing agreements. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendment No. 264: Under existing law the limitation on prosecutions for offenses arising under the internal revenue laws is three years, except that in the case of offenses involving the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States the period is six years. The Supreme Court has recently held that under existing law the offense of attempting to defeat and evade income taxes does not necessarily involve the defrauding or attempting to defraud the United States, fraud not being an essential ingredient of such offense, and that, therefore, the 3-year limitation period is applicable instead of the 6-year limitation period. This amendment prescribes a 6-year period in the case of the offense of willfully attempting in any manner to evade or defeat any income tax or the payment thereof or the offense of willfully aiding or assisting in the preparation or presentation of false claims, documents, or returns. A 6-year period is also prescribed in the case of conspiracy to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat any tax or the payment thereof. The 6-year period is made to apply as well to these offenses when committed by officers of the United States. The House recedes with a clerical amendment.

On amendments Nos. 265 and 266: These amendments make clerical changes in section numbers; and the House recedes with clerical amendments.

On amendment No. 267: This amendment provides that in case taxes are paid by two or more persons, corporations, partnerships, or fiduciaries on the same income or the same estate the overpayment is to be credited or refunded regardless of any closing agreement entered into if claim therefor is filed within seven years from the date of payment; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 268, 269, and 270: These amendments make clerical changes in section numbers; and the House recedes with clerical amendments.

J. W. COLLIER,
CHARLES R. CRISP,
W. C. HAWLEY,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, this conference report comes up under the general rules of the House, and, of course, I am entitled to one hour's time. Any other Member of the House recognized in his own right would have one hour's time. It is in the power of the House to close debate and come to an immediate vote at any time the House orders the previous question, and I am sure the Speaker will recognize me, in charge of the report, to move the previous question.

I wanted to make this preliminary statement to see if I can get some agreement as to the amount of time we should occupy in debating the report. There is no one in the House who hates—if I may use that word—to make another speech as much as I do. I have had to talk a great deal during this Congress. This report, however, must be explained to the House. This duty devolves upon me, and it will take me 30 or 40 minutes to do this. I make this statement to give the House the information so they will have it in arriving at how much time we should have for debate on the report. May I ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley] what suggestion he has to make?

Mr. HAWLEY. We are inclined to accommodate the gentleman from Georgia, the acting chairman of the committee, and would ask what he suggests in the matter of time.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the majority leader, advises me he desires 15 minutes. Mr. Doughton, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, states he would like to have 10 minutes. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] has advised me he would like to have 10 or 15 minutes. I have several requests for 5 minutes. How many requests has the gentleman?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have at present requests for about one hour. If the gentleman from Georgia thinks one hour and a half on each side will be satisfactory, we will agree to that.

Mr. CRISP. I will agree to that, and, of course, if it is not consumed, and I am optimistic in assuming it will not be used, we can vote before the expiration of the time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand, only one vote is contemplated, and that will be to either adopt the conference report or reject if.

Mr. CRISP. My friend is correct. The conference report is not amendable. The House must either accept it in its entirety or reject it. If the report is rejected there will have to be another conference between the House and the Senate on the tax bill, and every item in it will be again open for consideration by the conferees.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. If the report has to be accepted or rejected, and we know generally what its substance is, why waste all the time in debate; why not take the vote and have it over with? The report is going to be adopted; why take up the three hours?

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman's statement is rather persuasive and appealing to me. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Gentlemen, I do not believe a bill of this magnitude should be passed without some explanation. The country is entitled to know something about it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be three hours of debate, if that much is required, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Hawley], and I may assure those opposed to the bill that I shall give them an equitable distribution of my one-half, and I know the gentleman from Oregon will act likewise, and I shall be compelled myself to consume at least 30 minutes of the time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield? Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman add to his request that at the end of the three hours of debate the previous question be considered as ordered?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, why is it necessary for our Democratic manager to yield part of his time to the Republican leader on the other side, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia]? Why does not the gentleman get his time from the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]?

Mr. SNELL. So far as I know, the gentleman has not been a Republican leader. He belongs on your side.

Mr. CRISP. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I shall expect the gentleman from New York to get his time from the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] need not be unduly excited about that statement.

Mr. SNELL. I was talking to the gentleman from Texas, not the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that there may be three hours' debate on the conference report, one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. LaGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the only opportunity the House will have to vote on any separate item will be to vote down the previous question. Would not the gentleman submit his unanimous consent to two parts, omitting, first, the part that provides that the previous question may be considered as ordered?

Mr. CRISP. My friend from New York is a diligent man and an able man, and familiar with the rules of the House. He knows that voting down the previous question would not give the House an opportunity to vote on a single item in this bill, that the only question before the House is to accept or reject the conference report.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman is right.
Mr. BURTNESS. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to ask the gentleman if it is contemplated as nearly as possible, within reasonable limits of time, to yield to those who oppose the conference report?

Mr. CRISP. I am sure that is so. I am sure that the House has confidence in the fairness of the gentleman from Oregon, and if he has control of half of the time that he will be just to those opposed, and I expect him, out of his time, to take care of those on his side of the House who desire to speak for or against the conference report, and I shall seek to do the same on this side.

Mr. HOWARD. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Will there be any oppor-tunity at any time during the consideration of this conference report for a Member on the floor to offer an amendment?

Mr. CRISP. There will not.

Mr. HOWARD. I simply wanted the information.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, in the event the conference report is voted down and the bill again be subject to conference, would not the Senate amendments be up for consideration in the House?

Mr. CRISP. All of them; if the conference report is rejected, the whole subject matter is before the House, and the House could concur, if it desired, in every one of the Senate amendments or take them up seriatim and consider them and ask for another conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I thank God we are not at war with any nation, but this is a more burdensome tax bill than had to be enacted during the late war.

While we are not at war, the suffering of the people of the United States as a whole is more acute than it was during the war, and your country and my country is not merely in a depression; we are in a critical crisis. The credit of the United States must be maintained, no matter what personal sacrifice it requires on the part of the citizenry of the United States. [Applause.] Gentlemen, that is the only reason why I will vote for this bill, for many of its provisions are obnoxious to me, and I would not support them in normal times.

Now, I am always delighted to yield to my colleagues, but I am going to make an exception this time, and I am not going to yield until I have completed my statement. [Applause.]

When the Ways and Means Committee began the consideration of a bill to balance the Budget, the Treasury estimated that there was a deficit of $1,241,000,000. Taking the estimate of the Treasury and allowing for $200,000,000 economy, the House passed a bill that the Secretary of the Treasury said he believed would balance the Budget.

When the bill went to the Senate the economic recovery became worse instead of better. Customs and excise-tax collections fell off, and the Treasury revised its estimate and concluded that the deficit for 1933 would be $1,476,000,000, or $235,000,000 more than the estimate when the House was considering the bill.

When the tax bill passed the House the Treasury estimated that it would provide $1,031,900,000. When the matter was being considered in the Senate, with the revised Treasury estimate, it was estimated that the House bill would only produce $856,200,000.

That is a broad view of the whole picture. Every thoughtful man knows that the welfare of every man, woman, and child in the United States, that the welfare of the country we all love demands a balanced Budget, and the Government receiving as much revenue as it pays out, because to-day we are paying out $7,000,000 every day more than the Government is receiving, and no government can maintain its dignity, its credit, its honor, the stability of its money unless such a situation is corrected. This bill seeks to correct that situation, and this bill will correct it. I do not believe any of your remedial temporary measures to aid the situation will amount to anything without a balanced Budget.

The bill, as it passed the Senate, was estimated to raise $1,117,000,000. The conference report before you on which your conferees agreed is estimated to raise $1,118,500,000, or $1,500,000 more than the Senate bill.

Let me give you some information as to the details of the conference report. The Senate added 270 amendments to the bill. 205 of which were purely technical, changing the number of some of the sections and changing the number of some of the cross sections, which, of course, was necessary. Where the Senate added new matter in the bill it required the renumbering of sections all through. Therefore, 205 of the Senate amendments were simply clerical in nature, changing the number of sections, having no substance in them at all, and it was simply pro forma to agree to them. Sixty-five of the Senate amendments may be said to be amendments containing real substance. Of those 65, 38 were agreed to by the House conferees, 16 were disagreed to, and the Senate receded, 7 were compromised in substance, and 4 were agreed to by the House conferees with minor amendments. The House conferees, assuming that the Budget had to be balanced, were driven to the necessity of accepting a number of the Senate amendments of real substance, for they had added new taxes to balance the Budget, and your conferees could not inject into that conference any new subject matters of taxation that were not in controversy between the two Houses. Therefore, your conferees were forced to take those amendments added by the Senate raising additional revenue, or bring in a bill that did not balance the Budget, which would have been calamitous to the United States. Therefore, your conferees agreed to them.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendments with slight changes as to the individual income taxes, and they are terrifically high, terrifically burdensome, running as high as 63 per cent. I hope business recovery will be such that they can be reduced.

The House won out on the matter of exemptions to married men. The Senate sought to reduce the exemption from $2,500 down to $2,000, but the House won out and the exemption for married men continues at $2,500. Your House conferees took the position that with the enormously increased normal income-tax rates, with these burdensome excise taxes, which would be passed on to the consumer and with wages being reduced throughout the United States, it was not fair to further reduce that exemption.

The corporation tax was changed a little from that provided in the House bill, and in that I think the House won a distinct victory. It was the most controversial matter in conference, to wit, consolidated and affiliated returns. When the bill passed the House the fiat corporation tax was 13½ per cent, and we had added the differentiation of a cent and a half for corporations making consolidated and affiliated returns.

The Senate was violently opposed to that provision, and favored consolidated returns at the same rate of taxation. The House conferees told the Senate conferees that we were adamant on that proposition, and there would be no agreement unless that principle was recognized. The conferees finally agreed to compromise, retaining the principle of consolidated and affiliated returns, fixed the flat corporation rate at 13% per cent and fixed the rate for consolidated returns at 14½ per cent, which places a penalty of threequarters of 1 per cent on corporations making consolidated and affiliated returns, which will give the House and the country at least an opportunity to know if making those returns is of substantial benefit to the corporation, information the House has long sought.

The House accepted the Senate provision taxing insurance companies.

The House accepted the Senate provision taxing bank checks. The House conferees sought to require a stamp if the matter was to be retained, thinking that was the most acceptable way. The Treasury took a different position. The Senate conferees would not yield, so that was agreed to just as it passed the Senate.

The House accepted the Senate amendment taxing gasoline 1 cent a gallon. I think both of those taxes are burdensome. I would not agree to either of those taxes under different circumstances, but this is an emergency. They both yield large amounts of revenue and we could not balance the Budget without them.

In this conference report are included many excise taxes levied on selected industries at high rates, which are estimated to yield $457,000,000. The following is a list of them: Manufacturers' excise taxes including lubricating oil, wort, tires, toilet preparations, furs, jewelry, automobiles, radio, mechanical refrigerators, sporting goods, firearms, matches, candy, chewing gum, soft drinks, gasoline, electrical energy, and imported oil, coal, lumber, and copper. Every one of these taxes is nothing in the world but a sales tax on selected industries. The Ways and Means Committee sought to prevent this necessity of selecting certain industries, which is discriminatory, and placing high sales taxes on them by proposing a general manufacturers' excise tax with a low rate on wholesale prices. No matter what your rates on income taxes and the corporation tax are, you can not raise the money to balance the Budget, even though you levy 100 per cent tax, where there is no net profit. So Congress was confronted with levying some kind of taxes that are sales taxes which will be passed on if the competition of the business does not prevent it.

Therefore, to save, to prevent some of these very nuisance taxes, these burdensome excise sales taxes, they brought in a bill which was broad in its base, with a low rate applying to all manufacturing enterprises, which we thought was equitable, which we thought was the fairest way to balance the Budget, a way that would least retard business recovery, but the House in its wisdom decided otherwise, and from the moment the House voted I have never raised my voice in advocacy of the manufacturers' excise tax, for I accepted the judgment of the House as final. I thought when we were advocating it that it was the best tax. I think so now, and I am satisfied, when the country feels the pinch of these special sales taxes on selected industries, it will think so, too. [Applause.]

The manufacturers' sales tax bill that we sought to pass in the House exempted all farm products, fertilizers, foods, raw products, wearing apparel, medicines, and farm implements, and as far as the average man was concerned, it was a luxury tax.

The House conferees, for the purpose of raising money and for that purpose only, accepted, with a substantial modification, the Senate's amendment to tax electric energy. The Senate provided for a 3 per cent gross tax on public utilities that sold electric energy. The conferees became convinced that that was inequitable; that it would destroy many of the companies; that men, women, and children throughout the United States holding stocks and bonds of those companies would lose their investment; and the conferees finally agreed on a 3 per cent sales tax on commercial and domestic consumers of electric energy, to be passed on, the companies to be the collecting agencies for the Government. Statistics before the Ways and Means Committee showed that the average cost to the domestic consumer for electricity was $3 a month. This tax will place a tax of 9 cents per month upon the average household consumer of domestic electricity. I regret it, but in this crisis, in this emergency, it is not burdensome, and are not all of our splendid, patriotic American citizens willing to bear some burden in this crisis, just as those brave, splendid, heroic, patriotic young men were willing to risk all, even life, for country in war?

Technically we do not have war, but the financial condition of the country is at war worse than it was in 1917 and 1918.

Another matter that was highly controversial, and the House conferees sought to carry out the will of the House, was the levying of one-quarter of 1 per cent on stock transfers. We tried to get one-quarter. We could not. We tried to get one-eighth. We could not. We would not agree to report this bill without some increase on those transactions. It was finally agreed in compromise that the rate should be 4 cents per share on transfers when the value of the certificate transferred was $20 or less, and when the value was above $20 there should be a tax of 5 cents. We got a 1-cent increase.

The State of New York has a transfer tax on stocks of 4 cents. So that 4 cents plus the 4 or 5 cents makes the taxes on the stock transfers 8 or 9 cents. Under the existing law where stock is loaned for short selling, it pays no tax. Under this bill stock loaned for short selling must pay a tax of 8 or 9 cents, and I hope it will break up that nefarious, outrageous practice which has contributed much to the economic undoing of the country in this crisis.

We also have a tax of 5 cents per $100 on future or commodity transactions, and I hope it will break up some of that practice and enable the agricultural interests of the country in the West and South to receive better prices for their commodities—cotton, wheat, hogs, and so forth.

The House adopted the Senate amendments on soft drinks, on furs, on jewelry, and in fact most of the other subject matters.

My friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] asked me specifically how the tax applied on furs. It applies only when furs are the chief component part of the article. It does not apply when fur is used only as trimming.

There was a tax on the manufacturing of yachts in the House bill. It was represented to your conferees that many people desiring yachts would have them built abroad and they would sail them in here and escape the payment of that tax. In lieu of that we took a tax on the use of yachts, and it is expected to yield more money than the tax on the construction of yachts. That will make those who are fortunate enough to have yachts pay a tax, whether the yachts are built in the United States or abroad.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CRISP. No. I decline to yield to anybody.

The Senate accepted the House provision with reference to the payment of foreign-tax credit. The Senate receded from its amendment exempting from taxation scaps and all mouth washes, and so forth, so that all of those matters are subject to tax under this bill.

The House succeeded in raising a tax of 1 per cent on transportation of oil by pipe line.

The House provision as to taxing broadcasting stations on leased wires was accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up any more time. I have not made a very connected, logical speech, but I am talking against time so as to give others an opportunity. I will not yield to anyone. I stated that, and I meant it.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman not explain the rubber-tire tax?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. I stated that before I commenced.

The House accepted the Senate amendment on the tax

The House accepted the Senate amendment on the tax on automobiles, on trucks, and on rubber tires. I personally thought the tax on tires excessive. I tried to get it modified and could not. I think automobiles and the users of automobiles are taxed more severely under this bill than any other industry in the United States.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I shall give just a summary of the bill. In my remarks right here I will extend a breakdown showing how much tax it is estimated will be yielded from each of the items in the bill, but I will not take the time now or trespass upon your patience to read it.

Total additional taxes and postal revenue.

It was estimated when the tax bill passed the House that the tax on individual incomes would raise $146,000,000.

The bill now before you is estimated to yield $178,000,000. On corporations, when it passed the House, we expected an increase of $31,000,000. In the bill before you it is $41,000,000.

Income-tax administrative changes: As it passed the House we expected to save $119,000,000. The bill before you saves $80,000,000. We lose on this item.

Estate and gift taxes: These are the same. The Senate did not change in the slightest the House provision on estate taxes and gift taxes, even in a technical way. They could find no flaw or defect in those provisions.

The manufacturers' excise taxes included in the bill, malt, wort, furs, toilet preparations, and so forth provided only $219,000,000 as it passed the House. The bill before you provides $457,000,000.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to balance the Budget we will have to accept it, and we will have to accept some of the most obnoxious taxes in the world to me, because they are the ones in the bill that produce large sums of money and provide the only way with which to get the money to balance the Budget. The House conferees had to accept them or bring back to you a bill that would not balance the Budget. Under the parliamentary situation the House conferees could not suggest new items for taxation. We were confined to considering those in controversy between the two Houses of Congress.

Miscellaneous taxes, telephone messages, stocks, and so forth: As it passed the House this was estimated to raise $180,000,000. The bill before you will raise $197,000,000.

Increased postage as it passed the House contemplated extra revenue to the amount of $155,000,000. The bill before you provides for $160,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, no Member of the House can condemn some of the provisions of this bill more strenuously than I do, but we face an emergency. It is the only way the stability of the American dollar and the country's credit can be maintained. Therefore I agreed to it.

Now, in conclusion, there are three or four tariff items in the bill. I did not think this was a tariff bill and opposed the incorporation of tariff items in it; but when the bill passed the House, the House sent over two tariff items, oil and coal. The Senate agreed to these two tariff items. Therefore, your conferees were impotent, they were bound, they could not eliminate them. There was no possibility of eliminating them from the bill. You, the House, had placed two tariff items in the bill.

The Senate adopted two amendments providing a tariff on lumber and copper, and they also included in the oil provision a tax on asphalt used in constructing roads. The House conferees were able to eliminate the tariff on asphalt. Therefore, there is no tax on the asphalt used by the States, counties, and municipalities in constructing highways.

Under a protective-tariff theory copper was clearly entitled to a tariff, though I did not think it ought to go in this tax bill. The Tariff Commission reported copper had made out a case. The Senate put it in, and the Senate conferees were adamant, so that was agreed to with an amendment providing that 15,000 tons of fluxing copper ore might come in free.

With the tariff on copper disposed of, we had a complete agreement except the lumber item. We had a hard fight on the lumber item. I did not favor a tariff on lumber; but, Mr. Speaker, when it reached the point where there would be no complete agreement without a tariff on lumber, and in view of the fact there were three tariff items in the bill besides lumber, to break the tie I voted for the tax on lumber that we might bring in this complete report, for I believed I could do nothing that would serve my country more than to have a speedy complete agreement on this tax bill and get it on the statute books at the earliest possible moment. [Applause,]

Now, my friend and valiant leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey] -and he knows he has both my admiration and my affection-would not sign the report on account of the tariff items and maybe one or two other matters that he disagreed to.

Now, that is the case. You are confronted with this situation-you must either vote for this report and accept it in its entirety or, if your judgment says it is bad and should not be adopted, you have the right-and if you believe that way, it is your duty-to vote against accepting the conference report; and that means that we start de novo in the consideration of every one of the Senate amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes. [Applause.] The gentleman from Georgia has made a very admirable and succinct report on the conference action. In 31 minutes even so able a gentleman as he could not cover a conference report of this length. I do not intend to repeat anything he has said so far as I can remember, but to call attention to some other matters that are important for the House to know.

In the preparation of this tax bill we sought sources of revenue where they existed and taxed them as much as we thought the traffic would bear, and in some instances I am afraid the rate has gone beyond that. We have also, in a very considerable portion of the bill, closed up gaps through which evasions of taxation were being effected, and, especially in the matter of disallowances of deductions, have effected increases in revenue.

The House proposed a normal tax at the rate of 2 per cent on the first $4,000 of taxable income, 4 per cent on the second $4,000, and 7 per cent on the remainder. The Senate changed the number of brackets from three to two and imposed 4 per cent on the first $4,000 of net taxable income and 8 per cent on the remainder of the taxable income, and in this the House concurred. This, according to the figures I have, will increase the revenue from that source approximately $63,000,000 more than the present law. The Senate very materially increased the rates of the surtaxes, beginning with the early brackets, but imposed the principal part of the burden upon the higher brackets. This change will earn $88,000,000 over the existing law. The House accepted the Senate amendment because it was necessary to do so in order to get sufficient revenue.

The House proposed an exemption for unmarried persons of $1,000 and for married persons of $2,500. The Senate proposed to reduce the $2,500 to $2,000, but the House did not concur.

The earned credit is entirely eliminated from the bill. You will remember that heretofore credits for earned income against the tax after it was computed were allowed on account of earned income. Such credits are not permitted in the bill as reported from conference.

Mr. KELLER. What is the effect of that? Mr. HAWLEY. It will increase the revenue from the normal tax about $27,000,000.

The small corporations had been entitled under the law heretofore to certain exemptions, but those exemptions have been eliminated altogether. We reduced such exemptions in the House, the Senate eliminated them altogether, and the House concurred, adding about $16,000,000 in revenue by this action.

There was in the House bill an elimination of the exemptions from surtaxes of moneys earned prior to March 1, 1913, and distributed after that date after the most recent earnings had been distributed. The Senate restored that provision and the House agreed, the reason being that all earnings accumulated prior to March 1, 1913, were accumulated before there was any income tax; and if this provision had not been inserted, then we would have been taxing incomes not taxable when the income tax law was passed and would be in the nature of retroactive taxation.

As to insurance companies, we agreed with the Senate action. The result of this agreement was to make a more even distribution of the burden between the smaller and the greater companies-between those building up reserves at a lower rate and those that were using a higher-

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman make a statement as to the action with reference to mutual companies?

Mr. HAWLEY. There was nothing in conference with respect to the mutual insurance companies, if I understand the purport of the question.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is there a tax on the profits of mutual insurance companies?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; the rate is 3% per cent under the present law.

The Senate added new taxes as follows: A tax on tires and inner tubes, to earn $33,000,000, the tax being 21/4 cents per pound on the weight of the tires and 4 cents on the weight of the tubes.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.
Mr. CLANCY. Is not that double taxation? There is a tax on the completed automobiles and then there is another tax, a second tax, on the tires and tubes. Does the gentleman think that is fair?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman is in error to this extent, that there are provisions in the bill that give credit for a tax paid on a completed article when a tax is collected on separate items, so that there is no double taxation. This proposal will earn $33,000,000.

The Senate added a tax on unfermented grape juice of 5 cents per gallon, which will not earn a very large amount. I do not have the exact figures. The tax on electrical energy was inserted in the Senate.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. HORR. Why was it provided that the tax should be collected from the consumer rather than from the vendor? Was any particular reason given that the collection should be made from the consumer rather than from the vendor?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three additional minutes. I can not take much time to answer questions in three minutes. It is collected for the Government by the vendor from the consumer, and would not the effect be the same whether it had been imposed upon the vendor and then added to the consumer's cost or collected directly from the consumer? It is much more easy to collect it from the source.

Mr. HORR. Would it not be much better to have it collected direct from the vendor, because the Government must ultimately go to the vendor for the money?

Collection of this tax under this bill will be made in each instance from the vendor, namely, the power company, whether the tax is levied on the company direct or on the

I fear there is hidden here something that has escaped the attention of the conferees, and that there is a grave evasion on the part of the power companies of the tax.

The statement that the ultimate consumer will pay taxes is true in most instances, but in this instance I am sure it is not. The rate or price at which electrical energy is sold has been established in many instances by public-utility departments in the different States.

These rates have been established for a considerable length of time and during the period when the country was working under normal conditions. In only a few instances have public utilities reduced rates on electrical energy, as have other industries.

All other industries have reduced the sale price of their products to the consumer. The public utilities in the main have kept their rates at the highest rate of charge specified by public-utilities commissions at a time when the Nation was prosperous.

These utilities should absorb the tax and not the consumer. This tax, if paid by the power companies, would only reduce the rate to where it should be. The power companies will not meet depression prices, unless compelled to do so. If the tax is levied against them and they complain, these companies will be compelled to go before the public-utility bodies and make a showing as to their rate adjustments.

This, of course, the companies do not want to do, as I am of the opinion that in their receipts with labor reduced in price in their industry, a showing would be made that would cause the public utilities departments of the several States to reduce the rates.

If this tax is levied against the consumer, as this bill provides, the company will attach the tax to the bill of the private consumer and still go on under its old rate established in prosperous times.

As a matter of fact, I am opposed to a tax on electrical energy of any kind. The people of our irrigated country will feel this burden heavily. The individual consumers will also be made to pay more than their proportionate share.

If I had my way about it, I would strike the entire section from this bill, and may I be recorded as opposed to any tax on electrical energy. I am opposed to many features of this bill and under extension of remarks I shall set forth my objections to many of the features contained in this

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not yield further. The Senate added a gasoline tax of 1 cent a gallon, to earn $150,-000,000. It added a tax on checks, 2 cents on each instrument drawn, to earn $78,000,000. To both of these the House agreed. The gentleman from Georgia has already spoken of the tax on boats.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.
Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman explain amendment No. 8, the tax on willful violation of the criminal laws. Why did the conferees change that?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Government collects revenue from income irrespective of its source. It does not inquire as to the source of the income except as to the accuracy of the computation. All income is subject to taxation from whatever source derived.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Mr. HAWLEY. I regret, but I have not the time to yield further at this time.

Mr. GLOVER. It is on the very question the gentleman is discussing and I would like to have some information about it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I regret I have not the time to yield.

The Senate increased the rates on what is known as second-class mail matter, which, with the increase on postage, will earn about $160,000,000.

The House conferees yielded on the items enumerated, since the amounts were essential to balance the Budget.

The House agreed to the reduction of the tax on candy from 5 per cent to 2 per cent on the sale price; also to the same change in the tax on chewing gum. The reduction of the tax of 9 cents per gallon to 6 cents on fountain sirups was approved.

The House proposed a tax on telegraph, telephone, cable, or radio dispatch messages of 5 cents on messages costing from 30 cents to 50 cents, and 10 cents on messages costing more than 50 cents. The Senate struck out the lower bracket and proposed a tax of 10 cents on telephone messages from 50 cents to $1, of 15 cents from $1 to $2, and 20 cents on those over $2; of 5 per cent on the charges made for telegraph messages and 10 cents on all cable and radio messages. To these rates the House agreed. These rates will earn about $22,500,000.

The Senate proposed that admissions should be exempt only to 41 cents, in lieu of the House proposal of 46 cents, and the House yielded. At the rate of 1-cent tax on each 10 cents of price of admissions, the yield will be $42,000,000.

As I recall, the gentleman from Georgia discussed the other changes in taxes and time will not suffice for me to comment further.

In conclusion, the justification for the adoption of the conference report is the absolute necessity to raise sufficient revenue to balance the Budget. The duty of doing this now devolves upon this great body of men, and I feel certain that the dependency of the country upon our approval will be justified by the outcome of the vote soon to be taken. The maintenance of the credit of the country is basal to all other credit—to the promotion of the economic recovery, including revival of industry, trade, and commerce, reemployment of labor, increased prices to the farmer, and the prosperity of our people in general. The country appeals to us to serve it faithfully in this emergency, and I am confident that appeal is not made in vain. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the majority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is usual, I am aware, for a Member who occupies the position I now occupy to say that he regrets he can not agree with his colleagues on the conference committee. I want to open my brief remarks by saying that I do not regret that I can not agree with them.

In discussing these tariff items—and that is what I want principally to discuss in the brief time I have-may I call the attention of the House, first of all, to a joker which appears in section 601, title 4, of the bill, which none of you knew was in this bill.

The provision in this bill is that these tariff taxes carried in the bill shall not be considered as a duty under the flexible provisions of the tariff law. This is a joker. did not know it was there until the present moment. This makes it impossible for the Tariff Commission to review in any way or to reduce or to increase the tariff provisions in the bill.

This is a bill which is supposed to raise taxes in order to meet the tremendous deficit which now confronts us; and as I must be brief. I think I shall just read from the Senate debate on the lumber item in the bill, at page 11163 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 20, 1932.

Senator Jones had the floor, and he is the author of the

Mr. Smith. The Senator is pleading now for pure protection and not for revenue. If there is any revenue, it will be incidental. What he is pleading for is that there shall be an embargo or stoppage of this foreign lumber, so that the producers of the American product may have the advantage of the American market.

And then came the answer from the Senator who is responsible for this lumber item, and this is what he said:

I do not think it is an embargo; but, practically, that is what I am appealing for. I will say that frankly to the Senator.

Mr. Smith. It is very refreshing to hear the Senator state just what we are driving at in the tax bill.

Now, that is what we did in conference. We agreed to an embargo tariff on lumber, admitted by its author in the Senate to be an embargo tariff.

We import just 4 per cent of our production of lumber. and we export twice as much lumber as we import. The effect of this embargo tariff on lumber, and that is what it is, will make it necessary for Canada to export the lumber she has been sending to us to the world markets where we have been selling our lumber, and we will lose more than we make out of it. If we can export lumber to the Orient and compete there with Canada, and we do, why can we not compete here in our own markets?

Here is an item from the Portland Oregonian of May 5 last. This news was furnished to the Portland Oregonian, the organ of the lumber interests, by its news bureau here in Washington:

The consequence of the duty, under the revenue bill, will enable the Pacific Northwest industry to market rough, low-grade lumber, as Canadian mills can not afford to pay the $3 duty.

This is what the duty is for, and this organ of the lumber interests of the Northwest frankly admits it; and, in conference, we agreed to this indefensible embargo tariff.

The bill now carries, with the approval of the conferees, if we approve it, duties on lumber and duties on copper so objectionable in their character that they were not even included in the Hawley-Smoot bill. Why, we rejected here in the House the tariffs placed in the Senate, or rather we agreed to the lower rate in the Senate on lumber.

This bill now carries a tariff on coal and a tariff on oil. No bill has ever carried these items before in the history of the country.

The tariff on coal is an embargo tariff. The tariff on oil will yield revenue, but not as much revenue as it would yield in the form it left the House, because we have agreed in this report-at least my colleagues have so agreed. I would not sign it-to cut that tariff that we imposed here in the House, and which was really a revenue tariff, 50 per cent. It is negligible now. It will yield negligible returns; and, if you gentlemen want protection for oil, it gives no protection.

This oil tariff went in the bill originally as a tax item, but it was the vehicle which led to these trades and this logrolling, and which resulted in placing in these other tariffs in the bill. None of them could get into a regular, highprotection Republican tariff-not one of them-and they failed to do so two years ago.

This tax bill, intended to raise revenue to balance the Budget, imposing these burdensome taxes, has resolved itself into another Hawley-Smoot tariff bill

The rates in the Hawley-Smoot bill, which paralyzed international trade, which led to these retaliatory tariffs, are completed in this second Hawley-Smoot bill, and the ruin of international trade is accelerated and eventually will be complete.

I am not going to burden you with the evidence I have assembled. It appears in the Senate proceeding, in the speeches of the Senator from Maryland, Mr. Typings. The proof from South American countries, the expressions of the President of Chile, the resolutions and speeches in the Chilean Congress, which is already in existence-I can furnish you with all of it. I can furnish you with proof absolutely that if these tariffs go on as provided for in this bill, they propose to call in the near future a conference with South and Central American republics to retaliate and place an embargo on cotton and automobiles and other things that they buy from us.

I have proof, although I am not going to burden the RECORD with it, from Canada, which still buys from us; they are contemplating additional retaliatory tariffs against us, placing an embargo on articles that we get from Canada and do not produce ourselves. They propose to refuse to agree to the St. Lawrence waterway treaty as long as we have this tax on lumber.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. For a brief question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he has noticed any reaction by the Canadian people to the retaliatory tariffs of Premier Bennet?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I know what they say they are going to do to us, and they will do it.

Mr. MAJOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MAJOR. How much revenue is it estimated will be produced by this tariff on lumber?

Mr. RAINEY. There will not be any revenue-some claim a million dollars, but it is an embargo tariff.

Mr. CANFIELD. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. RAINEY. Now, we yielded in this bill to the Senate. Their bill protects the stock gamblers in New York. We yielded. This Senate bill protects the prosperous producer of electricity at the expense of the consumers. We yielded. The differential between consolidated returns and individual returns of corporations is retained in the bill at only threequarters of a cent. We sent it over with a cent and a half. We yielded in the interest of the great corporations.

In making the fight, to which the gentleman from Georgia referred in his speech—

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, the gentleman from Massachusetts stood by me in the fight when I was deserted by both of my Democratic colleagues. I have great admiration for the patriotism of my friend from Massachusetts, and I am not going to say anything unkind to my own colleagues on this committee, save that I heard for the first time from the gentleman from Georgia that he made a fight against this lumber tariff. I heard no word from him against it in the conference, although it was a late hour when we reached that item, until he and my other Democratic colleagues both voted against me on this item. They did not help me in this fight.

I thought when we yielded to the stock gamblers, and to the great electric companies, who operate at a profit, when we yielded in the matter of bank checks, so that the drawer of a 50-cent check pays as much as the drawer of a $25,000 check, when we yielded on the consolidated item, when we yielded to the Senate all the way through—and this is a Senate bill—I thought that they might concede something that was in the House bill, something that men on both sides of this aisle stood for.

I remember the fight made against these tariffs by my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] on this floor. As these tariffs commenced to come in he stood here in this well, and at this desk where I now stand, and protested most vigorously. He stood at the bridge, defying the enemy on both sides, but he stood there when that press gallery was full of press representatives, and all through the country the newspapers everywhere carried his dramatic speech, his appeal to Members on this side not to make a tariff bill out of this tax bill. But at the midnight hour, when no representatives of the press were present, when the real test came, he did not fight. I had such an admiration for the gentleman from Georgia, and I have it yet—he is still my friend, and this is not interfering with our personal friendshipthat when he stood here, like Ajax defying the lightning, it so thrilled and impressed me that I came down here and stood by his side and said, "I am right behind Charlie CRISP"; but when the real fight came, he was not right behind me.

Mr. Speaker, no man deserves any credit for being honest. I never have paraded my honesty on this floor. I simply act. As to my courage, you can form your own conclusions.

And now I want to say to my friends on the Democratic side that I may be the last Democrat, but I am going to be a Democrat to the last. [Applause.] If this conference report is voted down by this House, I propose to offer an amendment instructing the conferees to omit this tariff on lumber and to instruct them in other particulars.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAINEY. My time is up.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Does the gentleman think the sales tax could be put into the bill if this conference report is defeated?

Mr. RAINEY. That would not be possible; I wish it could be done.

TARIFF COMMISSION REPORT ON LUMBER

As late as November 9, 1931, the Tariff Commission reported that—

The differences in costs of production, including transportation to the principal markets in the United States of the domestic article and a like or similar article produced in the principal competing country (Canada), do not warrant a change in the duty of $1 per thousand feet board measure.

On December 2, 1931, President Hoover approved these findings. No wonder the joker to which I have been just referring appears in this bill. Under this report of the Tariff Commission the Tariff Commission would be compelled to immediately reduce these rates and the rates would then be only one-half what they will be if the conference report is approved and the $3 per thousand feet is added.

It is the farmer who uses lumber and the small-home owner who builds his home in the suburbs of great cities and pays for it on the installment plan who sustains this added burden. More pretentious structures are not built of wood. This burden is imposed upon the farmer and the small-home owner.

FALLING PRICES

Prices are falling. Lumber prices last year fell 13.3 per cent; but during the same period of time the prices the farmers received for their products declined 24.5 per cent, and the effect of this bill is to subsidize the lumber interests of the Northwest at the expense of the farmers whose losses in the rates they get for their products declined almost 100 per cent more than lumber prices declined.

But it is a well-known fact that this increase in the tariff on lumber will be pyramided. By the time it reaches the farmer and the small-home owner it means an increase of from $8 to $10 in the amount he must pay per thousand feet board measure for lumber.

DESTRUCTION OF TIMBER

If timber is of any value in the matter of regulating temperatures or rainfall, or if it is of any value in flood control, this bill tends to deprive us of this source of national wealth. It encourages the destruction of timber.

On January 17, 1932, our Forestry Department published a pamphlet in which they estimated that we are now cutting our saw timber six times as fast as we are growing it. They also found in their report as a result of their investigations that our supply of virgin saw timber at its present rate of depletion will last about 40 years. The rate of depletion, if Canadian timber is excluded, will, of course, be accelerated, and it is not unreasonable to insist that in 25 or 30 years, if the rates provided in this conference report are adopted, our virgin saw timber will entirely disappear.

LUMBER NOT A SUBJECT FOR A PROTECTIVE TARIFF

There has been no increase in importations of lumber. On the contrary, there has been a marked decrease. In 1928 our imports of lumber amounted to 1,493,000,000 feet board measure. In 1931 our imports had fallen off to 721,-000,000 feet board measure. At the time the Hawley-Smoot bill was passed, in which they were refused the protection these conferees now give them, twice as much lumber per year was being brought in as is coming in now.

ELECTRICAL ENERGY

The bill as it passed the Senate with reference to electrical energy contained this clause:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electric power plants a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold.

The tariff conferees kindly adjusted this tax so that there would be no doubt at all about who was to pay it. Under this clause in the Senate bill, to which, of course, the great power companies objected, they would have been compelled to absorb this tax and could not have increased their price to consumers. Under the report which you are asked to approve here to-day, this clause has been rewritten so that the consumer is "required" to pay and the producers, now enjoying unconscionable profits, are relieved entirely.

This report now submitted to the House for approval is a complete surrender so far as the House conferees could make it to the stock-market gamblers, the great power companies, the railroads and the great corporations, and to the lumber interests of the Northwest.

It compels the poor man to pay more for his coal with which he heats his house in the winter months. It compels the small-home builder and the farmer to pay more for their lumber. It compels the user of copper utensils and copper wire to pay more for his copper. It compels the consumers of gasoline to pay more for their gasoline. It compels the man who draws a check for $1 to pay as much in taxes as the rich man who draws a check for $25.

I made the best fight I could in conference against all these objectionable measures. I realize the importance of balancing the Budget, but the propositions to which I am calling attention contribute nothing toward balancing this Budget. These tariff items are embargo items, and they decrease our revenues.

But this conference report, under parliamentary law, must either be voted up or voted down. There will be only one vote on it. It will be impossible to vote for these separate items, either for or against them. If the conference report is defeated, then I propose to ask the House to instruct its conferees, and I shall at once interpose the following motion to instruct the conferees, which corrects in a measure some of the injustice to which I have been calling attention, and does not deduct one dollar from the amount of revenues this bill will yield.

I will propose the following motion:

That the House conferees be instructed to insist in the matter of the tax on electrical energy that if any tax is carried in the bill it be substantially as follows:

"There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electric power plants a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold," and to insist that their report carry no clause requiring that such tax be passed on to the consumers.

That the tax on lumber carried in the Senate bill and approved in the conference report be entirely eliminated.

That there be no stamp tax of any kind on checks for $25 and less than that amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, balance the Budget!

This slogan now so well known throughout the world originated with the President of the United States nearly a year ago. To-day we will see the beginning of the accomplishment of his purpose to balance the Budget. It makes no difference who claims credit, it makes no difference who introduces bills here of a reconstruction nature or to promote the reestablishment of public confidence. Public confidence will be restored when the Budget is balanced under the leadership of President Hoover. [Applause on the Republican side]. We do not care who tries to take the credit away from him. The people will give the credit where it is due, and it is due to the present courageous occupant of the White House. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] That is a fine laugh, gentlemen on the Democratic side, coming from men who are anxious to raid the Public Treasury in behalf of a possible presidential candidate. Certainly, if you men want to laugh and talk partisan politics, I am with you, and if you want to talk patriotism I shall stand behind you. [Laughter on Democratic side]. I am agreeable to that kind of laughter, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to see my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Gran-FIELD! occupying the Chair as Speaker pro tempore and endeavoring to maintain order among his Democratic partisans. [Cries of "Vote!"] Now, Mr. Speaker, I do demand order. I will not be taken off my feet by any gentlemen who demand a vote in the middle of an opportunity given a person under debate to speak in this House.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. You may just as well start with that premise. The trouble with some of you Democrats is that there are not enough on our Republican side who are willing to tell you where you get off. I am willing to tell you at all times where you get off, and this is one of the times when you can not take the credit away from the President of the United States in his move for a balanced Budget. I yield now to my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. Howard] very briefly, and only to the two gentlemen now on their feet, because I want to tell you something about this conference report.

Mr. HOWARD. Only for the purpose of offering to the gentleman from Massachusetts the suggestion that out in our country it is very difficult to win a smile from an enemy by hurling an insult at him.

Mr. TREADWAY. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I rose merely to ask the gentleman whether he does not think he would get better order and more appreciation if he discussed the bill instead of partisan politics? [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I agree with the gentleman, and I shall be delighted to discuss the bill, but I say the only reason for a reference to partisan politics comes from the fact that your own Speaker is trying to run for the presidential nomination on a partisan platform, and whether you like it or not, my colleagues, these are the facts.

Mr. Speaker, the only excuse we have for presenting this conference report to you to-day is emergency. It is an unjust bill. We admit that. It is an inequitable bill. It simply gets back to the fact that the House made a very serious blunder when it refused to accept the original proposition offered by the Ways and Means Committee of a manufacturers' excise tax. [Applause.] However, the manufacturers' tax was not in conference, and of the choice of two evils we have presented to you practically the Senate bill. The reason we selected the Senate amendments to a very large extent is the fact that they raise more revenue. This is the only excuse for many of the items that are indefensible as matters of just taxation. We do not claim these rates are just or equitable. They are of emergent necessity, which the gentleman from Georgia so well described.

I heartily agree with my colleague on the conference committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], in his reference to the tariff items. The contribution that we will receive from those tariff items is largely a contribution from the New England and eastern section of the country. It is estimated the four tariff items will yield only six and a half million dollars, $5,000,000 estimated from oil, and a million five hundred thousand dollars from the other three items too small to include a tariff in a tax bill.

They have but one merit, and that is they forestall any effort on the part of the Democratic Party to try to criticize the Republican Party for writing tariff planks in the future. [Applause.] Those items are contributed very largely by Democratic influence, both in the House, in the Senate, and in the conference, and they are not any feature fairly within the scope of a tax bill.

There are other very disturbing items to the section of the country which I represent, one of them particularly the tax on checks, but there again we were not dealing justly. We were dealing with the financial emergency needs, and when the Treasury Department and our experts told us there were $78,000,000 to be secured from the 2-cent check stamp tax, we agreed to it. I think that in the long run the banking interests of the country will be satisfied with the method under which that tax is to be collected. It is a hard thing to put up to them at the present time, but nevertheless it is probably the most satisfactory in the end.

Now, we come to the gasoline tax. There is great dispute whether or not the gasoline tax is one that is fair for the States to levy or for the Federal Government to levy. Personally I always feel that any tax to be levied by the Federal Government takes precedence, and, therefore, I think the States should yield where necessary. It is a serious situation that in some States now, between the two taxes that we are levying in this bill on gasoline, and the taxes that you Democrats propose to levy in the Garner presidential candidate bill, that those intrude, under the theory of the States, upon their rights to tax gasoline. Some States now will reach nearly 10 cents a gallon on gasoline—an exorbitant tax.

I want to add in connection with the gasoline item that it is estimated it will bring in $150,000,000 in revenue. Therefore, again, we were obliged to accept the rates in order to secure the desired balanced Budget.

The conferees were in absolute harmony. The 10 conferees worked, as you have been told, 14 hours practically steady on this conference report, and while perhaps the country may be giving the conferees some credit, we, in turn, want to give a large measure of credit to the experts who assisted us in that labor and that tremendously straining undertaking.

Possibly the House conferees may claim one outstanding credit, in that we insisted upon the maintenance of the exemption at $2,500 for married men. The surtax and normal-tax brackets are indefensible other than on the ground of emergency. It is as an emergency measure that the conferees appeal to the American people or those subject to Federal taxation to accept this bill in the patriotic spirit in which it has been written under the leadership of President

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I desire to correct a reference made later by my friend and colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. McCormack. In the first place, let me say it was not according to committee etiquette that he should have referred to what transpired in an executive meeting of the Ways and Means Committee. It is true that in the first instance I voted for a tariff on imported oil and stated on the floor my reason for doing so. It was in effect that the citizens of Massachusetts were sufficiently patriotic to stand the burden of the expense. However, at a later date, when it became apparent that Members of the House were voting in a sectional way, it was only fitting that I should do the same, and I then announced that I should vote against the oil tariff. Let me add further that an argument was made by the acting chairman of the committee, Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, that by voting against the oil schedule in the bill we would gain votes on the floor. This proved to be incorrect, as we lost support through this oil tariff item. The effort, however, to secure support of the oil item in the committee was made by the Democratic chairman.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], unnecessarily inject into the debate a strictly partisan argument. Nobody has any greater respect for the gentleman than I, but I am sorry that on this occasion the gentleman saw fit to make the direct partisan references that he did.

The gentleman says that the tariff in the bill is due to the Democratic influence. I deny that allegation. Furthermore, such an allegation should not come from the gentleman from Massachusetts. The fault in this bill, as far as tariff is concerned, let me frankly state, lies with the Ways and Means Committee of the House. When a tariff on oil was put into the bill, and I opposed it, a journey was started which brought in coal, which later brought in lumber and copper. The vote on putting oil into the bill in the Ways and Means Committee was 15 to 9, and my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], was one of the 15 who voted to put oil into the bill. [Applause.]

Therefore the gentleman is the last man in the world to criticize tariff in this bill or the manner in which the provisions came into the bill. Of the nine members who voted against including a tariff in the bill, eight were Democrats.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman care to explain in what manner the oil item was voted in? The conferences of the Ways and Means Committee in executive session are supposed to be confidential, but I am willing to have our records explained here.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts made the statement to the press that he voted for it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will make this statement to my friend, with his permission, that under the leadership-

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not yield for an argument. If the gentleman wishes to ask a question, I will yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. Who proposed that we try to get votes in this House as a result of putting oil in?

Mr. McCORMACK. I know nothing about that.
Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I do. I know definitely and positively the gentleman from Georgia was the man.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman can make that statement in his own time. If the gentleman starts making statements, there are likely to be recriminations, and I do not want to enter into that; because if such statements are made, they are liable to go on to the gentleman's side of the House. As far as the gentleman from Massachusetts is concerned, he is the last man in the House who shuold attack putting a tariff in the bill, because the gentleman himself voted for the tariff on oil in the Ways and Means Committee. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not yield any more. I only had five minutes.

Personally, I shall not vote for this conference report. I am going to vote against the conference report in order to have an opportunity to vote on the tariff on lumber and the tariff on copper. We can not get at coal and oil. Coal and oil were in the bill that passed the House, and the Senate has concurred. The only question involved is the differences between the two branches. We have never had a vote in this House on lumber and we have never had a vote in this House on copper. I think the membership of this House should be permitted to have a vote on whether or not we want to include four tariff provisions instead of two tariff provisions.

I voted for the manufacturers' excise tax. I still think it is the fairest and most equitable tax under existing circumstances [applause], but when that went out other taxes had to come in in order that the Budget might be balanced. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts, I agree with my friend, the gentleman from Georgia, and from the outset I have agreed with everyone else who has advocated that we should balance the Budget for the fiscal year 1933, but I have never thought that a revenue bill should be used for tariff purposes.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said the four tariff provisions will raise for the Treasury $6,500,000, but he does not tell you how much it is going to cost the people of the country, which cost will not go into the Treasury but goes into the pockets of those who benefit from the tariffs.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BALDRIGE].

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope we have calmed down, because this is no partisan talk I intend to give. I want to give some very interesting and important information to the Members of the House concerning a statement by Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania. It will prove very interesting to every Member here who comes from a district where they have dairies, creameries, or large pay rolls.

We did not put in the 2-cent tax on checks in the House. The committee defeated any sort of a proposition like that. However, the Senate did put in the 2-cent tax on checks, and at that time Senator REED made a most important and interesting statement with respect to the farm situation and in regard to the creameries, dairies, and in regard to large pay rolls, showing how the 2-cent tax on checks might not affect these institutions. I would like to read the paragraphs, because I think most of us are confronted with this problem back home, and I think it is very important that we meet the situation. The Senate, in passing this 2-cent tax, relied on Senator Reen's statements, and I know we can also.

On page 11420 of the RECORD, Senator REED said:

proposal to put a tax of 2 cents on a check of 50 or 60 cents, given to a farmer's wife in payment for eggs that she sells, is equivalent to a proposal to put a 4 or 5 per cent sales tax on that small transaction.

transaction.

I do not think anybody in this Chamber wants to accomplish that result, but I want to suggest that it is not a necessary result of the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance. As Senators will see, this check tax in section 741 applies only to drafts, orders, or checks drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company.

Out in Ohio, I am told by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], there is at least one company which follows the practice of giving to the people who sell poultry and eggs an order for the payment of the money on a form such as that I hold in my hand, drawn upon the drawer itself. This concern is called the Brownell Co., and they give this order:

Pay to the order of__

That is addressed to the Brownell Co., and marked "Payable at the Washington Savings Bank, Washington Court House, Ohio." I am told that those orders are given in very large numbers the Washington Savings Bank, Washington Court House, Ohio."

I am told that those orders are given in very large numbers every day.

If they were drawn on the bank, they would take a 2-cent stamp, under the provision of this bill; but being drawn on this company, they are not taxable, and the Treasury would so hold.

At the end of the day all of these orders which have been honored at the bank are lifted by a single check drawn on the bank itself, and the purchaser pays the 2 cents on that check. So that it is perfectly possible for these farm cooperatives and for all purchasers of dairy products, poultry, and eggs throughout the country to use this form of order, which will not require any stamp; and I can say with confidence, because I have consulted the Treasury, that it would not require a stamp.

I am in full sympathy with the intention of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] in offering his amendment; but I hope it will not be adopted, because the people he wants to protect can protect themselves, and the people we want to tax—you and me and all of us who draw checks in small amounts sometimes—might very well pay the 2 cents for convenience.

However, on orders in the form of that to which I referred, it is perfectly clear to me—and the Treasury agrees—that the order is not on a bank or banker or trust company, and consequently is not subject to the tax.

Mr. Reed. Mr. President, so that what we are saying may be understandable to those who read the Congressional Record, I ask that there may be put into the Record at this time the form of order about which I have been talking, which is nontaxable.

The Vice President, Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Main office

Washington C. H., Ohio

Main office

Washington C. H., Ohio

The Brownell Co., poultry and eggs. Highest price for quality.

No. 6951 ___193__

Pay to the order of _______ dollars
The Brownell Co.
Payable at the Washington Savings Bank, Washington C. H.,

Ohio.

Mr. Reed. Mr. President, having put into the Record a copy of the nontaxable order, I would like to have printed in the Record the bank check which takes up the many orders at the close of each day, and which, of course, would be taxable with a 2-cent stamp under the Senate committee amendment.

The that this he published in the Record at this point.

I ask that this be published in the RECORD at this point. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Brownell Co., eggs and live poultry

No. ___19__ Washington C. H., Ohio, _____ ___dollars For_____ The Brownell Co., Ву __

To the Washington Savings Bank, 56-366 Washington C. H., Ohio.

He thus shows the definite way checks can be drawn through the farmers' cooperatives, dairies, creameries, and how large pay rolls can be handled this way to eliminate the 2-cent tax on checks.

Now, gentlemen, I wish to call that to your attention, because I think it is important. In Omaha we have one creamery which puts out 1,200,000 checks every year. A small creamery in Superior, Nebr., puts out 750,000 checks a year, which will mean $15,000 taken from that little community. Here is a definite way that the Treasury has agreed with Senator REED to handle the 2-cent tax on checks. You will find this at pages 11763 and 11764 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, May 27.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BALDRIGE. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not a fact that the conferees have agreed that the 2-cent tax shall be collected at

Mr. BALDRIGE. Yes; that is true, but the maker of the check pays the 2-cent tax in any event.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the order is not drawn on a bank, the 2-cent tax does not apply to it at all.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Yes; that is correct.
Mr. WHITLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BALDRIGE. I yield.

Mr. WHITLEY. Will the gentleman insert in the RECORD the form of order he has spoken about?

Mr. BALDRIGE. Yes; I have the form here and will put it in the RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include herein a form of private check that is not taxable. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The check is as follows:

[Sample check—not valid] THE NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

To Edward L. Rossiter, Treasurer.

New York, N. Y., January 15, 1932.

Pay to the order of:

Payable at the option of the holder through—

10-2 The Marine Trust Co. (Bank of Buffalo Branch) of Buffalo, 29-1 New York State National Bank, Albany, N. Y.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Mouser].

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, the more I listen to the reasons actuating the distinguished conferees representing this House in agreeing to the present tax bill now before us for consideration the more I am convinced I was right when I was one of 64 who voted against it. I voted against the bill in order that we might again consider some of the objectionable nuisance taxes contained in that bill. If that bill was awful, this bill is terrible.

I can not justify adding to the burden of increased electrical costs to every consumer in this country. I can not understand why the utility has been relieved of that burden and the burden passed on to the consumers.

We say one of the causes of the present depression is because people have hoarded their money; they are afraid to put it in banks, because the banks may fail, and they have their money in deposit boxes in the banks. I want to say to you that this 2-cent stamp tax on checks will drive more money into hoarding; it will cripple and discourage business, and very little money will be paid out through the medium of checks. People will withdraw their money, put it into safe-deposit boxes, and go to the boxes and get the cash in order to pay their living expenses.

I want it understood that when I vote against this conference report to-day I am not voting against balancing the Budget, but I am voting for our conferees to go back and consult with the conferees of the Senate and not permit the Senate to dictate further obnoxious nuisance taxes into the bill. [Applause.]

I am glad we have one old-fashioned Democrat in this House, the distinguished majority leader, who will get up on his hind legs in the well of this House and say, "I am a Democrat, and I refuse to write into a revenue bill embargo tariff provisions." [Applause.] I think the majority Members ought to back up their distinguished leader and refuse to take a stand which can not help but injure the party they represent. The Republicans were not in control when these provisions were added. When it came to considering high protective rates, we have seen the Democratic House and the Democratic leadership, acting through their conferees, who constitute a majority of the committee, put higher embargo tariffs in this bill than have heretofore been written into legislation. I do not think it is going to be harmful for these distinguished members of the Ways and Means Committee who are conferees to again go back and discuss these controversial matters.

We have got the cart before the horse. How do we know how much money it is going to take to balance the Budget? Let us see how much economy we are going to put into effect, and then vote for a reasonable tax measure, not such an unconscionable tax bill as the one now under consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NoLAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that no revenue bill can be passed which does not contain some provisions that are objectionable. The trouble with this bill is that it contains more objectionable provisions than are necessary.

The bill contains certain tariff items which are indefensible. Not only are they excessive but they violate the principle for which the Republican Party has long contended.

In 1930, when we had a general tariff revision, we provided a flexible-tariff provision which was expected to "take the tariff out of politics." The President, announcing that he would sign the tariff bill-New York Times, June 15, 1930-

On the administrative side I have insisted, however, that there should be created a new basis for the flexible tariff, and it has been incorporated in this law. Thereby the means are established for objective and judicial review of these rates upon principles laid down by the Congress, free from pressures inherent in legislative

Thus the outstanding step of this tariff legislation has been the reorganization of the largely inoperative flexible provision of 1922 into a form which should render it possible to secure prompt and scientific adjustment of serious inequities and inequalities which scientific adjustment of serious inequities and inequalities which may prove to have been incorporated in the bill.

Without a workable, flexible provision, we would require even more frequent congressional tariff revision than during the past. With it the country should be freed from further general revision for many years to come. Congressional revisions are not only disturbing to business, but with all their necessary collateral surroundings in lobbles, logrolling, and the activities of group interests are disturbing to public confidence.

I believe that the flexible provision can within a reasonable time remedy inequalities; that this provision is a progressive advance and gives great hope of taking the tariff away from politics, lobbying, and logrolling.

If the revenue bill is passed containing these tariff provisions, it will show that the flexible provision has failed utterly to meet the situation. On lumber, one of the four items upon which tariff duties are imposed in the revenue bill, the Tariff Commission has made a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the foreign and domestic cost of production under the flexible tariff provision.

Only a few months ago, on November 9, 1931, the Tariff Commission rendered a report of their exhaustive investigation of lumber, which took 18 months and cost more than $27,000 inclusive of the general overhead of the commission. They stated that on the basis of the facts as found by their investigation, there was no justification for increasing the duty on lumber.

The commission concluded its report by saying:

The commission obtained costs of production for the year 1929. This period was representative of conditions prevailing during several years preceding and also of conditions prevailing during 1930.

The commission finds that the facts with regard to the difference in costs of production, including transportation to the principal markets in the United States, of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article produced in the principal competing country, as disclosed by the investigation herein reported, covering the year 1929, do not warrant a change in the duty of $1 per thousand feet board measure, expressly fixed by statute on timber hewn, sided, or squared, otherwise than by sawing, and round timber used for spars or in building wharves; sawed lumber and timber not specially provided for; all the foregoing, if of fir, sprue, pine, hemlock, or larch. The commission finds that the facts with regard to the differ-

On December 2, 1931, the President of the United States approved this report.

The tariff on lumber included in the revenue bill overthrows entirely the findings of the Tariff Commission and the President's indorsement.

The existing flexible-tariff provision was advocated by the Republicans in both bodies of Congress, and in spite of this fact this proposed tariff has been supported in direct contravention of the findings of the Tariff Commission which were approved by the President.

Before the Senate Finance Committee, when Colonel Greeley, of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, was testifying and pleading for a duty on lumber, Senator Couzens asked (p. 637):

What rule did you use to arrive at these rates which you ask for?

Colonel Greeley replied that the $3 rate asked represented-the difference in cost of production and the difference in exchange, plus a little extra benefit that we felt was due as an emergency measure on account of the unemployment.

Colonel Greeley produced no figures to show any difference in the cost of production, gave no substantial evidence of any advantage or disadvantage on account of the exchange, and his case therefore rests solely upon the "little extra benefit" which he feels is due the lumber industry.

The only new argument advanced by Colonel Greeley was the difference in currency exchange. On this subject, Robert L. O'Brien, chairman of the Tariff Commission, appearing before the Ways and Means Committee, made such a strong statement in opposition to any legislation based upon such differences that the Ways and Means Committee refused to report a tariff bill calculated to impose tariffs based on exchange. Apparently the only thing left upon which this levy can be based is "the little extra benefit" which the lumber industry wants at this time and seems able to obtain by means of logrolling and trading with the tariff advocates of other industries.

Knowing that there was no justification for the rates imposed, there was carefully included in the revenue bill a paragraph which provides that for the purposes of the socalled flexible-tariff provision the tariffs included in the revenue bill shall not be considered as duties (revenue bill, p. 240, lines 7-10). In other words, the rates are not to be subject to review by the Tariff Commission. Advocates of these tariffs are unwilling to go before the Tariff Commission and attempt to justify the rates. They are purely a logrolling proposition.

The tariff items included by the Senate are virtually embargoes; they will produce practically no revenue, and it is almost certain that they will start further retaliatory tariff measures on the part of our export customers. Such retaliation has been threatened, and will probably be carried through to enactment.

To adopt this tariff provision means a subsidy to the lumber industry and a hardship to the American consumer, and it will produce no revenue to help balance the Budget. The principal market for lumber is on the farm. The prices received for the products from the farm have been gradually going down, until they have almost reached the vanishing point. To impose this additional burden upon the farmer and the small-home owner will retard the return of prosperity and will benefit no one, not even those who expect to be benefited. I am opposed to this unjustified embargo against the principal exports of a friendly nation, with whom we have so long been doing business, largely to our own profit. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, may I express my thanks for the candor and the integrity with which the acting chairman of this committee, Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, to-day denounced the automobile taxes in this bill. The other day I called those taxes the meanest and the most merciless ever considered by an American Congress. On only one industry, the cleanest and most beneficent industry in the country, you have assessed in this bill about three-fifths of all the sales taxes in the bill. The sale taxes, as estimated by the American Petroleum Institute, are $488,000,000, and about $300,-000,000 of those taxes are on the automobile industry and its customers, the key industry of the country, and the one which is doing more in effort and sacrifice than any other industry in the country to cure unemployment and bring back prosperity.

In the last hours of this revenue bill in the Senate, on the very last day, the Senate increased the tax on the automobile industry 100 per cent by adding $150,000,000 in gasoline taxes through a 1 per cent Federal tax. They took the taxes, as proposed by the House on automobiles, and increased them to three times the House taxes. In the Senate the auto taxes were increased in amount far over 200 per cent.

AUTO TAXES UNBEARABLE

There was already a tax of 100 per cent on gasoline and this tax was increased 25 per cent. There can be only one effect of this, and that is to cut down the amount of revenue derived from these taxes because they are so onerous.

In Tennessee, when sales taxes which were exorbitant were placed on the use of the automobile and on gasoline, many owners of automobiles went on strike and kept their automobiles in the garage. Of course, a boycott as a result of this tax would be very dangerous, as it would cut two ways, but I would not be surprised to see a boycott now of gasoline and to see citizens who are using gasoline use just as little as possible.

AUTO TAXES IN DETAIL

Of course, there is some dispute, as always, as to the amount of taxes which will be assessed because of these rates in this bill. The Treasury Department guesses and guesses again and changes its estimates almost from week to week.

But I estimate that the 3 per cent, 2 per cent, and 2 per cent taxes on automobiles, trucks, parts and accessories amount to $55,000,000. Just recently the Treasury Department cut its guess to $42,000,000.

My estimates and those of the Treasury Department agree on $33,000,000 as the tax for rubber tires and tubes.

We both practically agree that the 1 per cent Federal tax on gasoline amounts to $150,000,000 per year, but I contend that the amount will be considerably higher, and that 50 per cent of this tax will fall on the users of automobiles and trucks.

I maintain that lubricating oils will bring in $35,000,000 per year, and the Treasury Department has recently cut its estimate to $33,000,000.

I contend that a very large sum is assessed upon the automobile purchaser through the new tariffs on gasoline and oil and also through the tariffs on copper, lumber, and coal.

The most conservative figures which I have seen from the Treasury Department estimate the total new taxes on the automobile user as $263,000,000, and I maintain that the amount is $300,000,000 or over.

Thus I believe I am safe in saying that since the sales taxes in this bill are estimated at $488,000,000, and the automobile industry and its customers are contributing $300,000,000, that this one industry is taxed three-fifths of all the sales taxes in this revolutionary bill.

ONE-FOURTH OF WHOLE BILL

Since the amount declared to be raised by the bill is about $1,121,000,000, it is clear that over one-fourth of the entire bill is assessed on the automobile industry and its customers.

MORE AUTO TAXES COMING

Moreover, the House Ways and Means Committee is proposing that the cost of the bond issues to be made necessary by the Garner $2,309,000,000 relief and unemployment bill will come from an additional assessment of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline taxes.

May I presume that because of these burdens Acting Chairman Crisp denounces the automobile taxes in this bill? I particularly commend him for his fairness and frankness in stating that he was opposed to the new rubber tires and tubes tax which was put on the bill in the Senate and which is estimated to bring in $33,000,000 per year.

This was a most violent and unfair tax, and I believe it will eventually prove that the tires and tubes tax will bring in more money to the Treasury than the 3 per cent tax on passenger automobiles.

THE FUTURE OF AUTO TAXES

Since Mr. Crisp and other members of the Ways and Means Committee have denounced these automobile, gasoline, and rubber taxes, it is fair to assume that when the time comes in the Ways and Means Committee to begin consideration of killing the burdensome taxes made necessary by the depression, they will be glad to extend mercy and clemency first to the automobile taxes.

It is difficult to estimate just how much damage the bill will do in its present form, as some of the levies are difficult for me to estimate, but the tax on oil pipe-line transportation is estimated by the American Petroleum Institute to yield $6,000,000 per year.

A CRUMB

Since the automobile users must be satisfied with crumbs, may I express my gratitude that the House conferees have insisted in killing the double taxation in the Senate revenue bill which arose from the fact that the finished automobile was assessed a sales tax in the Senate bill, and the Senate bill also provided for a heavy tax on rubber tires and tubes. This amounted clearly to double taxation, and we protested to the conferees.

The conferees killed the double tax features covering rubber tires and tubes and assessed one tax on them.

COMPETITORS JUBILANT

The revenue bill is very unfair in that it places three-fifths of the sales tax burden on the automobile industry and does not place any sales taxes on the automobile's competitors, such as railroads, vessels, airplanes, motor cycles, horses, buggies and wagons, and so forth.

This shows the bill is strictly discriminatory. Indeed, it might very well have been written by the relentless competitors of the automobile industry and could not have been more drastic.

THE WORT AND MALT TAXES

Another instance of favoritism and persecution in the bill can be seen in the brewers' wort tax of 15 cents per gallon, and in the liquid malt and malt sirup tax of 3 cents per pound.

Wort competes with liquid malt and malt sirup, and wort is assessed a 100 per cent tax, while malt sirup is taxed a much lesser percentage of its sale price. The wort people do not complain about the heavy tax so much as they do about favoring their competitor.

This tax may put out of business in Michigan a number of wort factories, employing hundreds of workingmen.

It should, at least, have the effect of causing the wort people to remodel their factories so that they will go into the manufacture of malt sirup, which is favored in the bill.

The present rule in the House to-day does not give a chance to amend the wort, malt, and sirup provisions, but they certainly should be amended to provide a just system of taxation of these commodities.

UNFAIRNESS EXPLAINED

Objection to the malt and wort tax as it has been amended by the Senate Finance Committee, section 601 (2), is that it is unequal and unfair to the liquid-malt manufacturers, by far the largest producers.

It is a fact, which must be understood, that malt sirup, malt extract, liquid malt, brewer's wort, and powdered malt are chemically identical products, all being derived from the same grains by the same methods and produced in the same type of equipment. All are adaptable to the same uses, and when sirup and liquid malt are used in the same manner for any purpose they will produce identical results, chemically.

There is a physical or visual difference in their appearance, however, which can best be explained as follows: In the case of milk there is whole milk, condensed milk, and powdered milk; or in the case of maple sirup there is maple sap, maple sirup, and maple sugar. In the case of malt we have liquid malt, malt sirup or extract, and powdered malt.

Each of the above being identical products in their group, but at different degrees of evaporation or dehydration. One being a concentrate, the other having that concentrate in a solution of water.

Both liquid-malt extracts and malt sirup or extracts are produced by the brewing industry, which has been divided into three groups; that is, brewers producing both liquid malt (wort) and malt sirup or malt extracts, those producing liquid malt (wort) only, and those producing malt sirup or malt extract only. (This division does not take into consideration whether or not a plant produces near beers.)

LIQUID MALT

Barley malt alone or barley malt plus an unmalted grain such as corn, and so forth, are placed in the mash tun, processed, the resulting liquor or wort is then run off into the tanks, where it is put in 5-gallon cans or larger containers and it is then ready for the market or for storage.

MALT SIRUP OR MALT EXTRACTS

Barley malt alone or barley malt plus an unmalted grain, such as corn, and so forth, is placed in the mash tun, processed, the resulting liquor or wort run off into the brew kettle, boiled, and hopped (or not hopped in rare instances), run to the evaporators, there concentrated by the evaporation of the water in the wort to the consistency of a sirup of from 32° to 42° Baumé, then packaged.

At the time the two products leave the brew kettle they are identical, each containing approximately 13 per cent of the grain sugars or solids in a solution of water. After evaporation the sirups or extracts contain at 42° Baumé approximately 80 per cent of sugars or solids, by weight, while liquid malt remains at 13 per cent of solids by weight.

In the House bill as it went to the Senate, a tax of 5 cents per gallon on liquid malt or wort, and a tax of 35 cents per gallon on malt sirup or malt extracts was proposed. This was a fair and satisfactory tax. The exemption feature in this bill, however, is a dangerous one from the viewpoint of revenue, as it is very possible that tax evasion on malt sirup alleged to be used for baking, industrial, medicinal, and so forth, purposes will amount to 50 or 75 per cent of the total amount of sirup or extract produced, while as a matter of fact and according to Treasury Department figures the total amount of malt sirup or extract which would fall under exemption was less than 7 per cent of the total amount produced.

The amount of sirup or extract produced in 1930 was 849,000,000 pounds, and of this amount only 52,000,000 pounds, or considerably less than 7 per cent, was used for baking, industrial, medicinal, and so forth, purposes, as covered in the exemption. It is also a fact that if the exemption clause were to be stricken from the bill it would affect the public in the amount of 1% cents per capita per year. If, however, the tax exemptions are left in the bill, and evasions indulged in to the extent of 90 per cent of the production of malt sirup or extract, which is the amount the sirup industry claims is used for purposes covered in the exemption, an alarming loss of revenue would result.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for me to propound a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; if it does not run against my time. Mr. LaGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes in addition to the time heretofore agreed to during the course of the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended 10 minutes, to be used by him. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no one in my desire to balance the Budget at the earliest possible date. I think my record supports adherence to that view. Throughout the proceedings on this bill I supported, in the main, the recommendations of the Ways and Means Committee. I voted for the bill when it passed the House. I was also one of the very few Members from the great open spaces out in the Northwest who voted for a manufacturers' sales tax. I have never regretted that vote. When I see this conference report I know I was right, for the taxes now suggested are infinitely more burdensome to the people of my State.

I regret I can not vote for this conference report. If we reject it to-day, our conferees can improve it and report back on Monday or Tuesday. There are many items in the report which the conferees themselves have denominated on the floor under various names such as unjust, inequitable, yes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway] said indefensible, and they are in fact indefensible. I refer, for instance, to the tariff of $3 per thousand feet on lumber-brew kettle, boiled, hopped, then run to the racking or filling | not a protective tariff but an embargo one, indeed an absolute embargo that will not yield any revenue whatsoever but which may prove very costly to the consumers. Surely there is good reason for voting down this conference report, if for no other purpose than to instruct the conferees of the House to insist upon refusing to yield to the Senate provision with reference to that tariff item.

Involved in it is a matter of greater importance than the imposition of an unjustified tariff duty upon a product of our best customer, Canada. I refer to its effect upon the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project. I am reliably informed that negotiations for a treaty are well along. We hope they will be concluded soon. We can not afford to affront Canada to the extent this duty will do. Many sections will so resent it as to throw their influence against the waterway. The danger of defeating it by this duty is too great a hazard to assume.

Reference has already been made to the indefensible item with respect to bank checks. I do not know whether the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Baldrige] defended that item or not. If it was his intention to support it, he surely did a good job in behalf of those who regard it as indefensible, because he showed that the tax can be evaded by the large business interests of the country who can use orders payable at various banks without drawing checks upon the banks and pay all such orders by one check.

Surely, if it can be evaded in that way, the provision becomes one that will not yield much revenue, and such revenue as it will yield will come from those least able to bear the expense. There ought to be some way to instruct our conferees and say to them that when they make their next report to the House they shall at least bring in a provision which will not compel a tax of 2 cents on a check for a couple of dollars and provide the same tax on a check for $100,000 involving some large transaction. A graduated tax, starting at 1 cent, increasing slowly and gradually with the amount, would have some merit; the present proposal has none. It will not only be burdensome but will result in hoarding to evade it.

Then, too, I want to protest against the Federal Government entering a field that I feel belongs to the States in the matter of taxation; and I refer, of course, to the tax on gasoline. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY] refers to the burden on the automobile industry. I think of the car owners, for they are the ones who will pay the tax on cars, trucks, tires, and accessories. Surely that will be great enough without also taxing gasoline. The cost thereof to North Dakota alone will be four-possibly five-times greater than our people's contribution in recent years to the Federal Government in corporation taxes and personalincome taxes. Why insist on such a discrimination on this class of citizens?

My friends, it is to the tax on gasoline that some of the States may have to turn in these times of decreased property values if they are going to protect the real property within their borders against confiscation by taxation, and if they are going to make it possible for the farmers to continue to carry on-to try to pay off their large debt burden in the present dear money as measured in terms of commodities they produce. But, lo and behold, the Federal Government now comes along and wants to invade this field of Remember, a cheap car is a necessity on most farms; trucks are necessities in almost every line of business as well as on the farms; tractors are in general use, and consume gasoline which will be taxed under the Senate provision which we are now asked to agree to. If the cars and trucks themselves were not taxed under the bill when purchased, if repairs, accessories, tires, tubes, and even lubricating oil were not to be taxed, the situation would be different. You now propose to pyramid the burden so as to kill the goose that laid the golden egg.

I have heard no strong defense for another new item-the tax on electric energy for household and commercial use. Why single out these consumers?

I recognized that when a general manufacturers' excise tax with broad exemptions for food, clothing, and farm machinery was defeated, we would be compelled to impose more obnoxious taxes, but I believe none of you thought it would be as bad as the report confronting us. This bill will cost our farmers more in the tax on gasoline for their cars, trucks, and tractors than the manufacturers' excise tax proposed would have done. In addition they will have some 15 other sales taxes to pay, to say nothing of increased postage and Let us vote down the conference report and by Monday or Tuesday we will have one with at least a few of the most objectionable features removed.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Person].

Mr. PERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the confirmation of this report with great reluctance. I represent in my district probably 80 per cent of the automobile industry of the country. I have in the district 18 of the largest automobile plants in the country, and I can not, in justice to my district, stand here and keep silent on this tax.

You will note that under this tax as it comes from the Senate the tax on passenger cars, trucks, parts, and accessories is $55,000,000; on tires and tubes it is $33,000,000; on oils it is $35,000,000; and on gasoline it is $150,000,000, raising the total tax that applies to this industry to the sum of $273,000,000.

Now, just what does this mean? It means that the tax on the automobile industry is 22 per cent of the entire new tax. It means also on the basis of valuation an average tax of 25.44 per cent per annum on motor-vehicle property. How close is this to confiscation? Here is an industry that in normal times furnishes employment to 4,000,000 people.

Here is an industry that in normal times furnishes a dinner pail for from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 people. [Applause.1

I am not pleading especially for the industry itself; I am pleading for almost one million and one-half of people in my district who are directly or indirectly relying on the automobile industry for their existence. I am pleading for labor and for the small business man. The automobile industry is the one industry which seems to be "on the spot" at the psychological moment. It asks nothing from government, it is ready to finance its own operations. It is the one industry that has the courage to go ahead. It desires to-morrow to draw its pay checks and pay its weekly wage. It desires to-morrow to begin to fill the dinner pails of the country. It stands at scratch, ready to go, and it asks that it be not hamstrung before it starts and compelled to go limping down the course.

If there is any industry on earth that answers the kind of search which we are making to solve the unemployment problem, it is the automobile industry, and it asks nothing except that it be allowed to go. It is the one industry which helps to revive all other industries. So far as its raw material is concerned, it draws that raw material from every single State in the Union. It uses coal and coke, iron and steel and tungsten. It uses cotton, it uses wool, it uses flax, it uses paints and varnish and petroleum and rubber and lumber and copper. As you call over the list of States and their products you will find that each State furnishes its quota of raw material which goes into the finished car or truck, and so far as this industry has the breath of life it breathes it into every other industry and into every State-north, south, east, and west.

I would like to say one more thing, if I may, in reference to accessories, repairs, and tires. I have a small home here in Washington instead of rooms, and before I left there this morning there came to my house the ash man, the garbage man, the laundryman, and the grocery man, and each one of them came in an automobile. If 20 people call at my home to-day, they will all come in automobiles. If I went back to my law office and then to the court room to-day, the judge would come to the court room in a car, as would the clerk and the other officers of the court; each member of the jury would come in a car, and all of the witnesses would come in cars. To tax the automobile and the truck to-day is the same as taxing the buggy and the wagon in the old days. To tax accessories and repairs to automobiles and trucks to-day is exactly the same as taxing the clevis, the whiffletree, and the neck yoke or the harness in the old days. To place a special tax on tires to-day is like putting a tax on horseshoes in the old days; and even in the great distress of the Civil War this Government did not feel called upon to go as far as that.

I desire to read a letter from Mr. Thomas P. Henry, president of the American Automobile Association, and a telegram from Mr. Roy D. Chapin, chairman taxation committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, each of which sets forth the situation clearly.

Hon. JAMES W. COLLIER

Hon. James W. Collier,

Chairman House Ways and Means Committee,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Collier: Because of the great interest you have manifested in the taxation of motor vehicles, I trust you will see fit to call the attention of your colleagues on the conference committee on the revenue bill to the burdensome, discriminatory, and disproportionate character of the levies imposed on highway transport in the measure now pending before you.

In the aggregate, the motor taxes in the bill passed by the Senate amount to $273,000,000, divided as follows:

Tax on passenger cars, trucks, parts, and accessories__ $55,000,000
Tax on tires and tubes_______33,000,000 Tax on lubricating oil___ Tax on gasoline____ 35,000,000 _ 150, 000, 000

These taxes constitute 22 per cent of the total new revenue to be raised. We earnestly believe that this is out of all proportion to the ability of motor-vehicle owners to pay under existing conditions. It means an increase of $10.58 in the average per vehicle tions. It means an increase of $10.58 in the average per vehicle tax, which will raise the 1931 national average tax from $39.74 to $50.32. On the basis of valuation, it means an average tax of 25.44 per cent per annum on motor-vehicle property. It should be apparent that such a rate of taxation on any form of property is inequitable, if not confiscatory, even in an emergency.

In the bill passed by the Senate the taxes on highway transport approximate the burden originally allotted to the users of motor vehicles by the Treasury Department. As Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, pointed cut on the floor of the Senate, it is notoriously a fact that in seeking for new sources of revenue the Treasury Department has over a period of years turned first to the automobile. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that there is an ulterior motive, perhaps solicitude for the railroads, behind the ulterior motive, perhaps solicitude for the railroads, behind the willingness of the Treasury to shackle motor transport. It would be most unfortunate if the Congress of the United States should fall in line with such a policy.

The inclusion of a Federal gasoline tax in the revenue bill, even-for one year, is particularly objectionable and in our opinion un-wise. This field of taxation has been already overexploited by the States. In some States this tax is now close to 100 per cent of the retail price of the commodity. The high rates have led to tax evasion on a gigantic scale, all of which will be aggravated by the proposed Federal tax.

It is particularly important to bear in mind that close to $2,000,-000,000 of State and county road bonds are now outstanding and that the liquidation of these is predicated to a very considerable extent on State receipts from gasoline-tax collections. The demoralizing effect of a Federal tax can not but jeopardize these heavy bond issues and is a matter of grave concern to State officials.

Some legislatures have in recent months refused to increase this some legislatures have in recent months retused to increase this tax even as a means of relieving unemployment, because they recognized that the rates in effect are already exorbitant and that the law of diminishing returns is manifesting itself in no uncertain way. The fact that the States, facing serious budget deficits of their own, should show hesitancy in raising the gasoline-tax rates, ought to serve as a warning to the Federal Government against even a temporary incursion into this field.

I need not go into the difficulties that millions of motor-vehicle owners, urban and rural, are having to-day in maintaining their means of transportation. The facts are available in the records of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee. In view of these facts, it is difficult to believe that the conferees on the revenue bill will finally approve levies that even their sponsors admit are discriminatory and oppressive.

These thoughts are respectfully submitted, with full appreciation of the difficulties confronting you and your colleagues and of your desire to avoid the working of hardships on any element of the population or on any industry.

I am. Yours very truly,

THOS. P. HENRY. President.

JUNE 2, 1932.

Hon. JAMES W. COLLIER,

Chairman House Ways and Means Committee,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Tax bill you are now considering in conference places over 25 per cent of the total burden on the motor user, who is already loaded down by staggering State and municipal special taxes amounting to over a billion dollars annually. The total of the new Federal gasoline tax, the tax on cars, trucks, tires, parts, accessories, and lubricating oil, the Treasury estimates, will amount to $273,000,000. The motor industry feels that the tax bill should be passed promptly and the Budget balanced to restore confidence, but if any reduction is to be made in conference, then Congress owes it to the country to reduce or eliminate certain of the automobile rates and help us in our battle to restore employment in the country's largest industry, not only at the factories but in every section of the country.

(Signed) ROY D. CHAPIN,

(Signed) ROY D. CHAPIN,
Chairman Taxation Committee,
National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

For these reasons, with great reluctance and realizing the emergency which we face, I feel that I must vote against the confirmation of the committee's report, with the hopes that a new conference will eliminate the injustice being inflicted on this industry by the tax as it now stands.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Vinson] such time as he desires.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any Member of the House has spent more hours in the preparation of this tax bill than I have. Due to the fact that the bill is a Senate bill, changing the entire scheme of taxation, I find that I am unable to support the conference report.

As a member of the subcommittee submitting the alternative proposals—after the defeat of the sales tax we had importunities to insert many of the taxes to which I now object. We refused to do it. Likewise, the full committee and the House refused to enter into these fields.

The Treasury recommended the tax on checks, gasoline, and electric energy. The subcommittee, the full committee, and the House refused to accept their recommendation. In the last throes the Senate taxed gasoline and checks. It likewise placed a tax of 3 per cent on electric energy produced by private enterprises to be paid by the vendor. In conference the Senate provision was amended to provide the payment of the tax to be made by the consumer.

I do not think it is necessary to tax gasoline—which has always been a source of revenue to the States—checks, or electric energy, to be paid by the consumer.

I was a member of the subcommittee dealing with the administrative features of the bill. The changes in the existing law as proposed by said subcommittee made a yield of $100,000,000 to the Treasury. Many of the administrative features of the bill as it passed the House have been materially changed, and many millions of dollars thereby lost to the Treasury.

In opposing the conference report one does not oppose the balancing of the Budget. Opposition to the conference report is the only method of securing an opportunity to defeat the tax on checks, gasoline, and electric energy to be paid by the consumer, together with other specific taxes and administrative changes to which I do not agree.

According to the conclusions of the experts and the conclusion of the House committee, the Budget was balanced as it passed the House. There were many items stricken from the bill in the Senate which returned a tremendous yield. For instance, the tax on stock transfers—one-quarter of 1 per cent—was estimated to yield some $75,000,000. Another item carried $88,000,000. These items, together with the administrative changes and the retention of the rates of the House upon certain commodities, would have exceeded the yield of the three specific items to which I have referred; that is, checks, gasoline, and electric energy payable by the consumer.

As I said in the beginning, the bill, in its present form, is almost a new bill. It changes the theory of taxation adopted by the House. It has discarded the idea that capacity to pay is a real criterion in the selection of the taxes to be imposed.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, there are many Members of the House who desire to extend their remarks in the Record, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 14 minutes to Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 14 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. Doughton.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to concede, and I believe in, the patriotism of every Member of this House. Therefore it is not a question of patriotism but a question of judgment with reference to this matter of taxation which we are now considering. I have no apology to make for my position with reference to the manufacturers' sales tax. [Applause.] That has been referred to in the discussion to-day, which I think was unnecessary, and I wish briefly to refer to that phase of the matter.

The manufacturers' sales tax was first proposed in the Ways and Means Committee, and I violate no confidence when I say that as far as my recollection bears me out, there was not a single member of that committee who favored a manufacturers' sales tax. The distinguished member of our committee and the acting chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, was one of the first, if not the first, to rise in his place and say that he was very much opposed to a manufacturers' sales tax.

Now, the fact that he changed his mind later is no reflection on him and I have no criticism of him on that account. I know that as far as a manufacturers' sales tax is concerned I have been consistent. [Applause.]

If those who have prepared this bill had for their sole purpose preparing a bill that was as nearly as possible as indefensible and unjustifiable and inequitable as the manufacturers' sale tax, I will say that they have succeeded to a large extent. There is no doubt about that.

Now, as much as I would like, I can not support this conference report.

The gentleman from Georgia, the distinguished acting chairman of the committee, referred to the fact that the conferees of the House fought to retain many provisions of the House bill, which were eliminated by the Senate. I can not understand for the life of me how any great opposition could have been offered or any strenuous fight made on a bill containing as many items as were in dispute, when the work of the conferees was concluded in one day.

My friend from Georgia referred to the fact that he was adamant in not yielding against the provisions in reference to the consolidated and affiliated returns of corporations. Well, if he was adamant, why did not his opposition and that of the House conferees retain some of these other House provisions in the bill?

My two objections to the conference report are, first, the tax on checks, the most objectionable, indefensible, unwarranted provision, and for which there is neither necessity nor excuse.

It bears no relation whatever to ability to pay. There can be no justification for it, whereas so far as the matter of consolidated and affiliated returns are concerned, against which my good friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] stood adamant, there was a division of opinion in the Committee on Ways and Means. When it came to the matter of a stamp tax on checks there was no argument. There was no division among the members of the Committee on Ways and Means with respect to that. Each member was unqualifiedly and unconditionally opposed to a stamp tax on checks. It was not in the bill when it was reported to the House. Yet there was not sufficient opposition to it by the House conferees to keep it out of the bill. We talk about inflation and deflation and preventing hoarding of money. What will do as much injury to banks, and through the banks to communities and industries in the country, as a stamp tax on checks? It will cause those who have deposits in banks to draw out their money. Take, for instance, a man who runs a creamery or one who purchases produce and gives hundreds of checks every day in amounts all the way from 79 cents up to ten or fifteen dollars, who has a roll of checks at the end of the month numbering one or two thousand. The stamp tax on the checks will amount | distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], if he to much more than all of the profits he can possibly make in his business. It will mean that many of those who have deposits in banks will draw their money out and hoard it, and it will do more to promote hoarding and cripple the banks than any other provision in the bill. And yet we expect to start the country on the road to prosperity while taking the very steps that will have a deflationary effect and which to that extent will cripple business. Of all the unjustifiable taxes-which the Ways and Means Committee members were all against, not a single member favoring itthat is the most iniquitous, the most unjustifiable, the most unfair, and the most burdensome, and will be the most harmful of all of the taxes proposed in this bill.

The next tax that I would say is the most unjustifiable and unreasonable and indefensible is the tax on gasoline. This is one field of taxation that the States have preempted. and if they have not already placed all of the taxes that the traffic will bear, if gasoline can stand still more tax-and possibly it could in some States—then that field should be left to the States.

We have a tax in our State of 6 cents a gallon on gasoline, and with it we are paying interest on our bonds and setting aside a sinking fund to pay our bonds and also maintaining our roads. This is all done out of the tax on gasoline. If gasoline could possibly stand 1 cent a gallon more tax, our State-and I think it is true of every other State in the Union-is entitled to that additional tax. This is one field of taxation that the Federal Government should have left entirely to the States.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman favor a gasoline tax such as is embodied in the Garner public works bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That would take an hour to discuss. Is the gentleman in favor of doing anything for the unemployed? It is said that we must balance the Budget, that our legislation must be sound; but if we are to embark on a program of relief for the unemployed and to prevent destitution, starvation, and nakedness, we must finance the matter in some way; and if the handsome gentleman from Wisconsin has a better method, I am sure that Members of the House will favor it.

Mr. SCHAFER. I have a better method. Tax beer instead of gasoline.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I decline to yield further. It is certain that we will have to impose many taxes that are burdensome, and that would be unjustified; but, as my good friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] said, we are experiencing a condition now even worse than war. However, in levying a tax on the American people and raising billions of dollars, we should not get away from all sound principles of taxation. We should not ignore the well-established principle that taxes should be levied in proportion to ability to pay; and while there are many taxes in this bill that could not be justified in normal times, these taxes I have mentioned are the ones against which I would inveigh most emphatically because they can not be justified at any time.

Oh, they say, what is the remedy, what have we left to tax? We have the normal tax on dividends of corporations, which has been stricken out, and the tax on stock transfers, which has been reduced, and had we not reduced certain excise taxes carried in the bill we would have had adequate revenue to balance the Budget, according to the estimate of the Treasury Department, without imposing these taxes I have mentioned. I know they insist upon having the bill passed, but we have gone on this long, and could we not take two or three days more and send the bill back to the conference committee, where every disputed item and every item under controversy could have proper consideration? With all due respect and without criticism to the members of the conference committee, everyone knows that it is impossible to consider all of the items in dispute in this bill between the Senate and the House concerning which there was disagreement in such a short time. We have lost everything and gained nothing, according to the statement of our distinguished majority leader, Mr. RAINEY. If this conference report can not be supported by him, who knows more about it than any other Member on the majority side save the can not support as earnestly as he desires to do so because of its tariff provisions which should have never gone into the bill, and no doubt because of other unjustifiable and inequitable provisions, is not that sufficient reason why the conference report should be sent back to the conference committee? Let us take two or three days more for the committee to consider item by item every disputed matter in the bill, in the light of the objections interposed on the floor of the House by Members who can not consistently support the conference report.

We all desire to help balance the Budget and do it as speedily as possible, but in doing that we can not violate our consciences nor our judgment; we can not support a bill for which there is no reasonable justification. I do not believe any Member of this House can justify some of the provisions of this bill except by the statement that the exigencies of the occasion make it necessary. The Budget should be balanced by sound and equitable taxes and not those that are utterly indefensible. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I was very much amused at some of my colleagues on the Republican side of the House who were so vociferous, so constructive, and so statesmanlike in their advocacy of the sales tax, now seeking an avenue of escape, and on the eve of an election taking the floor and voting against the tax bill. I can not forget their selfpraise of their own patriotism as they pleaded for a balanced

I have no fault to find with anyone who fought the tax bill all the way through. I would like to see anyone draw a bill of this size that is satisfactory to every section of the country and satisfactory to each individual Member of the House. It can not be done. But I say to you gentlemen who have been trying to balance the Budget, here is your chance. Vote for this bill or forever keep silent on Budget balancing.

Of course, the bill is not satisfactory to me, but I never hoped, in my fondest dreams, to get an income tax and an inheritance tax and a gift tax, such as is contained in this bill. [Applause.] There has been all of this talk about a revision of the tax next winter, but let the word go out that the first revision of the tax will be to eliminate the obnoxious taxes, such as stamps on checks and the tax on gasoline, but that the income tax, the inheritance tax, and the gift tax are going to stay as the permanent taxing policy of this country. [Applause.]

That is why I am supporting this report. But I predict here and now that these excise taxes included in this bill will be made as obnoxious as possible to the American people. Not only the application of them, but the administration as well will be made as nearly intolerable as possible so that the people will rise and cry out against them. All this will be a part of the lecherous and systematic propoganda already under way for the enactment of a general manufacturers' sales tax at the next session of Congress. There is no need to fool ourselves about this. The same sinister interests that fought to the last ditch for the inclusion of a general manufacturers' sales tax in the present revenue bill will return as large as a cootie flock to vex the next session. There is no use trying to deceive ourselves. There is a widespread and vicious campaign on foot to make the poor and the working classes bear the cost of government. The salestax agitation is accessory to this campaign and part of it. The interests that promote this campaign to escape their just share of taxes will stop at nothing. They will see to it that the administration of the present tax bill, free as it is from general sales taxes, will be made as great a nuisance as possible to the people of the country.

Let me illustrate how unfair, how heedless of the facts this cry for a sales tax is. I want particularly to address myself to the Representatives from the automobile-manufacturing districts who took the floor to-day and stated they could not support this report because of the unfair burden on the | our activities to clean the public-utility companies, to preindustry in their district, the automobile, but that they would have supported the sales tax.

On page 243 of the bill as agreed to in conference, section 606, you will find the automobile tax. It is one-quarter of 1 per cent less tax on trucks than it was in the sales tax. It is three-quarters of 1 per cent more on passenger cars than it was in the sales tax, and it is one-quarter of 1 per cent less on accessories to automobiles than it was in the sales tax.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman tell us who is for the sales tax? Who is supporting it?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. With the exception of the gentleman from North Carolina, almost all the speeches made to-day against this bill are made by advocates of the sales tax.

Mr. PARSONS. Is the President for the sales tax?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. Finally we hear that he is.

There is one provision in this bill that has not been referred to, and I am sure the gentleman from Georgia will explain it before the time has expired. That is the tax on electrical energy, either to consumers or to manufacturers. It seems to me that the provision that is now contained in the bill as far as the conferees are concerned is ultra vires, entirely. The conferees exceeded their authority. They had no right, no authority, to take the tax from the power companies as provided in the Senate bill and place it on the consumers. Surely there was no such provision in the House bill, and the amendment contained in the bill to-day is not in keeping with the provision as written by the Senate. I do not believe the Senate will approve that. It is their amendment and I sincerely hope they will reject the change written into it by the conferees. The consumers should not pay the tax. I think, perhaps, the time of making a point of order is past unless the point of order was reserved at the time the gentleman from Georgia reported the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Just before the Senate adopted that provision there were two separate votes upon the very item that the conferees put in this bill, and on both occasions the Senate rejected the language that is in the bill.

The tax on power, should it remain as now wrongfully written into the bill, certainly can not remain in the revenue law very long. We are sure either to repeal it by joint resolution this session or the first thing next session. Congress can not permit the power companies, who have been controlling State legislatures and writing their own law, to dictate and write national legislation. They have been doing their dirty and slimy work long enough. After the exposures from the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission, decent people of this country had hoped that the Power Trust, the local power companies, the gas companies, and the electric-light companies had been shamed into respectability and honest trade practices. It seems that they have not. When I say Power Trust I include the local power company, the electric-light companies, and the gas companies-I mean each of them, and I say this because of the constant propaganda of these same people who charge that the reference to a Power Trust is indefinite and vague. Yes; it is not so long ago that Mr. Insull was shouting from the roof tops. It is not so long ago that people in high offices right here in Washington were doffing their high hats to the great Mr. Insull. Reference has been made right here on the floor of the House to this man Insull and his great genius for organization and his great genius for financing. Yes; financing, using bought-up political power and paid publicity to sell his securities made worthless by vicious financial manipulation. Let some of the defenders of Insull stand up and defend him as they did before the crash of his companies. Let some of the high officials who fraternized with him come to his defense. As time goes on, those of us who publicly used for the public good the information that we have had on the power and utility gang will be justified in vent legalized exploitation of the consumers, and to avoid excessive rates on power, light, gas, and heat, now necessaries and indispensable in our present living conditions.

Personally, I doubt the legality of the provision of this tax paid by the consumer and collected by the company. I will look into that later. In the meantime I would like to have some of the sponsors of the provision prepare themselves to answer just what would happen if the consumer refuses to pay the tax. Could the company shut off service if he paid the rate provided for in that State for power but refused to pay the tax? That is something to think about. Suppose the company in turn does not pay the Government? Can the Government sue the consumer? Can the Government seize the property of the utility company, thereby shutting off service to the consumer? That is something more to think about. The last word on this provision has by no means been said. It is coming back, and sooner than the power crowd and their servants in Washington realize

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will say to my colleague that I think the Senate will reject it again. Of course, that will eliminate it from the bill. To-day, as far as the House is concerned, we have either to vote this conference report up or down. By reason of the critical condition of the country and by reason of this cry for balancing the Budget, I am going to vote to support the conference report, because this does balance the Budget with a vengeance. They wanted it. They got it. Let them have it. [Applause.]

Of course, I do not agree to the lumber tax. The matter was submitted to the Tariff Commission only this year. They rendered their report in the early part of the year, and we are helpless on that; but, gentlemen, I have some very interesting figures on the wages paid in the lumber industry. I asked the Department of Labor to investigate those figures for me. They have confirmed them, and the minute that this lumber tariff goes into effect I am going to publish those figures. The purpose of the tariff is to pay the American standard of wages, and I will publish those figures and let the lumber industry pay the American standard of wages.

[Applause.]

Let me mention another phase of taxation: National prohibition is at an end. All that remains for us to do is to perform a few last sad rites and then look forward to the future. There is small doubt but what the repeal of prohibition will bring to the National Treasury enormous revenues. The same venal interests that have tried so intensively and so unsuccessfully to date to eliminate income taxes from our national tax schedule will make every effort to divert the impending liquor revenue to the cancellation of such income taxes. We will then face a fight as bitter as the recent effort to force a general sales tax down the throats of the American people and with the same lines drawn. But there will never be, and can never be, a sound system of taxation that does not rest on the taxation of incomes. It is not only necessary for revenue purposes but it is indispensable from a social standpoint. If we lose sight of ability to pay as a factor in taxation, we have no alternative but to bleed the weak and trample further on the interests of the working people while further exalting privilege and wealth. I say, we will have that fight when legalized liquor returns.

Finally, in this tax bill I am at least happy that we have got 1 cent more a share on the transfer of stocks, and I am glad that the conferees accepted the transfer tax on bonds. I recommended that before the Ways and Means Committee. We have something, at least we have a tax on the loan of stocks on short sales, but I will say, Mr. Speaker, when the time comes I want to appeal to the Members of the House to study the facts. There has been more deliberate lying on the stock-transfer tax than on any item in this bill, or in any tariff bill ever written. I appeal to the membership of the House to study the facts and get the truth on stock transfers, the procedure, the methods, the customs; compare it with the English taxes, compare it with the Canadian taxes, and I am sure that at the very first opportunity we have we can vote out the stamp tax on checks, and vote a one-quarter of 1 per cent or an eighth of 1 per cent on all stock transfers. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Williamson].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have always been opposed to a sales tax, and one of the first speeches I made in the House was in opposition to the sales tax which was proposed in 1921. I do not believe in it now; but if there is any one thing that would come nearer driving a man to voting for such a tax than the provisions of this bill, I do not know where you would find it. So far as the midwest is concerned, we would be better off with a general manufacturers' sales tax than we shall be if this bill as reported by the conferees goes through. The original House bill, with its comparatively high sales tax rates, as contrasted with its income, inheritance, and gift tax rates, seemed to me unjust to the consumers of the country.

I voted against the sales tax when this bill was under consideration in the House but supported the bill in the form it took when ready for final passage. The principle of the general sales tax was eliminted and the special and other taxes that took its place were fair and moderate. The bill as it went over to the Senate was much better than the one that has come back to the House.

I recognize the fact that changes in economic conditions and in the estimates of the Treasury made it necessary for the Senate to find taxes in addition to those which were levied by the House, but it has taken from the bill some of the taxes we sent over, which were infinitely preferable to what we have in return. For instance, take the tax on lumber. Here we are placing a tax of $3 a thousand boardfeet on lumber, which in addition to the existing tariff makes $4 a thousand. That tariff, as has already been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey], is absolutely prohibitory. It amounts to an embargo and will certainly result in establishing retaliatory tariff measures by Canada.

Our trade with Canada is about the largest of that of any country to which we ship merchandise. It is going to be seriously affected by this outlandish tax on lumber.

It should also be remembered that the American farmers to-day need to put up improvements of every character, and require much lumber for repairs. They will be in the market for large quantities of lumber when conditions improve to a point where they can get into the market for anything. This is going to levy a tax upon the farmer at the rate of $4 a thousand upon his lumber, which is a prohibitory tax, and which will make improvements in most cases utterly impossible.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. I know the gentleman is interested in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project. What has the gentleman to say with reference to the effect the lumber provision will have upon the negotiations now nearing conclusion between the Dominion of Canada and the United States on that project?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I may say to the gentleman from North Dakota that I think it is a serious question whether that treaty will ever be signed by the Canadian Government if this item goes into effect—at least not until the obnoxious tax is repealed.

This item should be removed from the bill; and if there were no other reason for objecting to the conference report, it should be rejected with instructions to delete this tax. It can not possibly be justified upon the difference in the cost of production here and in Canada. It would appear that the advocates of the sales tax have made the bill just as obnoxious as possible to force favorable consideration for their pet tax. We are intensely interested in the St. Lawrence waterway project. It means much to the Northwest.

I fear this proposed tax on lumber is going to be fatal to securing such a treaty with Canada in the immediate future. It is unfortunate that as we are nearing the goal which would permit this development that it should be jeopardized by this unfriendly act.

The gentleman from North Dakota referred to the gasoline tax. All the States of the Union to-day are levying a heavy tax upon gasoline. It has been preempted by the States. In many cases it is the only source of revenue they have for road construction and maintenance, and the Federal Government ought not to step into this field.

Is it not enough that we have levied a heavy tax on trucks, automobiles, and parts, without piling on top of it a tax on lubricating oil and gas? This tax will cost South Dakota $1,500,000 a year; and if the Garner relief bill goes through with its cumulative one-fourth cent a gallon on gasoline, there will be an additional $375,000 to pay. To cap the climax a 2-cent tax on checks is added to the already heavy burdens of the little fellow. No discrimination is made between the small check and that for a $100,00. There are no exemptions.

Those who will may sponsor these taxes. I do not propose to do so. I agree that the Budget must be balanced, but there are less obnoxious and harmful ways of doing it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, every Member of the House who has spoken on this conference report has either apologized for it or has told why he was going to vote against it. The House has never before been confronted with so unusual a situation. Mr. Rainey, the distinguished minority leader of the House, referred to the bill as a "logrolling mess," while Mr. CRISP, of Georgia, the acting chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, apologized for the report and contented himself by saying "it was the best they could do." The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY, said the report was "indefensible," and Mr. LaGuardia, of New York, said he was going to vote for it because it balanced the Budget "with a vengeance." This is the first time in my 20 years' experience in the House when legislation was publicly recommended for passage because it did certain things "with a vengeance." The gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] is undoubtedly referring to the estate-tax provisions and the income-tax rates embodied in the report which is before us. It certainly 'soaks the rich" as well as the poor with a vengeance, and it would require no prophet to predict the failure of the bill as a revenue producer, because it kills all of the geese that ordinarily lay the golden eggs. In a year from now there will not be any rich to soak, because initiative and constructive gain is destroyed in the tax bill about to be enacted into law under the guise of a "balanced Budget."

It is not so long ago when our distinguished Speaker, Mr. GARNER, stood down here in the pit of the House while indorsing this revenue bill, and I recall distinctly his melodramatic words when he called upon his colleagues in the House to "for God's sake have the courage to substitute something real when offering amendments to strike something from the bill." He appealed for constructive criticism and a substitution of language that would raise substantially the same amount of money as might from time to time be stricken from the bill. I, to-day, call upon you for that same kind of courage. Let us vote down this indefensible, iniquitous, inconglomerate mass of tax legislation and substitute for it a reasonable manufacturers' sales tax in line with a resolution which is now pending before the House Committee on Rules, which will make in order a sales-tax amendment to the bill now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived when we must choose between a conglomerate aggregation of nuisance and confiscatory taxes on the one hand and a well-considered universally adopted sales tax on the other. If the people back home would communicate their desires to Congress, I am sure that both the House and Senate would adopt a sales tax as the soundest and quickest way to promote industrial confidence and a balanced Budget.

The adoption of my resolution will mean the imposition of a $2\frac{1}{4}$ per cent tax on the sale of every article sold in the United States by a large manufacturer or producer thereof, excepting farm and garden products, food, clothing, school | books and books of religious reading, and materials manufactured exclusively for use in houses of worship.

The acceptance of this tax would provide $400,000,000 in revenue and would make unnecessary any increase in the existing income-tax rates in either the upper or lower brackets and it would also make unnecessary a lot of nuisance taxes and stamp taxes now carried in the bill.

A manufacturers' sales tax would have a wholesome effect upon industry generally, would definitely provide for a balanced Budget, and would promote an air of confidence throughout the United States such as has not prevailed during the past two years.

Excluding a tax on clothing and foodstuffs, which comprises a very large percentage of the average man's expenditures, the manufacturers' sales tax is regarded by the world's foremost nations as the most equitable means of raising revenue. It is felt by no one and yet contributes the very largest revenues.

Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of telegrams from Walter T. Rice; Martin J. Faubel; Carl W. Gerstenberg, commander Board of Trade Post, No. 304, American Legion, which are more or less summarized in a like telegram from James Forrest, chairman of the committee of 100 to save the jobs of 100,000 American workers, which reads as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 3, 1932.

PRED A. BRITTEN,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The most startling and paralyzing move of Congress from the standpoint of men who are employed in commodity markets was the midnight action of the Senate on Tuesday in reinserting in the the midnight action of the Senate on Tuesday in reinserting in the tax bill the tax of 5 cents on every hundred-dollar value of future trades. As you know, this was brought up suddenly by Senator Frazier, of North Dakota, and passed quickly, without its full significance being explained. Even in war time this tax was only 2 cents, and was reduced to 1 cent because of the burden it carried. When this matter was before the Senate committee representatives of more than half a million farmers' exchanges and verticus convergitive groups appeared in vigorous conversities. representatives of more than half a million farmers' exchanges and various cooperative groups appeared in vigorous opposition, and the committee readily visualized the dangers involved and knew that enforcement of such a law would in effect place a new heavy burden on agriculture as well as seriously restricting the grain, cotton, cottonseed, sugar, bran, butter and eggs, potatoes, and millers' products' markets and putting vast numbers of additional workers into idleness. It has been estimated enforcement of the law will throw 100,000 men and women out of work by July 15, adding this number to the 8,000,000 now tramping the streets in search of bread and butter.

forcement of the law will throw 100,000 men and women out of work by July 15, adding this number to the 8,000,000 now tramping the streets in search of bread and butter.

The undersigned are among those whose jobs and homes are threatened. The law will not bring in the $6,000,000 estimated revenue, for it will kill the business it is intended to bleed of such revenue and bring additional suffering to the working classes and the farmers. Any student of markets will also advise that this tax would so seriously restrict future markets that hedging facilities so valuable to farmers in marketing their grain, cotton, and other produce would no longer be available. Consequently larger buyers will be able to dictate their price terms to the farmer. The farmer will suffer and 100,000 workers in the various commodity markets will be compelled to see their families suffer. Before these hundred thousand workers are thrown into idleness an appeal is being made to you by the undersigned committee because large numbers of your constituents believe you owe it to your constituency and to your State to bring the real facts to light. We respectfully urge that upon receipt of this communication you wire the chairman of this committee advising what may be done in the matter and what cooperation you will be able to extend. Every member of this committee is associated with business houses having connections and associations throughout Illinois and are acting on behalf of thousands of your constituents.

COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND AMERICAN WORKERS.

COMMITTEE OF ONE HUNDRED TO SAVE THE JOBS OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND AMERICAN WORKERS, JAMES FORREST, Chairman.

Reverting to Speaker Garner's appeal for "courage," permit me to suggest that just a little courage at this time would put a tax on beer which would bring into the Federal Treasury the very first year not less than $500,000,000, including a balanced Budget. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman has spoiled a good speech.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I have not spoiled my speech. The gentleman is so dry that if he went out in the wind he would blow away.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. But I would not drown.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; if it was wet, my friend would float away. The time has come, my friends, when we must have the courage to provide revenue for the Treasury, and if we can get $500,000,000 by a tax on beer, why not accept it? Let us not be afraid to vote for it because for the past 10 or 12 years some of you have been dry. The sentiment of the country has changed, and you will have to change accordingly. No one can consistently vote for this tax bill and at the same time refuse to vote for a tax on beer.

I hope this conference report is voted down. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, of course this bill as it is presented to the House is indefensible, except on one theory, and that is balancing the Budget. I can not conceive how the mind of man could write a worse tax bill. I can only think of one thing which would be worse than to inflict this tax bill upon the American people, and that would be to say to the American people and to the world that the Government of the United States is insolvent and Congress has neither the patriotism nor the courage to meet its constitutional duty and provide sufficient revenue to operate this Government.

We could have had a better tax bill with an honest, fair manufacturers' sales tax, with the exemption of food, clothing, drugs, and agricultural implements. [Applause.] But this Congress would have none of it. When we voted down a general manufacturers' sales tax every intelligent man knew that he was not only voting out the manufacturers' sales tax but that he was voting for these substitutes. And now you have them. You have sales taxes which will rob the American people and hurt industry in more than one respect, and doubtless bring economic chaos to the country. If that be true, outside of the inescapable conditions with which we are confronted, no one is to blame save those who defeated a more equitable tax. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the two most significant votes the House has cast throughout the entire discussion of the tax bill are the votes on the Doughton amendment eliminating the manufacturers' excise tax from the revenue bill, which vote is found on page 7324 of the Congressional Record of April 1 of this year, and the vote on this, the tax bill, conference report. When the April 1st vote was taken and the sales tax was defeated by a vote of 236 to 160 this House decided definitely that it would pass this proposed law, which is unfair, discriminatory, actually a tariff bill, and provides a sales tax which falls most heavily upon a few selected industries. When that decision was made it was practically decided to tax bank checks, automobile tires, brewers' wort used to make beer, grape concentrate used to make wine, gasoline, coal, lumber, copper, toilet articles and cosmetics, furs, jewelry, automobile parts and accessories, radios, refrigerators, sporting goods, firearms and shells, candy, matches, chewing gum, soft drinks, electric power, and to tax everything which we find taxed in this bill. I can not but say that in my judgment the burden and the iniquity of this bill falls upon those who could not anticipate the situation that would exist in the Public Treasury, and the present parliamentary situation of which every Member of Congress and almost every citizen had sufficient notice.

I am frank to say that at this minute I do not know whether to vote for or against this conference report. We know that the Budget must be balanced and yet an aye vote means that a Member of the House like myself, who felt certain that the manufacturers' excise tax ought to be adopted, must violate every rule of taxation by accepting this report. Yet I know that the Budget must be balanced. and I would feel that perhaps some of the burden should fall upon me if my vote should say that we would not accept the conference report. If I should vote for it, it would be under protest, knowing it is unfair, that it is discriminatory, that it has every bad fault of every tax bill that has ever been passed since I have been a Member of this body, and, as one of the final votes that I shall cast in this House I would like to express this opinion and absolve myself of any responsibility for these iniquitous, unfair taxes. The only reason that I could vote for it would be because I can do nothing but vote it up or vote it down, and then cause further distress to come to this country because if it should fail to pass the Budget would not be balanced, and then, perhaps, I might be partially responsible for the drop in the prices of wheat, corn, cotton, hogs, cattle, and manufactured products which might result in every market in the United States to-day.

It is an outrage that this situation exists and the responsibility, eventually, will be fixed by the American people. They can not be fooled any great length of time by the votes that they saw us cast on April 1 and the votes that we will cast to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is not wholly agreeable to anybody—not even to the members of the committee which presents it. There are numerous objectionable features, but in the brief time I have I desire to mention one in particular.

In all the range of legislative possibilities, the committee could not have put into this report any provision that would have been so universally obnoxious as the tax upon checks; nothing that would have been so objectionable, and nothing that would have exercised such an unfortunate effect upon the business interests of the country.

What is the great need of business to-day, particularly in the agricultural districts? It is credit. The farmer especially can no longer secure credit from any outside source. The land banks are no longer lending money. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not lend him a dollar. The insurance companies long since ceased lending money on farm lands. The farmer and the tradesman dependent on farm patronage has no source from which he can secure one penny of credit to-day except from his local bank.

This provision taxing bank checks will lower the level of surplus funds in these last remaining credit reservoirs all over the country. Few small depositors will put money in a bank when they have to pay a tax in order to get it out again.

Anyone with any intimate knowledge of the situation knows that the great majority of accounts in all country banks at this time are small accounts and the great volume of checks are of small denomination. If these small accounts are to be taxed off the books of the banks, the inevitable result will be to further reduce the loanable funds of the banks. It will contract, to just that extent, practically the last source of agricultural credit.

Answering the suggestion just made that dealers in buying country produce can draw checks in such a form as to evade this tax, permit me to say that even if such an evasion is permitted by the Treasury Department, it can not protect farmers who receive such checks when they withdraw that money from their own accounts. The price of eggs at the point of production is now as low as 6 cents per dozen. And the farm wife drawing a small check on her account would pay a tax of 33½ per cent of the price she receive from a dozen eggs. Profiteers making excess profits and corporations filing consolidated returns and others go scot-free of huge taxes levied during the war but rejected by this bill in order to substitute a tax on the gas for the farmer's tractor, on the children's stick of candy, and on the home bank.

It is incredible that in this emergency, with the small bank fighting for its life and the liquid credit of it patrons, practical men should propose such a tax. It spells disaster in many communities; it retards recovery from the depression throughout the country, and it defers indefinitely the return of national prosperity.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dickinson].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, our country was united during the World War; not so now. The country is more critical to-day than at any time in its entire history. We have been in session six long months. The House has been waiting on the Senate. The country has been demanding action. The business interests have been urging the speedy passage of a tax bill to balance the Budget. The time has come to meet the expectation and urgent desire of the country. Credit must be preserved and confidence restored.

No tax bill coming here from the Senate or the conference will be acceptable in its entirety either to the House or to the country, but you have got to pass a tax bill, and I am ready to vote on this measure now and end the suspense here and in the country. There is much in this pending tax bill as it comes from conference that does not suit me and which I have vigorously opposed from the beginning and which are in the bill as it comes from conference to my intense regret. If in their stead there had come from the Senate or from the conference between the two Houses a modified manufacturers' sales tax with liberal exemptions of food, clothing, medicines, and farm implements and other necessities, I was ready to vote for it and end the controversy over this temporary tax measure and relieve certain named subjects from such heavy taxation, which, in fact, are special sales taxes, but the bill is here in its present form and we must act. I have in my system now a speech that I would like to deliver to this House on this bill, but I can not do it in the brief time allotted me.

Action now is what the country demands. The patience of the people who sent us here is exhausted. The business of the country has urged Congress to act without further delay and provide sufficient revenues to meet the needs of the Government, to the end that the credit of the country may be preserved, that depression be relieved, and that fear may end.

Many of the subjects for taxation now in the bill were originally proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury and extended hearings before the Ways and Means Committee were had and these subjects were rejected, and a so-called manufacturers' sales tax was substituted, a modification of the Canadian law, but when reported to the House, this body refused to accept the sales-tax provision, and the tax bill went back to the Ways and Means Committee, and the rejected subjects were then embodied in the bill in place of the sales tax, and rereported to and passed by the House and sent to the Senate. There the sales tax was attempted to be substituted, but failed of adoption, so the bill is here with the same and additional objectionable subjects in the bill, made necessary in order to balance the Budget.

In this revenue bill of 319 pages there is much of merit and helpful value. I was strongly opposed to a tax on checks and to increased letter postage, and I greatly regret these items being in the bill. I was also unfriendly to increased taxes on automobiles and rubber tires and gasoline and other subjects. I favored increased taxes on incomes in the higher brackets and increased inheritance taxes on distribution of large estates, so that the great wealth of the country be made to pay its fair share of the burdens of Government. I favored taxation of stocks and transfers of stocks, so that the money of the country used in stock deals might be taxed, to the end that stock gambling, making enormous fortunes through speculation in stocks, should be made to pay taxes to support the Government.

I shall support this bill and the conference report with greater reluctance than any tax measure ever presented during my terms in Congress. Revenues must be raised to meet the demand of the Treasury or else bankruptcy will result. The credit of the Government must be preserved even though temporary hardships result. The bill runs for one year, for the fiscal year of 1933, commencing July 1 of this year.

Criticism may not end. Just criticism is the right and privilege of the American citizen. No man holding office should object to fair criticism, but he is entitled to just treatment while he is striving to carry out the will of those he is trying to serve. During my entire service in Congress

I have never known such general criticism of Congress, struggling to help relieve hard conditions.

Much of the criticism has been voluntary, much inspired, unparalleled propaganda from conflicting sources have flooded Congress and delayed action, a most difficult problem. For the confusion in the public mind, a part of the press, or its agencies here, in a measure may be responsible. The duty of all the press is to give accurate information. I am a friend of the press, but sometimes selfish interests controlling a part of the press unduly influence the public mind. Intelligent knowledge of the facts with common sense controlling judgment, will help to temper the mind of the public and meet the severe criticism of the representatives of the people, whose aim is to carry out the will of those who generously gave them opportunity to hold positions of trust in Congress.

No set of men, in my judgment, have worked harder or more conscientiously in attempting to discharge their duty here; and their greatest desire has been to know the will of their constituents and the best interests of the country. This has been the most strenuous session of all my terms in Congress.

The country and the world need readjusting. We need lower and more reasonable tariffs in order that commerce and trade may be restored. We need more money in circulation and a restoration of business by hoarded money coming out of hiding.

A tax bill to meet the demands of Government was absolutely necessary. The legacy of the war left a burden upon our country that is hard to bear. A billion dollars annually is necessary to pay interest on bonds and for the sinking fund to reduce our debt, and there is no way to secure money except by taxes or further issuance of bonds. I repeat that I do not like this tax bill, and with great reluctance I shall vote for it because the credit of the United States must be preserved.

The country is approaching a condition of chaos, revolution, the overthrow of our basic order of society. The people desire a recovery from this condition and look to Congress to help remedy the situation and to bring about a restoration of confidence. The hoarding of money is due to a lack of that confidence which is necessary before it will come out of hiding and return to the channels of business. Let us not fail to discharge our full duty as far as conditions will permit. Let us not for a moment criticize the public for this condition of unrest and distrust, for you are but their agents, and the great body of the people have a right to look to you to execute their will, and I know you are anxious to discharge that duty.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Budget must be balanced. To balance it, a tax bill that will produce the required revenue must be passed; hence, however much we dislike it, we must vote for this tax bill.

I am not for many of the provisions in this bill, but I am going to vote for it, because it is the only chance to pass an adequate tax bill at this session, and Congress must provide revenue to run the Government before we adjourn.

I am not for the 2-cent tax on bank checks. I have fought against that provision uncompromisingly.

I am not for the increase in postal rates to 3 cents. I have made an uncompromising fight against it. I am not for the tax on consumers of electricity. I am not for a great many other things in this bill, but I realize that the committee has worked hard and has done it best.

It has kept in the bill—and I want to commend the committee for it—a tax on foreign oil that will rehabilitate the independent industry in this country, and stop the foreign monopoly of the Dutch Shell and Gulf Co., and will do much good in my section of the State. The committee has refused to permit a tax on little children and poor families of the country who attend picture shows at night where the admission charge is not more than 40 cents. Sometimes the only pleasure that the family has after working all day is to attend a picture show at night. I am glad the committee saw fit to keep that provision in the bill.

I also commend the committee for forcing back into the bill, after the Senate had knocked it out, the tax on stock transfers on the gambling exchanges of the country. That would have been infamous if it had agreed with the Senate to leave that out of the bill. I also commend the committee for carrying out the wishes of this House in not permitting the infamous sales tax to be placed in this bill. That would have saddled the expenses of this Government largely upon the backs of the poor. We have whipped soundly Mr. William Randolph Hearst and the Republican administration on this proposition and have prevented them from carrying out their well-organized scheme. While I am against many features of the bill I am going to vote for it to help balance the Budget. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFadden].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to support this bill, because I recognize the fact that in the strained condition we are in we have got to have the money.

I am of the firm opinion, however, that this bill is not going to balance the Budget. I am supported in that view because of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, on three or four occasions, has during the present session of Congress appeared before the committee of this House and the committee at the other end of the Capitol, and each time he has had to revise upward his estimates as to the income necessary to balance the Budget because the sources of taxation were drying up.

How we could raise the revenue and balance the Budget—that has been the problem. There have been a lot of people interested apparently in carrying on propaganda insisting that we do this and that, that we must balance the Budget, but I do not believe that at this time you can pass any bill under which you will be able to raise the revenue which you contemplate can be raised by the levies in this bill because of the fact that on account of the continued business depression, the sources from which the money is to come are continually drying up.

This House refused to resort to a sales tax, but the Senate has inserted a limited sales tax in this bill. Many obnoxious provisions have been placed in the bill since it left this House. It would seem as though, in response to the demands of those people who are and have been insisting upon a sales tax that many of these obnoxious provisions have been placed in this bill for the sole purpose of creating a feeling of disgust on the part of the public, so that the public would prefer the sales tax, and thus would the salestax advocates succeed.

In view of what I have said, I should like to make this prediction, that by the time Congress assembles next December the Secretary of the Treasury will have discovered that the sources of taxation provided in this bill will have further dried up so as to make another deficit in the Budget, and the Secretary will then again appear before the two committees of the Congress where tax matters are considered, again revising his estimates in order to balance the Budget, and will insist that the only way to then balance the Budget will be for Congress to enact a sales tax law.

Gentlemen, in times like the present it is impossible to keep a balanced Budget.

Of course, there are items in this bill which are obnoxious. It is a drastic bill. These are drastic times, and we must take that into consideration. I would much rather reduce Government expenses than increase taxes, but that can not be done at this session. It will be done, however, at the next session.

Mr. Speaker, I have from time to time pointed out the fact that there are sources to which we could look for income to correct this situation and which so far have heretofore been avoided. I refer to the fact that there is now pending before the Treasury Department for collection practically a billion dollars' worth of unpaid taxes. There are hundreds of millions of fraudulently withheld taxes which should be gone into and collected.

I should like to discuss some of these matters, because they are pertinent to this particular subject.

Mr. Speaker, for many months I have been participating in an active investigation into the collection of the public revenues. The time has come to place what has been discovered before the attention of the Congress.

Although I was in possession of important information at the beginning of this inquiry, I have been amazed by the almost unbelievable situation which has been discovered to exist. Hundreds of millions, perhaps billions, of dollars have been diverted from the public funds by practices which could not exist without the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is not too much to say that the shortage is so great that it is directly responsible for the need for new revenue which is now absorbing the attention of the two honorable bodies meeting under this historic roof. If the tax laws had been enforced, there would be no need for new

I have called these discoveries to the personal attention of Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, and to Mr. Ogden L. Mills, the present incumbent of that office. I have not been able to discover in either of these gentlemen any disposition to correct existing evils, to collect back taxes, or to take any steps at all to bring this condition to an end.

Individuals and corporations who should pay large taxes not only escape full payment of their just share of the expenses of Government but are also the recipients of huge tax refunds which return to them the greater part of the sums they do pay. There exists what amounts to an alliance between tax evaders, attorneys, certain public accountants, and Treasury officials which operates to exempt from taxation those best able to pay and shifts the burden of governmental expense to the shoulders of those least able to pav.

The same forces which conduct this enterprise in defiance of law are now before the Congress and the public with specious arguments for legislation which will legalize the theory that only the poor and the middle class should "Socking the rich," that pat phrase given curpay taxes. rency by the present Secretary of the Treasury, is a deceptive smoke screen to cover the work of this propaganda. The rich are not being "socked"; it is the increasing poor and the dwindling middle class who are bending under the blows of taxation.

Tax evasion extends into every field of business. Any large income whose possessor is part of the system can and does escape taxation through the operation of the alliance to which I have already referred. I will offer but a few instances of the extent to which this has been done, saving most of the evidence and the time of the House for later and more orderly presentation.

Particularly odious are a group of cases in which the Treasury seems to be allied with the New York branch of an English accounting firm to cancel a vast sum of war-profit taxes levied years ago upon foreign steamship companies. Opinions of successive Attorneys General of the United States holding these taxes due and payable have been set aside in secret and unpublished proceedings in which the present Attorney General seems to have played an important part. Laws passed by Congress have been reversed by "opinions" and "regulations" and "interpretations" promulgated by Treasury attorneys, and millions of dollars of refunds have been made to these foreign steamship companies, instead of collecting from them the unpaid taxes they owe under the law.

Mr. Speaker, the founders of this Republic provided for three departments of our Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial. Each department was designed to act independently but in conjunction with the other two. Each has its inalienable rights and privileges not subject to infringement by either of the other two branches. Each acts as a check and a balance upon aggression by either of the other two branches.

The founders were freshly out from under the shadow of monarchy. Eight years of war had sickened them of kings. They planned a government in which there could be no supreme head, a government in which personal ambition or greed could never rise above the public welfare. They planned a system of cooperation and safeguard which would for all time keep this country out from under the shadow of dictatorship-provided that the laws were for all time observed.

For several years past there has been a tendency for the executive branch—that is, the President and his Cabinet and the bureaus under their control-to encroach upon the functions of the legislative and judicial branches of the Government, even to the point of ignoring the laws passed by the Congress and the decisions made by the Supreme Court. We are told that the Constitution is outworn that the 'great minds" know best what should be done and that we should abolish constitutional government in favor of the rule of the superman.

Congress has not yet submitted to this surrender of its share of the constitutional responsibility, but that has made no difference to the executive branch. The gentlemen at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue are increasingly prone to do exactly what pleases them without regard for any consideration of law or ethics.

A few days ago the Senator from Virginia, Mr. CARTER GLASS, disclosed that a very important opinion of the Solicitor General of the United States had been ignored for over 20 years. The Senator further disclosed that he had great difficulty in securing a copy of this opinion, that none of the executive departments which should operate under its provisions would admit knowledge of its existence, and that it was as completely ignored as though it had never been rendered. It was with the greatest difficulty, the Senator said, that he had been able to secure a copy of this opinion and then only by personal appeal to the Attorney General.

I can appreciate the difficulties of the Senator, because I have had the same sort of experience myself. As did the Senator, I followed the matter through to a conclusion, with the result that I discovered a far more astonishing and alarming condition.

After being informed that the Attorney General of the United States had rendered an opinion reversing the opinions of his predecessors and permitting the cancellation of the vast sum in tax owed by foreign steamship companies, an organization which makes a business of furnishing information concerning tax and other legal matters sought to obtain a copy of this important opinion.

This organization was informed by both the Treasury and the Department of Justice that the letter containing this opinion could not be disclosed to the public and that neither department was in a position to discuss its contents-a most remarkable condition. Other efforts through legitimate channels to secure a copy of this opinion were all defeated by the same conspiracy of silence surrounding the mystery of these foreign steamship taxes.

Fortunately, all these efforts were designed only to demonstrate the existence of the conspiracy. An authorized copy of the letter in question containing the opinion had been in the possession of the investigators from the beginning of the inquiry. I will read that letter.

WASHINGTON, July 7, 1927.

To the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sir: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of July 1, relating Six: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of July 1, relating to opinions of the Attorney General rendered November 3, 1920 (32 op. 336 T. D. 3111, C. B. June, 1921, p. 280), and January 21, 1924 (34 op. 93 T. D. 3576, C. B. June, 1921, p. 211), in so far as they deal with the income-tax liability of foreign steamship companies under revenue acts prior to 1921. I am advised by the general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in a letter written by him July 1, 1927, that the conclusions reached in the opinions referred to have never been acquiesced in by the foreign steamship companies.

opinions referred to have never been acquiesced in by the foreign steamship companies.

It appears that the returns of 72 companies are now pending in the bureau awaiting the determination of the proper method of computing tax liability for the years prior to 1921, and that 5 such cases are pending before the Board of Tax Appeals and 35 other cases are pending in the courts.

In a few instances steamship companies have paid taxes as computed by the bureau, but these were cases where the taxes resulting from the difference in the methods of computation were resulting from the difference in the methods of computation were so small as not to justify resistance by the taxpayers.

In short, the matter rests practically where it did before the two opinions referred to were rendered. The questions involved are difficult, and there is room for difference of opinion about them and the outcome of litigation is doubtful; but the opinions referred to stand in the way of your dealing with these cases in the exercise of authority granted to you by law and in a way to serve the best interests of the United States. The questions do not arise under the revenue act of 1921 or any later revenue act. Under all the circumstances you should be free to deal with the cases as the conditions seem to require; and, in order that you may do so, the opinions referred to are hereby withdrawn.

The Acting Attorney General of the United States.

Such opinions came from the office of the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General from June 4, 1925, to March 4, 1929, was William D. Mitchell, who became Attorney General at the first vacancy after this opinion was rendered.

It is little wonder, Mr. Speaker, that neither the Department of Justice nor the Treasury cares to make the contents of this letter public or to discuss those contents. Let me quote two decisions of the Court of Claims.

In the Lavalette case (1 C. Cl. 149) the court said:

That the head of a department can not, in a matter involving judgment and discretion, reverse the decision and action of his predecessor was held by the Supreme Court in the United States v. Bank of the Metropolis (15 Peters 401).

In Jackson v. The United States (19 Court of Claims, 508) the court held that-

The right of an incumbent of reviewing a predecessor's decision extends to mistakes in matters of fact arising from errors in calculation and to cases of rejected claims in which material evidence is afterwards discovered and produced.

In this last decision the court refers to the following authorities.

See also 9 Opinion of Attorney General, page 34. See also 12 Opinion of Attorney General, pages 172–358. See also 13 Opinion of Attorney General, pages 387–456. See also 14 Opinion of Attorney General, page 275.

Here we have the authority of the Attorney General clearly defined by decision of the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims. We see that he has no power to reverse the opinion of his predecessor except in cases where errors of fact have been proven. We see him in this case reversing the opinion of two predecessors upon his own stated ground of the convenience of the Secretary of the Treasury. He adds the sonorous provision-

To serve the best interests of the United States.

How does the Secretary of the Treasury proceed to "serve the best interests of the United States"? He cancels the whole sum of the taxes due under the law, using this unpublished and illegal letter from the Acting Attorney General as the basis of this generous (?) action—generous to the foreign steamship companies, but costly to the taxpayers of the United States.

Not content with this generosity at the public expense, the Secretary of the Treasury has dipped deeply into the public money to make large tax refunds to these foreign steamship companies. It is a matter of public record that as late as 1931 he made the following refunds upon the illegal withdrawal of these opinions of the Attorney General of the United States:

 Holland-America Line
 $106, 598

 International Navigation Co. (Ltd.)
 122, 155

 Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. (Ltd.)
 247, 374

Tax refunds made to foreign steamship companies prior to 1931 amounted to millions of dollars.

Mr. Speaker, can there be any doubt of the existence of an understanding between the foreign steamship companies, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Acting Attorney General? Let me requote the wording of the Acting Attorney General's letter:

The questions involved are difficult, and there is room for difference of opinion about them, and the outcome of the litigation is doubtful * * * is doubtful

The opinions referred to stand in the way of your dealing with

The opinions referred to have never been acquiesced in by the foreign steamship companies. • • •

Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this body for 18 years. Never, in my experience, have I seen such evidence of a surrender by the Government to the whims and wishes of private interests. If we are to believe this remarkable letter of the Acting Attorney General, the objection of a foreign company to the provisions of a duly enacted law is sufficient ground for canceling that law, even though the Supreme Court of the United States must be reversed in the

This unprecedented and illegal opinion by the Acting Attorney General has no shadow of legal support or precedent. while the two opinions of his predecessors, which he so lightly set aside, have been sustained by our entire judicial system, to and including the Supreme Court of the United States.

The convenience of the Secretary of the Treasury is the determining factor in the administration of the laws of the United States. The rights of our people are to be surrendered because of a fear in the mind of an Acting Attorney General that it might be "difficult" to enforce those rights in a court of justice. We are to quit because we fear that there is a possibility of defeat. We are not to enforce laws if the "right people" do not think they ought to be enforced.

We are to forgive the taxes of corporations whose officers say that they do not want to pay them, and then we are to meet in this Chamber and pass new laws laying heavy burdens upon the plain people not protected by such influence-new taxes to pay the shortages in our public funds created by the illegal cancellation of other taxes by executive officials who have no authority to make such cancellations.

It has been whispered about that conditions are worse than we know; that a dark and mysterious crisis of untold gravity hangs over our unknowing heads. It is whispered that we may have to turn to the remedy of a dictatorship, to suspend the Constitution, to dissolve the Congress, and put our fate into the unchecked and uncontrolled hands of a domestic-or imported-Mussolini.

Mr. Speaker, our distress can be traced in large measure to the perversion of law and the evasion of duty by the executive branch of the Government. We can not avoid any disaster by surrendering our affairs to the fathers of disaster. If this country is to survive—and it will survive—it will do so by the same strength that gave it birth and carried it through its other crises-the genius of our people for selfgovernment.

It is time for great changes in our Government, but not for changes turning back through the centuries to absolutism and dictatorship. It is time to restore the rule of constitutional government, time to drive out privilege and conspiracy and corruption. We must clean our house, not burn it.

Unpaid taxes in these foreign steamship cases now amount, with interest, to between one hundred and fifty and two hundred million dollars—a great sum of money and of particular interest in our present struggle to raise revenue without asking anybody to pay taxes.

I have seen no evidence that this manipulation was hatched by the foreign owners of these steamship lines. No doubt they are good business men and it is but natural that they should take advantage of our governmental conditions as they find them-but I wonder if Congress would have approved the present intergovernmental moratorium if it had been advised of this earlier and unofficial moratorium for the benefit of foreign interests.

During recent years there has been much discussion of the advisability of subsidizing American merchant ships. Congress has declined to approve such a subsidy except in the indirect form of ocean mail contracts. It is disturbing to discover that the Treasury Department has taken it upon itself secretly to subsidize foreign shipping by the extension of tax exemptions which have not been granted to American shipowners. It is little wonder that our steamship lines find difficulty in competing with foreign ships which are subsidized both by their governments and our own.

There is no warrant in law, in justice, or in morality for | laying upon our already burdened people the load of maintaining steamship lines whose vessels are part of the naval reserves of the nations whose flags they fly. This is internationalism gone mad.

The contributions made by this Congress to the maintenance of the United States Navy are the subject of careful study, much debate, and close economy. It is disturbing to find that our Treasury Department is secretly making contributions of public money to the support of foreign navies.

Steamship lines of all the great naval powers have been extended tax concessions which have not been extended to American shipowners, although not a single one of these foreign lines could exist without its share of American freight and passenger business; the American people are the greatest source of shipping revenue in the world.

English, Japanese, French, and Italian lines have all participated in this unofficial and illegal generosity of Uncle Sam; not only do we sink our warships lest we embarrass their sea power, but we also subsidize the merchant marine. which is part of the first line of the naval strength of these powers, by exempting them from the taxes we lay on our own shipping and which our law says we must levy on foreign shipping for the profits earned on American business. So that there will be no hard feelings in the League of Nations, no belief in the mind of any country that it has been slighted at the Christmas tree, the Treasury has also extended its unofficial and illegal tax exemptions to the American profits of Dutch, Spanish, Belgian, Swedish, and Norwegian shipowners.

The startling but convincing details of the manipulations by which these exemptions were accomplished is matter for an investigating committee. I will not take the time of the House to relate them here.

All this has been done by edicts of the Treasury Department-edicts directly contradictory of laws passed by the Congress and signed by successive Presidents of the United States. These contributions to the shipowners of other countries are made in secret and behind a smoke screen of foggy technicalities by the same department of the Government which now comes before our committees and tells us that we must increase taxes to replace the money that it has given away, that we must lay new imposts upon every step of our people's lives, from the baby's nursing bottle to the casket and tombstone of the final rest.

There are more chapters in this story of tax frauds and tax evasions. Hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign commercial profits taken from the American people every year pay absolutely not 1 cent of tax to the Treasury, although the law is clear that such taxes should be paid.

These exemptions are not restricted to foreign business interests. American businesses which have the password, or whatever it takes to escape income taxes, are also exempted. Thousands of cases of tax fraud and evasion are openly condoned. Evidence in several of these cases has been presented to Mr. David Burnet, United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the idea of seeing what he would do about them. Not one of these cases has been brought to conclusion and collection, although after months of investigation the bureau admits that they are due and

The history of representative government is the history of the struggle for the power to levy taxes. The English Parliament was born out of the popular demand that the representatives of the people and not the King should have the sole power to levy taxes upon the people; the American Revolution was the expression of the colonists' belief that taxation without representation was tyranny.

The wheel of history has again turned full cycle. Once again, as in the dim past, we find a parliament defied by the crown; once again do we see men in executive power secretly nullifying legislation, secretly taking into their own hands without warrant of law that power which is the foundation of government-the power to determine who shall pay taxes and in what amount. Once again do we see that same protected greed which sent Charles the First to the block, Louis the Sixteenth to the guillotine, and Nicholas the Second to the firing squad, raising its head in human affairs. Kings are dethroned not so much because of what they have done as because of what has been done in their name. They suffer for the sins of their courtiers.

The sole power to determine and levy taxes upon the people of the United States rests with the Congress of the United States. Only the elected representatives of the people can tax the people. It is our sacred duty to be watchfully jealous of that responsibility if we would continue our own existence and the existence of our country.

No Secretary in the Cabinet, no subordinate head of an executive bureau, has the legal power to say who shall pay taxes, to exempt from taxation his friends or the friends of the political organization which maintains him in office.

If any man steals money out of the Treasury, we call that theft and send the offender to prison. It is time that we determine what it is to keep money from being paid into the Treasury that should be so paid, time to determine what shall be done with trusted men who connive to destroy our laws for the benefit of their friends and to increase the burdens of the whole people so that the burdens of the chosen few shall be light.

Taxation without representation is still tyranny.

It would be folly to adopt new tax laws until we first assure ourselves that these taxes will be fairly levied and honestly collected according to the law. We have a deficit now because our present laws have not been honestly administered. If we can unearth the tax frauds of the recent past, we will discover, I believe, that they will total as much or more than the sum we are trying to raise in the pending revenue bill.

While we are considering how to lay the new taxes made necessary by the emergency of our country, other men here in Washington are sitting in secret conference to devise ways to set aside our work, to violate and destroy the new law as they have violated and destroyed the present laws, to overrule the will of Congress so that wealth may grow greater in fewer hands. Why should we lay new taxes when the revenue due under present laws is not collected from the privileged?

I realize the seriousness of the statements I have made. I hesitated to make them on the floor of this House until it became evident that they are true and that calling them to the attention of the Treasury would have no effect whatever. Repeated appeals to Mr. Mellon, Mr. Mills, and Mr. Burnet have convinced me that nothing can be expected from them. The matter must be taken over by Congress. This necessity forces me to introduce this resolution calling for an investigation. This resolution should have immediate attention by this House.

The evidence furnished to Mr. Burnet, the collector of internal revenue, and on which he has failed to act will be available for the purposes of the investigation, as will a much greater mass of information which was not intrusted to the Treasury.

Not wishing to take further time of the House, I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury on these tax matters and put into the RECORD a copy of a bill I have introduced to-day.

Dear Mr. Chairman: I have your letter of November 21, 1931, in which you request that I advise you concerning the number and total amount of the unpaid or disputed income or other tax cases remaining unsettled or now pending before the tax board of the

The records maintained by the Bureau of Internal Revenue with respect to the cases awaiting hearings by the United States Board of Tax Appeals indicate that on October 31, 1931, there were pendof Tax Appeals indicate that on October 31, 1931, there were pending before that body, or on appeal to circuit courts of appeal from decisions of the board, 19,444 appeals, and that the amount of proposed deficiency taxes involved was approximately $728,634,000. As to 221 cases the board had reached its decision, but the final order had not issued. In 644 cases the final order had issued, but the 6-month period permitted for appeal has not run. In 860 cases appeals had been filed with circuit courts. The number of cases which the board must decide is, therefore, 17,719.

There are pending before the Income Tax Unit in Washington approximately 16,400 cases which involve about $174,000,000. These cases are largely for current or late years. Most of the cases involve the tax year 1929, while the balance is for 1928 or prior years.

Although no exact figures are available as to the cases now pending before our field forces, it is probable that about $25,000,000 is involved in examinations under way at this time.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary of the Treasury.

NOVEMBER 21, 1931.

Hon. Andrew W. Mellon,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Mellon: I am informed that there has been filed with the income-tax division of the Treasury several cases of tax evasions by large income-tax payers and that these cases are now pending in the income-tax division of the Treasury. My now pending in the income-tax division of the Treasury. My information in the case is that many of these evasions have been made possible by the collusion of one of the large certified public accountant companies, namely, Price, Waterhouse & Co., of New York City. I also know that this firm do now and have for many years specialized on tax cases before the Treasury Department and that they represent hundreds of the leading taxpayers and have in many instances been employed as accountants by these taxpayers in the auditing of their accounts and making up of their annual tax returns.

My information also indicates that their eleverness has been

My information also indicates that their cleverness has been extended so far as to have been influential in the drafting of provisions in the law so as to permit easy evasion, and that their sources of influence and contacts have been of such a nature as has made it possible for them to easily secure favorable rulings and otherwise cause only a casual examination of the fraudulent reports which they have filed with your Bureau of Internal Revenue.

I also understand that, notwithstanding these disclosures, this firm has not as yet been disbarred from practicing before the Treasury Department.

The purpose of this letter is to ask you to immediately take steps to disbar this company from practicing before the Treasury Department in connection with any income tax or other matters before your department. The evidence is now in your department to justify such immediate action.

If an accounting company of the supposed reputation and

If an accounting company of the supposed reputation and standing of this company can be so clever as to have, over a period of so many years, deceived the Treasury Department, there should, now that the fraud is known, be a reaudit of the tax payments and reports as filed by them or any of their clients payments and reports as filed by them or any of their clients before your department.

The fact that this public-accounting firm has done such a thing, naturally brings suspicion upon other accounting firms who have been acting in a like capacity before the department representing large taxpayers. It would, therefore, seem to me that it should be imperative in the public interest that not only each one of the accounts of this particular firm's clients be completely audited and prosecuted, but that all other similar cases should likewise be audited and prosecuted.

pletely audited and prosecuted, but that all other similar cases should likewise be audited and prosecuted.

If my information is correct, and I believe it is, there is due and unpaid the United States Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars fraudulently withheld taxes. It seems to me that this is a matter of prime importance to you and your department—I know it is to taxpayers and the Congress—that before any new tax levies are made to cover the deficit now growing in the Treasury you should ascertain the amount of these fraudulently unpaid taxes and steps should be taken to collect them forthwith.

It does not seem possible that such a condition as this could exist or could have been perpetrated over such a long period of time without detection on the part of your department. Now that the matter is known to your department, I hope that the investigation, which I know your department has now started, will proceed thoroughly and completely before any new sources of taxation are recommended to be levied by your department on the already overburdened honest taxpayers of this country, and that these crooked taxpayers may be made to pay and those responsible for these evasions be properly dealt with.

I shall be pleased to be advised what action you take in this matter.

Respectfully yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

My Dear Congressman: I have your letter of November 21 in regard to what you refer to as cases of tax evasion with the supposed collusion of a firm of public accountants. As you have stated, this subject is one of prime importance to this department. You may rest assured that any evidence of tax evasion submitted to this department is promptly and thoroughly investigated.

The firm which you name bears a high reputation here for professional standing and trustworthiness. To assume the truth of accusations against it would be contrary to principles accepted here as in the courts.

DECEMBER 1, 1931.

Hon. Andrew W. Mellon,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Mellon: I desire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of November 24, which I have noted carefully. I am glad to get your assurance that your department are now investigating the several cases hereafter mentioned, which are pending before your department, and that you will investigate any further cases that may be reported to you through this same source or any other source. any other source.

The second paragraph of your letter attests to the high reputation with your department of Price, Waterhouse & Co. as regards their professional standing and trustworthiness. The cases which are now under consideration by your department, which are noted below, are cases which challenge the standing of this firm, and I am sure that a careful perusal of these cases and the ones I am herein referring to you will justify the disbarring of this firm in practicing before your department. I say in emphasize the inpracticing before your department. I again emphasize the importance of immediate action and advice in this respect.

practicing before your department. I again emphasize the importance of immediate action and advice in this respect.

Referring to the third paragraph of your letter, there is much more information of the character indicated in my last letter, which will be supplied to your department when they have acted upon the cases that are now pending before the department, and in this respect I refer to letters addressed to David A. Olson under date of November 24, signed by David Burnet, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in regard to cases Nos. A-254307, A-254309, A-254311, A-254312, A-254313, A-254314, A-254315, A-254316, A-254317, A-254318, A-254319, A-254320.

Referring further to the third paragraph of your letter and supplementing my last letter to you, I desire now to inquire relative to what action is being taken by the Bureau of Internal Revenue in regard to Japanese steamship cases Oaska Shosen Kaisha, Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the tax years involved being 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920. I understand that as a result of an agreement with your department the firm of Price, Waterhouse & Co. were to secure the necessary information from the books of these companies in Japan in each of these cases and were to prepare the returns on what is known as the cost-of-service basis. In this connection, I would like to inquire as to what right the Treasury has to accept the figures of any accounting house, particularly when that accounting house is a representative of the taxpayer.

The type of men, the concealments, and the careless manner in which Price, Waterhouse & Co. have carried on this work have a remained and the careless manner in which Price, Waterhouse & Co. have carried on this work have

The type of men, the concealments, and the careless manner in which Price, Waterhouse & Co. have carried on this work have been made known to the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I am at a loss to understand why the cost-of-service theory has am at a loss to understand why the cost-or-service theory has been made retroactive in the face of board and court decisions to the contrary in cases dealing with other foreign taxpayers. The importance of calling these cases to your attention now is that they are open by the extension of the statute of limitation by waivers which will expire on December 31, 1931. The time is so short in regard to your department's securing the necessary waivers or protection or other contemplated necessary action which would extend the statute for another year or otherwise preserve the department's rights under the law that, in view of the fact that this case has now been standing so long, it would seem to be imperative that immediate decisions be reached. Is this not a case where a jeopardy assessment should be applied, and the usual 60-day letter sent which, of course, would entitle the tax-payer to appeal to the United States Board of Tax Appeals for a hearing?

The basis of a 60-day letter would of course be the figures submitted to the taxpayers in the 30-day letters issued back in 1923. I make mention of this fact for the simple reason that 1923. I make mention of this fact for the simple reason that the bureau can not now accept the figures which this firm have previously submitted to the department.

If this procedure were followed, I am assuming that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would also send out a notice and demand for immediate payment of the tax, under which circumstances the taxpayer would have to pay the tax or file a bond with the collector of internal revenue.

The precedents already established by the board and courts are well understood, and it seems to me that if the companies herein referred to would appeal to the board or the courts they would find that the courts have already upheld the constitutionality of the method used in the 30-day letters submitted years ago under the section of the law upon which these cases rest in respect to other foreign toxygyers. other foreign taxpayers other foreign taxpayers.

My collaborator in these matters, in case you do not know, is David A. Olson, who for several years, until quite recently, was in the employ of Price, Waterhouse & Co. as an expert on tax matters and who is admitted to practice and has been practicing in these very cases before your department. Mr. Olson has been closely associated with the main partners of this accounting firm, and particularly with Mr. George Oliver May, and I am happy to say to you that Mr. Olson is not only willing to cooperate, but is cooperating, in every way possible with your department and will so continue until these matters are entirely disposed of.

Respectfully yours.

Respectfully yours,

L. T. McFadden.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, Washington, December 3, 1931.

Hon. Louis T. McFadden,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. McFadden: Your letter of December 1, which I have before me, makes it clear that the cases to which you refer are cases to which the attention of the Bureau of Internal Revenue was directed by Mr. David A. Olson, of whom you speak. Your letter gives no information in addition to that furnished by him. I am advised that the charges made by Mr. Olson are receiving careful attention by the proper officers of this department. If the charges, or any of them, are found to be sustained, such action as is appropriate will be taken.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary of the Treasury.

DECEMBER 9, 1931.

Hon, Andrew W. Mellon,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Mellon: I am informed by Mr. David A. Olson that the Japanese steamship cases, which I referred to in my letter of December 1, are now in the office of general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue for consideration as to whether or not the cost-of-service basis is applicable to the particular years involved. I am at a total loss to understand why it should be necessary at this late date for general counsel to consider the legality of the service basis or any other basis.

It is my understanding that the Attorney General, in an opinion legality of the service basis or any other basis.

It is my understanding that the Attorney General, in an opinion dated November 3, 1920, stated that foreign steamship companies are taxable upon income from traffic originating within the United States, and that this method was also upheld by the Attorney General in a letter addressed to you under date of January 21, 1924. It seems to me that the presence of these cases in the general counsel's office is an absolute refusal on the part of the bureau to recognize the Attorney General's, opinions, even including the letter which the Acting Attorney General wrote to you under date of July 7, 1927.

Inasmuch as there seems to be a question in the minds of the bureau officials as to what basis should be used, it would seem to me as a justice to the taxpayer that the bureau use the method outlined by the Attorney General in his opinion dated November 3, 1920, for the reason that that opinion has been upheld by the United States Board of Tax Appeals in the Birkin case decided November 9, 1926, and also in the Tootle, Broadhurst, Lee Co. case decided November 25, 1927. In the latter case the board's opinion was affirmed by the second circuit court.

The acceptance of further waivers in these cases tends only to weaken the administrative application of the statute, and in view of that fact I seriously request you as the Secretary of the Treasury to take immediate steps to advise these taxpayers of their tax liability before the expiration of the statute of limitation.

Sincerely yours,

Sincerely yours,

L. T. MCFADDEN.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, Washington, December 11, 1931.

Hon. Louis T. McFadden,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. McFadden: I have your letter of December 9, written at the suggestion of Mr. David A. Olson. I will see that Mr. Olson's suggestions, transmitted through you, are placed with the material that he furnished to the department directly, which, as I advised you, is now receiving consideration.

Yours very truly,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary of the Treasury.

MARCH 26, 1932.

Hon. OGDEN L. MILLS,

Hon. Ogden L. Mills,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: Under date of December 8, 1931, I addressed your predecessor, Mr. A. W. Mellon, in connection with certain Japanese steamship tax cases as to their liability on the basis of the information previously submitted, and I was advised at that time that the bureau would accept waivers extending the statute of limitation to December 31, 1932.

I desire to call your attention to the fact that six months have now elapsed since the bureau was notified of the irregularity in connection with these cases and other steamship cases which were referred to, and yet no apparent action has been taken by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to these cases. I am at a loss to understand the nonaction on the part of the Treasury at a loss to understand the nonaction on the part of the Treasury in regard to this important matter.

I shall appreciate it very much if upon receipt of this letter you will advise me what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue intends to do in connection with the collection of these taxes which are due from these several companies which have been reported to you under the revenue act of 1918.

Awaiting your reply, I remain, very truly yours, L. T. McFadden.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 1, 1932.

Hon. Louis T. McFadden,

Hon. Louis T. McFadden,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Congressman: I have your letter dated March 26, 1932, relative to the income and profits tax liabilities, under the revenue act of 1918, of certain Japanese steamship companies, and also referring to prior correspondence in this matter.

You will, of course, understand that the determination of the tax liabilities of alien enterprises of this nature, carried on for the most part abroad, can not be accomplished with the expedition ordinarily possible in dealing with domestc taxpayers. This is especially true in cases involving, as these do, a number of contested issues. The absence of ultimate decision, whether by way of agreement between the parties, if that should be possible, or as a basis for litigation, is not to be taken as indicating nonaction. On the contrary, the so-called Japanese steamship cases have been, are now, and will be for some time in the future, under very active consideration.

With reference to the concluding paragraph in your letter, the

With reference to the concluding paragraph in your letter, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will determine the tax liabilities in question in a fair and lawful manner, under the governing revenue act, and this will be done as expeditiously as the circumstances of each case will permit.

Very truly yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS, Secretary of the Treasury.

[H. Res. 249, in the House of Representatives, Seventy-second Congress, first session, June 4, 1932]

[H. Res. 249, in the House of Representatives, Seventy-second Congress, first session, June 4, 1932]

Mr. McFadden submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Speaker is authorized and directed to appoint a committee to be composed of seven Members of the House, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. The committee is authorized and directed to investigate and determine the amount of income and excess profits taxes which have been fraudulently evaded, either with or without the knowledge of the Bureau of Internal Revenue; and to investigate and determine the exact amount of income and excess profits taxes which the Bureau of Internal Revenue failed to collect by the unconstitutional and illegal withdrawal of the Attorney General's opinions rendered November 3, 1920 (32 O. P. 336 (T. D. 3111, C. B., June, 1921, p. 280)), and January 21, 1924 (34 O. P. 93 (T. D. 3576, C. B., June, 1924, p. 211)), in the 112 foreign steamship cases for the years prior to 1921, falling under the revenue acts of 1916, 1917, and 1918; and to investigate and determine the amount of income and excess profits taxes lost to the United States Government through favoritism given to certain taxpayers by the failure of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to publish rulings which have been rendered by the Treasury Department; and to investigate and determine the amount of income and excess profits taxes lost to the United States Government in tax cases which have been settled by officials of the Treasury Department after the issuance of 60-day letters to taxpayers; and to investigate and determine the number of cases and the total amount of taxes involved in those cases now pending before the United States Board of Tax Appeals; and, further, to make a review of tax refunds in excess of $100,000.

The committee shall as soon as possible, but not later than the termination of the present Congress, report to the House the results of its investigation, together wit times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures, not exceeding $50,000, as it deems necessary.

Mr. CRISP. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Glover].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I can not do justice to myself in two minutes, and I yield back that time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there are many items in this bill that I dislike to see in it. If I had the means of taking them out without disturbing the country, I would do everything I could to get them out. I am particularly discouraged about the increased rates in the lower income taxes. I dislike very much to see a tax on checks.

My particular district will be punished very severely because of the tax on the sale of automobiles and accessories. Many of the so-called luxury items are unfortunate. I dislike to see the tariff items in the bill, but during the last several weeks this Nation has gone through a steady decline, a decline and a discouragement in business of every kind. We have tried many things, but each day confidence slumps and commerce recedes. I believe to go over this week-end without adopting this conference report would be one of without adopting things we could possibly do to the country. I appeal to the House, without regard to political effect, to join with us and vote to pass this measure in order that to-night when this Nation goes to bed it can have some confidence that we have taken a definite effective step to balance the Budget. [Applause.]

But our job will not yet be done. The Budget can not be completely balanced by taxation alone. We can not ask the people to bear the full burden of this enormous, unwieldy, uncoordinated, uneconomic machinery of government which past Congresses set up in those Pollyanna years when the flower of prosperity was thought to be everblooming.

We must quickly narrow the function of government to the limits of necessity.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, of course probably not a single Member of this House would indorse a major part or perhaps even a large part of the methods of taxation and other details contained in this conference report, but the question before us now is not whether we may choose between one system or another but whether or not we will pass any revenue law at all. Gentlemen now say that they are in favor of the manufacturers' excise tax of the character which the Committee on Ways and Means brought into the House. If any Members of the House have changed their views on that subject and now favor the general tax, let them vote down this conference report and then direct very frankly that the House itself shall again proceed to the consideration of the matter de novo, to the end that the House may have an opportunity to change its former attitude: but the members of the Committee on Ways and Means, with all of the earnestness at their command, sought to convince the House that the general manufacturers' excise tax was the best method for raising the taxes which are failing because of the loss of incomes by those who have heretofore borne the largest burdens of Federal taxation. We are yet convinced that that is the best method and that eventually that method will be adopted by a future Congress if not by this Congress. But now we have a single issue that stares us in the face, the naked question whether to-day we will take the last necessary step toward balancing the Budget. Do you realize that next Tuesday, the 7th day of June, six months will have expired since this House convened in the present session of Congress?

Do you realize that this Congress will have spent six full months, one half year, in the passage of a tax bill at a time when the passage of such a bill was absolutely necessary for maintaining the credit of the Government of the United States and for restoring prosperity, confidence, and happiness among the people? Then why talk about the things that are past? I say to my good brother from Chicago that I was for the manufacturers' sales tax, and I am for it now, but there is no chance of putting it into this bill. Also, I was for the tax on beer, and I am for it now, but there is no chance in the world of getting this Congress to adopt it; so why waste time about it? The deficit of this Government amounts to $3,400,000 per day, at the rate of $1,241,000,000 per year. Every day that we have lost and every day that we will lose in the passing of an adequate revenue bill has increased and will increase the deficit of the United States Treasury by that amount.

There are many things practically indefensible in this bill. There is, for instance, the tax put on in this House of 5 cents per hundred dollars of valuation on operations on the produce exchanges which was accepted by the Senate a few hours before it concluded the consideration of the bill, after having previously reduced it to the present rate of 1 cent. There is the failure both of the other body and of the conferees to accept the very just and humanitarian proposal for a revaluation of the depreciated assets of estates which are practically wiped out by the present tax. There is the provision which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crispl emphasized a moment ago as a great victory by the House conferees, which places an additional tax on consolidated returns and which is in fact a penalty on certain corporations for the privilege of doing business in the best way suited to them.

We have in this bill selected the industries and the interests which show any signs of life, which show any hope of progress for the immediate future, and have placed the heaviest burdens on them instead of distributing these burdens over all the people. But beyond and in spite of all these and other hardships in this bill, there is presented to us at this moment the paramount proposition that we must balance the Budget of the United States and tell the world as well as our own people that the Congress of the United States after six months will not reject the labors of all that period and that we will immediately do what we can toward restoring confidence and thereby ultimate general prosperity among our people. [Applause.]

To me, our inescapable duty to-day is to adopt this conference report and leave to a better and happier day the adjustment of the discriminations and inequities and even the mistaken policies, which unfortunate, and perhaps unavoidable, conditions in the country, as well as in the Congress, have brought into this piece of legislation. Both the Congress and the country have learned much since the House rejected the manufacturers' excise tax. Future experience will also again prove the folly of drying up the sources of revenue both from income and from capital and the wisdom of extending a part of our Federal revenue system to the only other remaining source, the exchange, that is, the sale of commodities, as was done in the recent proposal, without pyramiding and without unfair discrimination. This is a government of all the people, and all should share justly in the cost of its maintenance.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we are coming to the conclusion of the consideration of this tax problem. This tax problem has hung ghostlike over this Congress since the beginning of the session. I admit the bill is not absolutely perfect. There is probably no man in the United States who agrees to every single provision in the bill, but was there ever a tax bill that was popular? The only tax bill that I can imagine that would be popular at this time would be one that would relieve all of the people from all parts of the country from paying any tax at all, and that is an impossibility at the present time. When we consider this bill let us keep this in mind, that this is not a permanent tax bill, that this is only a temporary one to meet the present emergency. This is not the last time we are ever going to ! have a chance to express ourselves on tax measures.

If there are some provisions in the bill that ought not be here, there will be an opportunity to take them out. If there are some inconsistencies in the bill, there will be an opportunity to rectify them. If there are some omissions that ought to go in the bill that are not here at the present time, there will be an opportunity to put them in.

Now, as the gentleman who just preceded me said, I am one of those Members who was in favor of the manufacturers' sales tax. I believe the original tax bill as presented by our Ways and Means Committee was the fairest, most just, and equitable tax that could possibly have been passed at this time, but the majority thought otherwise.

A great many representatives of business organizations came to my office to protest against the original sales tax. Some of those same men have been here this last week to protest against the taxes that are carried in this bill. I told them at the time that they might better take a reasonably small tax, evenly distributed throughout the whole country, than some selected sales taxes which would not be agreeable to them or to their people. But, of course, every man wants to get away from paying taxes, if possible. I do not know that I blame them, but, of course, they come here now and they have just exactly what we told them they would get, namely, special excise taxes.

Every part of the country is demanding that we balance this Budget. Every part of this country is demanding that we pass a tax bill and go home; and it does not make any particular difference if we stay here three or four months longer, the men who are protesting this present tax bill would lose more in depreciation of their present assets than any amount of money they will ever pay under this tax bill.

In the four or five months we have been considering it we have lost four times as much money as we collected, and securities of every kind are depreciating every single day. I tell you, my friends, I tremble to think what would happen if the news went out of this Chamber this afternoon that we failed to do our duty. I tell you, my friends, we must do our duty and agree to this report, and do it at once, and tell the world we are going to stabilize the American financial and economic structure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of taking the lead in a very unpopular legislative enactment, to wit, levying heavy taxes, fell upon me. I have met that responsibility to the best of my ability. I knew it would subject me to criticism. Conscious that I was doing my duty, serving my country, criticism is immaterial, whether from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] or anyone else. I emerge from this contest with my complete self-respect, which to me is all important. I was somewhat surprised at the remarks of my friend the distinguished leader [Mr. RAINEY] in view of what took place in the conference. The gentleman referred especially to the tax on electric energy. I heard no protest from him in conference, but all agreed that that matter had to be changed. The gentleman did oppose the tariff on lumber. So did I. I think it is indefensible, but an emergency confronted me as to whether I would agree temporarily as to that item in order to bring in a bill to balance the Budget, and to serve my country, and I accepted it. When the next tariff bill is written it will be corrected. In the House I opposed all tariff items, and a grievous error was made when two-oil and coal-were included in the bill. The Senate agreed to them. So the conferees were impotent to change them. I was not going to let one more, lumber, hold up the tax bill, so vital to the country and for that reason alone I agreed to it as I frankly stated in my opening speech to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I will not prolong this discussion. Next to my God and my family I love my country. [Applause.] And some weeks ago, yea, some months ago, I announced from this spot that I was going to forget self and serve my country, and I have kept the faith. [Applause.] I have not spared myself, mentally, physically, nor considered my political welfare. If this bill passes, the Budget will be balanced-and if anything will aid in restoring prosperity and giving employment and confidence in the American Government, it will be a balanced Budget. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Crisp, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-REVENUE BILL OF 1932

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, regarding this general tax bill, H. R. 10236, may I call attention further to the objectionable features in this bill.

The tax on electrical energy is truly a tax that will be paid by the consumer direct. I call attention to my remarks on the floor to the fact that the power companies will not be affected by this tax other than whatever reduction in their business will come through additional charges, which may cause some to economize. I doubt, however, if this will be scarcely noticeable.

The ordinary consumer of electricity will continue to use electrical power and light, and the burden will be borne by him rather than by the power companies. The old rates established by the power companies are still in effect, and have not been reduced correspondingly as prices in other industries have been reduced.

These companies have the benefit of cheaper labor, cheaper construction and upkeep, and cheaper commodities necessary in the conduct of their business, yet the rates of public utilities have not been reduced in proportion to the actual benefits that have come to them from the depression.

The farmers in the arid districts who are dependent upon electrical power in irrigation will be compelled also to pay an additional tax. When we consider what the farmer has lost in the reduction of his price of commodity, it does not seem fair and equitable that he should be burdened with a tax that should be properly levied against an institution that has been more favored than himself.

A statement that the Government can collect easier is, indeed, a fallacy and, in my opinion, is not based upon fact. In each instance the Government must collect from the vendor, namely, the power company; and why it is said collection can be expedited if the power company is permitted to collect from the consumer, and then the Government collect from the vendor, the power company, is beyond my power of comprehension.

This tax is almost as bad as the proposed tax on food and clothing, which were exempted, as electrical power and light is no more considered a luxury but a necessity, and I can not be in favor of taxing a necessity of life as long as there are other avenues of taxation open.

This bill also carries a tax on brewers' wort of 15 cents a gallon, and also upon malt and malt sirup, unless sold to a baker for use in baking or to a manufacturer or producer of malted milk. Grape concentrate, evaporated grape juice, is also taxed 20 cents a gallon.

Can one conceive how the House of Representatives, that has heretofore voted against a tax on intoxicating liquors, if beer may be so classified, and voted against any change in the present Volstead Act, and in this bill this same House of Representatives voting a tax upon brewers' wort and malt, out of which beer only can be made, and placing its approval upon the contraband that is designated for one purpose, and that is the evasion of the very law the Congress refuses to change, namely, the Volstead Act?

Under what theory can one vote to tax grape concentrate and at the same time refuse to vote a tax on wine when grape concentrate is used for the one purpose, in the main, of making contraband wine? It seems strange that mentality can so adjust itself as to vote for a product that will produce an article that in itself will eventually become contraband and prohibited by law.

In other words, to-day the House of Representatives is voting to tax the unassembled ingredients of wine and beer and at the same time refuses to place a tax upon the same product when scientifically manufactured.

This tax recognizes the legitimacy of the home brewer and refuses to recognize a brewer authorized by law.

Even the authors of this bill admit it has discriminatory provisions. Many selected articles like jewelry and furs, pay the penalty for being in the selective class.

In a few days the economy measure will be brought to us to produce a saving of approximately $260,000,000. This saving will largely be deducted from the wages of the Federal employees. And if this economy bill is adopted, let it be known to the wage earners of the country that rather than tax beer, which is wort in one of its stages, the Congress is taking from the wage earners these millions of dollars.

Every bill has its good parts, and one of these sections adopted gives great comfort to the people of the country that I represent. The provision in the bill where lumber, rough or planed or dressed on one or more sides, is protected by a $3 per thousand feet board measure is one of the items in this bill that will assist the Pacific Northwest in this time of depression.

I am surprised at my colleagues from States that do not produce timber products objecting to this provision. The Pacific Northwest to-day is prostrated because of the influx of timber products from Canada on the north of us.

Our sawmills are closed down. Thousands of our citizens are unemployed because of the fact that Washington mills can not meet the competition of the Canadian industry. Carload after carload of lumber is being shipped through the State of Washington from British Columbia directly past sawmills that are now idle in Washington State.

The entire industry is paralyzed. Banking institutions that were dependent upon this industry have failed by the score. Men and women are walking the streets asking for bread. We are hoping that this $3 per thousand tariff will open some of these mills and give employment to our people.

I can not understand the objection of my colleagues from States not producing timber products. Our prosperity means their prosperity. We can not buy their products unless our mills are open and kept going, and I am of the opinion that it is a shortsighted policy on the part of representatives from other States objecting because they will be compelled to pay a little more for timber products. If they pay more for our timber products, we will give them a market for the products of their farms.

This, in my opinion, gentlemen, is one of the outstanding features for good in this bill. May I state that there are very few features that can be so labeled?

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the subject of taxation is all-embracing; and when we consider it, we think of all other economic problems. Therefore, let me mention a few of these before I briefly set forth some of my ideas touching the various forms of taxes.

Among the problems of first magnitude now seriously and tragically confronting the Nation is that of a farm-relief system which will permanently insure much better prices for farm products. I believe this can only be accomplished in a satisfactory way by a contract system controlling alike production, marketing, and prices.

Next in importance is that of securing gainful employment for labor and reasonable income for the individual independent citizen. In order to accomplish these essential economic achievements, it is necessary among other things to solve the transportation question and give both labor and capital equal protection, each within its own proper sphere.

It has been said that "the power to tax is the power to destroy" and hence no economic problem is of more importance than that of taxation.

We should strive with all our might to tax as little as possible rather than be engaged in imposing new vicious methods of using this "power to destroy."

I am unalterably opposed to the Federal sales tax. This tax can not at all be justified, unless it be for State or other local purposes and then only for the purpose of giving relief against the unfair, ad valorem or property tax which is now so burdensome to our people. No direct tax should be levied for Federal purposes except upon the larger incomes, estates, and inheritances. Revenues for local or State purposes may be properly raised from these sources, but as the States begin to augment the raising of revenues in this way, the property tax should be proportionately decreased. By far, the larger part of the present unbearable tax burden is borne by the people for State, county, and municipal purposes.

The State of Georgia should never have imposed the in-

The State of Georgia should never have imposed the income tax or any other additional tax burden except as a means of relieving the property tax. The Federal Government should never invade the States by an imposition of a sales tax or any form of excessive excise taxes. The so-called tobacco tax is too high and should be only levied so as to raise revenue and to the end that the farmers may get a better price for their products, but I do not wish to go farther into that question now, as it would require too much time for this discussion.

I am opposed to this entire tax bill because I feel it is vicious in many particulars and that it is unnecessary at this time. I have heretofore stated in detail why I object to this measure and shall not again do so now.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, the House has just been informed by the acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House that the conference report, signed by conferees on the part of the Senate and the House, and which is now before us for consideration, must be accepted as a whole, or rejected as an entirety. There is no way that amendments may be made to items placed in the bill by the Senate, and which may aptly be designated as nuisance taxes.

The Senate placed a tax of 2 cents on each bank check. This means a heavy penalty upon small cream and egg transactions if checks are used. I do not think it just or fair for small bank checks to be so taxed; in fact, I think the farmer and the buyer can cooperate to defeat such an iniquitous tax. If the purchasers of eggs and cream should give an order in the following form, it would not be subject to the 2-cent tax, and the Treasury Department has so held:

Main Office, Goodland, Kans. James Butcher, dealer in poultry and eggs Highest price for quality Payable at the Silver Lining Bank, Goodland, Kans.

Farmers should insist that the dealers to whom they sell their cream and eggs give them such orders.

The Senate also included a $3 per thousand feet tax on lumber, which is in addition to the dollar tariff rate now levied against lumber. The Tariff Commission under the law is empowered to make investigations and to make findings therefrom as to the cost of production abroad and at home upon the particular item investigated. The commission on November 9, 1931, rendered a very exhaustive report of its investigation as to lumber and at this time found that a change in the existing rate was not warranted. In violation of our established tariff policy the $3 rate was included in the bill during its consideration in the Senate. It will in effect constitute an embargo, and as a result the lumber buyers of the United States will be left at the mercy of the lumber mills.

Another very objectionable item included in the bill during its consideration in the Senate was the 1 cent per gallon tax on gasoline. The various States of the Union have for some time been levying a tax upon gasoline sold in their respective States for the purpose of helping to defray State expenses. The Federal Government's intervention into the States' avenues of raising taxes creates confusion and adds to the very heavy burden now assumed by gasoline buyers.

I can not support such obnoxious provisions. They are unfair and unjust to the common people of this country, and shall not be sanctioned by my vote.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in voting for the Budget balancing tax bill I had very much the same feeling that a patient has on entering the operating room for an operation. The operation is bad enough but a ruptured appendix is worse. I disliked it—I dreaded to vote and place this additional burden on the taxpayers of the country already burdened to distraction by Federal, State, and municipal taxes; I hoped until the last minute some other solution could be found, but there was none, and no alternative was left.

In view of the disclosures in the President's message to the Senate several days before, showing the rapid withdrawal of gold from the United States, failing confidence in our financial stability at home and abroad, and the necessity for immediate action to save a general financial and industrial collapse, I saw then and can see now nothing to do but support this measure.

I feel that a great mistake was made in not passing the manufacturers' excise tax, a slight, evenly distributed manufacturers' tax with such a broad base that it would have hurt no one seriously and raised a revenue of approximately $600,000,000. Revenue would have begun to flow into the Treasury at once and the nuisance taxes, such as stamps on checks, increased postage, telephone and telegraph messages, light and gas, stock, bond, and real-estate transfers, movies, and numerous other irritating and in the aggregate expensive taxes could have been avoided. An even more serious objection is the heavy burden placed on a special class of selected industries, so heavy that at this time of depression it may result in serious injury to some of these activities, every one of which is a large employer of labor.

No choice, however, was given; it was this tax bill or chaos, and for this reason and this alone I voted for it.

I voted for the manufacturers' excise tax bill when it was presented, and urged its passage, and would have voted against this bill had there been any chance of going back to the excise tax, but having been defeated in both the House and the Senate it was hopeless to expect it to be revived.

It is entirely possible, however, that if the present bill fails to produce the revenue expected of it, and many think it will, and proves to be too great a burden, that the manufacturers' excise tax may be revived at the December session. If so, I shall support it again.

This country has borrowed and mortgaged itself into its present condition, and I do not believe it can borrow or mortgage itself out. The way out, in my opinion, lies in the strictest economy; in adhering strictly to the necessary and essential functions of Government, and not in further depressing the millions of overburdened taxpayers with vast and unnecessary projects to create work for a comparatively few workers. They will be absorbed much quicker, and permanently, by relieving business and industry of the burdens of Government and if let alone they will take up the slack in unemployment.

For this reason I can not support the Garner bill, nor can I support other expenditures for the Farm Board, Department of Agriculture, aside from its normal functions, or any other artificial and socialistic activity.

I propose to vote Government dollars for strictly Government functions and nothing else.

Mr. LARRABEE. Mr. Speaker, propagandists of the administration now in power and the party whose administrations have been in full power for the past 12 years, as was to be expected, are making every possible effort to cover up their own blunders, failures, and shortcomings with the attempt to saddle the entire blame for the present panic on the new Democratic House of Representatives, and at the same time resell their candidate for President to the people under the smoke screen.

They have gone so far with this propaganda campaign that they have succeeded in a measure in turning some minds from the real facts, while the Democratic House, true to its pledge, has made every possible effort to give full cooperation in every way possible to the program of the administration or anyone else who offered any suggestion to relieve conditions.

It is encouraging to note, however, that the people as a whole, are not swallowing this old-fashioned brand of propaganda, and the people generally are rallying to their own defense as citizens and taxpayers. However the interest now being shown by the taxpayers has come too late to prevent the conditions that are upon us.

Had the people shown this same keen interest in times of plenty, the Federal Government would not be suffering from financial paralysis to-day.

The Hoover administration would never have permitted the 63 per cent increase in expeditures of major Federal departments, commissions, and independent offices, that has resulted since 1927.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that in appropriations and expenditures of 15 major departments, commissions, and independent offices, increases since 1927 ranged all the way from 19 to 614 per cent, and in only one department was any decrease shown. The Navy Department's increase from 1927 to 1932 was 19 per cent. The Post Office Department deficit appropriation increased in 1932 by 614 per cent over that of 1927. The Interior Department, according to the figures, showed a decrease of 74 per cent, but the fact is that this largely, if not all, resulted from the removal of the Bureau of Pensions from that department to the United States Veterans' Administration, an independent office. The others are varied from 34 to 220 per cent increases, to give a total percentage of increase of 63 per cent for these departments.

These are actual figures of what has happened in that brief period of from 1927 to the present time, and it should be remembered that the Democratic House had not yet been elected.

According to the estimate of the Treasury Department, made public in December last, the National Government's expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, exceed by $1,231,100,000 those of 1927.

It should be remembered, too, in the year of 1927 industrial activity in the United States was nearly at its peak, and prices of commodities were, generally speaking, far above those of to-day. In 1927 the people were prosperous, as a whole, and were able to stand what should be considered the peak in governmental expenditures and taxation.

From 1928 until to-day the industrial, commercial, and general economic trend has been downward, slowly for a time, then with tragic suddenness. But notwithstanding all this, the Federal expenditures under the Republican administration have been rocketing upward with uncontrolled speed until the administration finally awoke to the realization that the Federal Government had been plunged into virtual bankruptcy. Bureaus and commissions have multiplied until there are now approximately 200, which are ever demanding more expansion, more authority, and more of the taxpayers' money.

Early this year the administration estimated to Congress that a deficit of $2,000,000,000 would result in the Federal Treasury by the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, but they tried to make it appear that this was all due to decreased revenues from falling tariff and other sources of Federal income.

The truth is that expenses so drastically increased—and needlessly—had much to do with the condition as it now is. Why the administration seeks to place this burden all on its own panic, and not on its own extravagance, is not hard to understand. But, more serious than that, latest available estimates are that the deficit will reach $3,000,000,000.

Now, to cover up this deficit the Republican administration has been forced to call on Congress for huge additional taxes to be paid from the practically empty purse of a prostrate public. New sources of revenue had to be found. It was impossible to effect sufficient economy in the present establishment of Federal governmental departments to prevent it without practically prostrating the entire establishment of Federal governmental functions and bringing down ruin to the governmental system.

No plan of taxation that could be offered will meet with general approval. Those individuals, who in the past have enjoyed incomes sufficiently large to place them in the class of income-tax payers, resent any increase in income taxes, as they too have suffered substantial decreases in their incomes as the result of the panic. Corporations and other producers of this class resent any increase in corporation taxes for the same reason.

Taxes, through proposed sales-tax levies, to be paid by every one who buys any commodity with the possible bare necessities of plain food and modest clothing, would even heap an additional hardship on the unemployed laborer and the bankrupt farmer, most of whom have never "enjoyed" the sensation of paying income taxes even in prosperous years.

Fither method of taxation will doubtless have the effect of raising prices without any benefit to the producers—the farmers and the laborers—that should come with increased prices, and threaten to lessen sales, slow down industry, and increase unemployment and want, which will only drive costs upward and result in greatly increased distress.

While the Democratic House of Representatives and its committees has been struggling with the problem of reducing appropriations for the Federal departments to effect savings and economy that must be effected to avert further catastrophy, they have faced the spectacle and the obstacle of the administration, through its Cabinet members—the heads of the various departments that have contributed the 63 per cent increase in expenses since 1927—opposing bitterly, and in fact obstructing, the work of Congress along this line.

When the House first tackled this problem several weeks ago the Treasury Department provided one set of figures as to the financial condition of the Federal Government. Before the House had completed its work on the revenue bill the Treasuy Department, evidently discovering a serious error in the first figures it had provided, submitted another and entirely different set of figures. We are told this same condition was forced upon the Senate committee, as it attempted to decide whether or not the House bill was adequate, and called for Treasury estimates.

In addition to objections of bureaus themselves, in almost every instance, while the House considered the economy bill, it and its members and committees were deluged with letters and telegrams from every section of the country, urging that this or that bureau be not disturbed. Many of those who sent these messages pleading for the life of their pet bureau or appropriation also sent letters and messages, before or later, taking Congress to task for a presumed failure to bring about economy and for the necessity of increasing revenue through taxation.

The tendency within recent years to have the powerful hand of Federal Government reach into almost every phase of human life is not only costly but a dangerous one. Such a tendency is leading into inactivity and indifference in local governments and community responsibility in many sections, and is challenging the actual perpetuity of our form of government, which all Americans demand that we preserve for posterity.

During consideration of the economy bill the heads of the Army and the Navy, under the presidential control as their Commander in Chief, bitterly assailed the Democratic House plan to effect gigantic savings in those departments, and made it plain that any measure providing for this saving would not survive the White House veto. The Democratic plan would have eliminated many high-salaried executives, valuable to the administration for political purposes, and would have effected gigantic savings to the taxpayers, while at the same time it would have increased the efficiency of our system of national defense.

The heads of other departments fought just as bitterly in committee when cuts were proposed for their departments by the Democratic House committees.

As the economy bill and the revenue bill now stand there is grave danger that from 66 to 72 per cent of the economies which have a chance to survive the White House veto will come from threatened slashes in salaries of the laboring and working classes in the Government departments and not from needed reduction of the departmental organization.

This, too, provides another danger. It will decrease the buying power generally. It will result in thousands of Government workers now contributing substantially to the support of dependents throughout the entire Nation having to withdraw this financial aid and will add that many more to the burden that charity is already stumbling under. It endangers possibility of reviving wage scales.

Effecting economies in government is not a partisan task but a patriotic duty. Without any regard for party lines, without any effort to claim partisan credit or evade responsibility, this tremendous problem challenges our best thought and rests not only on every Member of Congress but upon the entire citizenship of the United States.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, when the tax bill was first passed by the House of Representatives, on April 1 of this year, I voted against this bill because in my opinion we should not levy one cent additional tax upon our people until we have cut the cost of government to the very bone.

So long as Congress continues to levy additional taxes there will be no real curbing of governmental extravagances. Only by a refusal to further burden our people with taxes can we hope to have any real economy in government.

The Budget should be balanced by reducing governmental expenditures instead of by increasing taxes.

As this tax bill comes back to the House from the Senate, it is more objectionable than when it first passed the House. It contains a tax on the domestic consumer of electricity. It places a tax on the users of checks which will further burden our farmers, and the small country bankers, who are already weighted down to the breaking point by taxation.

The Senate has also placed an additional tariff of $3 per thousand feet on lumber, which it is admitted will bring in little if any revenue, but will increase the price of lumber to the domestic consumer.

Additional unfair and unjust burdens have been placed on the users of automobiles by the Senate, through a tax on gasoline, tires, and tubes.

Because I believe this tax bill places an unfair and unnecessary burden upon those least able to pay, I am forced to vote against it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the limited time allotted for discussion on the conference report, which is the final action by the House on the revenue bill, has been taken up largely by the members of the Ways and Means Committee, thus affording little opportunity for other Members to express themselves. However, I desire to submit a brief statement for the Record.

In my judgment, the whole philosophy of the bill has been changed since it was first presented. It contains numerous taxes that should not be included in a proper revenue measure.

I object seriously to a tax on bank checks. This is not only a nuisance tax but, it seems to me, would have a tendency to cause depositors to withdraw their money, thus interfering with the proper conduct of the business of the country. I am not in favor of the additional tax on gasoline, as I believe this is a field that should be left to the States. Most of the States are making full use of this tax privilege. I do not believe the first-class postal rates should be increased, as this phase of the Postal Service is already more than self-sustaining. There are many other objectionable taxes embodied in the measure.

In my judgment, two methods should be used rather than the form in which this tax burden is levied.

In the first place, Government expenses should be reduced all along the line, some bureaus and commissions should be eliminated, the activities of others curtailed, and economies practiced wherever possible.

In the second place, we are far ahead in our payments on the public debt. I believe that the future payments on the public debt should be spread out over a longer period, somewhat comparable to the payments allowed foreign countries in taking care of their obligations to us. The added stimulus that would thus be given to business by virtue of not being forced to pay the added taxes would in itself increase the commerce, making payment of the balance of the taxes much easier to take care of.

Only such taxes can be justified as are necessary to carry on the affairs of the Government, economically adminis-tered. By properly safeguarding the activities of Government many of the taxes provided for in this bill would be made unnecessary.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I can not support the tax bill as returned to this House by the conferees. During the discussion of the bill in the House I voted against import taxes upon oil and coal. I do not believe that a tariff has any place in a revenue bill. These import taxes upon oil and coal are not tariffs for revenue but are intended as embargoes. We have suffered too much already as the result of embargo tariffs. Retaliatory tariffs and that peculiar system in Europe known as a quota have destroyed our foreign trade. Instead of imposing more retaliatory tariffs we should be negotiating to reduce them and encourage trade. We are subsidizing the merchant marine through mail contracts and destroying our foreign trade through tariff barriers, and allowing our ships to rust in our ports. This tax upon oil means an additional burden upon the farmer.

I am also opposed to the increase placed upon the automobile industry through the tax on gasoline and the tax upon passenger cars, trucks and auto parts, together with the tax upon tires. One-quarter of the entire tax bill is placed upon this industry. This is peculiarly a Michigan industry, and this bill strikes a heavy blow at an industry that has shown more courage and initiative than any other in the country.

Another feature of this bill I can not subscribe to is the racketeering provision, which places ten times the tax upon liquid malt or wort as is placed upon malt sirup, which is largely sold in cans. The tax on malt sirup is 3 cents a pound; a 21/2-pound can will make 5 gallons of wort. The tax laid upon this 21/2-pound can is 71/2 cents. On the other hand, the 5 gallons of wort, which is the product before condensing-and the small brewery has no condensing plant or canning plant—is taxed 75 cents for 5 gallons, in place of 7½ cents.

I am told that this provision was placed in the bill on the advice of the Prohibition Department. I am wondering what the interest of the canned-malt-sirup manufacturers was in this provision. I regard this provision as racketeering the small manufacturer in favor of the large one, and I can not vote for a bill containing this vicious provision.

I shall therefore record my vote against the bill.

LEAVE OF ARSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to-Mr. Collins, for to-day, on account of illness.

Mrs. Wingo, at the request of Mr. Driver, on account of illness in family.

"SEC. 1111. Definitions.

"SEC. 1112. Separability clause.

"SEC. 1113. Effective date of act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "13¾ per cent"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(r) Limitation on stock losses-

"(1) Losses from sales or exchanges of stocks and bonds (as defined in subsection (t) of this section) which are not capital assets (as defined in section 101) shall be allowed only to the extent of the gains from such sales or exchanges (including gains which may be derived by a taxpayer from the retirement of his own obligations).

"(2) Losses disallowed as a deduction by paragraph (1), computed without regard to any losses sustained during the preceding taxable year, shall, to an amount not in excess of the taxpayer's net income for the taxable year, be considered for the purposes of this title as losses sustained in the succeeding taxable year from sales or exchanges of stocks or bonds which are not capital assets.

"(3) This subsection shall not apply to a dealer in securities (as to stocks and bonds acquired for resale to customers) in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of his business, nor to a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, nor to persons carrying on the banking business (where the receipt of deposits constitutes a major part of such business) in respect of transactions in the ordinary course of such banking business."

"(a) Earned income from sources without United States .-In the case of an individual citizen of the United States, a bona fide nonresident of the United States for more than six months during the taxable year, amounts received from sources without the United States (except amounts paid by the United States or any agency thereof) if such amounts constitute earned income; but such individual shall not be allowed as a deduction from his gross income any deductions properly allocable to or chargeable against amounts excluded from gross income under this subsection. As used in this subsection the term 'earned income' means wages, salaries, professional fees, and other amounts received as compensation for personal services actually rendered, but does not include that part of the compensation derived by the taxpayer for personal services rendered by him to a corporation which represents a distribution of earnings or profits rather than a reasonable allowance as compensation for the personal services actually rendered. In the case of a taxpayer engaged in a trade or business in which both personal services and capital are material income-producing factors, a reasonable allowance as compensation for the personal services actually rendered by the taxpayer, not in excess of 20 per cent of his share of the net profits of such trade or business, shall be considered as earned income.'

And the Senate agree to the same.

MILITARY NOMINATIONS AND CONFIRMATIONS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, out of order and as in executive session, I report favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs certain nominations. These include the nominations of the graduating class at West Point to be second lieutenants. Inasmuch as the commencement exercises take place next Friday, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of the cadets only may be confirmed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The list of nominations confirmed will be found at the end of the Senate proceedings to-day.)

Mr. REED. I further ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of the nominations of the cadets.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I regret very much to object-not that I object to the cadets being confirmed, but I object to notifying the President of any nominations confirmed to-day.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator's reason for adhering to the custom, and I would not dream of asking a waiver in regard to the other nominations, but unless we act to-day it will be impossible for these young men to receive their commissions on Friday at the time of their

Mr. CONNALLY. To-day is Monday, and they are not to graduate until Friday. The confirmations have to lie over only two days.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; we have to wait for two executive sessions under the rule. If it were only a matter of waiting two days, we could get the commissions to the cadets in time, but I think it is entirely unlikely that we shall have two executive sessions in the two days.

Mr. CONNALLY. When did the nominations reach the

Mr. REED. They reached the Senate either Friday or Saturday. They reached the committee this morning. It was impossible to get them any sooner, because so much depends upon the cadets passing their final examinations. The department is not to blame, because they have to await the result of the examinations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Texas that from my information I do not believe the objection should be persisted in?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that he renew his request later in the day.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, out of order, by unanimous consent, as in executive session, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. This morning the Senate confirmed the nominations of all the cadets who expect to graduate this week from West Point. I asked that the President might be notified of the confirmations. The Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] objected and said he preferred that the request should be renewed later. I have spoken to that Senator, and he told me he does not care to be present when I make the request again, and that if he were present he would not object. Therefore, I feel free, in his absence, to renew the request, and do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified of the confirmations indicated.

PROPOSED ISSUE OF GOVERNMENT CERTIFICATES

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the Congressional Record an article which appeared in the Long Beach Sun, Long Beach, Calif., under date of December 20, 1931.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VOX POP'S PLACE IN THE SUN—URGES "UNITED STATES IMPROVEMENT CERTIFICATES" AS TENDER

EDITOR THE SUN:

I have addressed the following open letter to President Hoover and the United States Congress:

and the United States Congress:

"You are the only agency that can relieve the distressing conditions in this country. You are the only agency that can save this Nation from the decay into which we are fast drifting. You are the only agency that can bring back again the hope and luster to the eyes of our great American people. You are the only agency that can prevent the people from becoming wards of charity, or an emaciated people, so caused by malnutrition, or a nation of criminals.

"The very lives of our people and the perpetuity of our Nation charity, or an emaciated people, so caused by malnutrition, or a nation of criminals.

"The very lives of our people and the perpetuity of our Nation are in your hands at this moment. May God give you wisdom and strength to solve this situation. Will you act in this matter at once, or will you be weighed and found wanting?

"It is not taxes that the American people want, for they have lost nearly everything they have had already by that method. Additional taxes will only serve to take away from the people all the hope they may have at this time of ever being able to have anything again in the future.

"It is work the people want, not charity or doles. They want a Government administered in the interest of all. No nation can endure which administers in the interest of the few without regard to the many, for in the end the interest of the few will be destroyed. The law that the interest of all is also to the interest of the few is very generally accepted; but the opposite of this—that is, that what is to the interest of the few is to the interest of all—is doubted by nearly everyone.

"Every man and woman should unite on a common ground to take us out of this situation; for in fact it is now more serious to the people that have than to the people that have not; because, unless something is done soon, they that now have will be in the same condition as those that have not.

"On account of the conditions that we find in America to-day, the psychology of many of our people is becoming of a desertion."

On account of the conditions that we find in America to-day, the psychology of many of our people is becoming of a destructive nature not only to themselves but to the very nation itself.

"In behalf of the disheartened, the hungry, the cold, the shelterless, and those who will find themselves in this condition sooner or later unless some relief is afforded, I beg of you that you give due consideration to the following as a solution of this great financial depression:

"Arrange to put the new idle people who delivered."

"Arrange to put the now idle people who desire work to work on Government improvement projects in the various States at the earliest opportunity.

"In order that the people may not be taxed any more to carry this plan into execution, let a law be passed that the people shall be paid for this work and the people or firms furnishing that material for this work be paid for their work and material by the Government issuing to them Government improvements certificates that shall pass as money and be legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

"All public improvements should be put in by the Government, and paid for in this manner, thereby doing away with the trouble-some assessments and taxes for these purposes.

"If the amount of property and homes that have been lost in this manner could be realized, the people would be appalled. By using the method suggested above this could have been avoided.

"The number of hours work per day and the price to be paid per hour to be regulated by the need. This will offer immediate relief from the first pay day, and start an era of prosperity such as we have never known. This will be conducive to red-blooded Americanism, instead of a people who are of necessity wards of

Respectfully submitted.

BIENNIAL REUNION OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF YORK COUNTY, S. C.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an address which was printed in the Fort Mill Times of May 5, 1932, delivered by W. B. Bradford before the York County Democratic Convention, York, S. C., on May 2, 1932, on the occasion of the biennial reunion of the Democratic Party of that county.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

This, gentlemen, is the biennial reunion of the Democratic Party of York County. We meet here in this courthouse every other year as political kinsmen to promote the welfare of our party, and through the party the welfare of our county and our State. Permit me to say that I am a party man. My first vote was cast for William Jennings Bryan in 1896. Ever since then I have gone to the polls as regularly as election day rolled around and supported the party nominees. I make no apology to anyone for my allegiance to the Democratic Party.

The Democratic Party is the oldest, the most trustworthy, and the most patriotic political organization in America. Its birth was practically coincident with the birth of the Republic. It has lived through all the intervening years because it deserved to live. Any This, gentlemen, is the biennial reunion of the Democratic Party practically coincident with the birth of the Republic. It has lived through all the intervening years because it deserved to live. Any party that could survive the vicissitudes and storm of one of the most disastrous civil wars in the world's history, following an unfortunate split in its ranks which had just cost it the Presidency, and when it was looked upon as little short of treason in some sections of the country to be a Democrat—these facts, taken in conjunction with the further fact that the party has always been the unrelenting champion of human rights, surely are enough to recommend it to any fair-minded citizen.

In South Carolina the Democratic Party represents Anglo-Saxon civilization. Our State has been the banner Democratic State of the Union in the past. It will be the banner Democratic State of the Union in the future. Here as nowhere else in this broad land, the people know the Republican Party for what it is, and not for the people know the Republican Party for what it is, and not for what it pretends to be.

Recently there has been a flare-up in this State over a new Re publican Party. Let us consider for a moment what that party is. It undertakes to recommend itself to the white people of South Carolina upon the hypocritical claim that it is a white man's party publican Party. Let us consider for a moment what that party is. It undertakes to recommend itself to the white people of South Carolina upon the hypocritical claim that it is a white man's party and does not welcome negroes to its ranks and will not admit them to its councils. The leaders of the party know, as every Democrat in the State knows, that they must look to the negroes for their membership. Hence, after proclaiming itself a "lily white" organization, lo and behold! in its very first State convention a few days ago it did the thing it planned to do by electing four negroes as delegates to the Republican National Convention.

So long as there is not in the ranks of the Republican Party of South Carolina a single white man recognized as a leader in any field of endeavor, it is idle to talk of that party as anything but an organization of pie hunters, with practically every member looking for the opportunity to plunge his proboscis up to his eyes into the Federal patronage trough. Take the Federal patronage from the Republicans of this State—as we propose to do after the 4th of next March—and, outside the negroes, there won't be 2,000 members of the party left in all South Carolina. To be sure the Republican leaders wish to increase their white membership here—it means livelier bidding for Federal jobs. It is unthinkable that any patriotic, intelligent South Carolinian should this year, of all years, consider going over to the Republicans when in other sections of the country hundreds of thousands are quitting that party like rats deserting a sinking ship.

Let us consider briefly, if you please, the condition of the country. I wonder how the financial depression is affecting you, gentlemen—I wonder whether there are any farmers in this convention who have seen their practice dwindle until there is practically none of it left; whether there are merchants in this convention who have seen their practice dwindle until there is practically none of it left; whether there are merchants in this convention who h

Everywhere helpless children are tugging at the sleeves of their fathers and mothers crying for bread, with their parents unable to respond to the cries. Hundreds of thousands have been driven from the homes they loved and cherished since childhood, many of them old and infirm, but forced to start life anew in circumstances that are appalling. "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay

Who is responsible for the hardships, the misery, the want, the despair millions are experiencing? From the spot where I am despair millions are experiencing? From the spot where I am standing I am undertaking to project my voice to every ear in this convention to charge that the Republican administration is 100 per cent to blame for the woes of the country, and I challenge anyone to disprove the charge. The man who denies it convicts himself of ignorance or a desire to pervert the facts. The Republicans try to hide their responsibility by claiming that the depression is world-wide. Suppose it is, Where did the depression start? It started in this very country five months before it spread to other countries and is worse here than in any country of Europe, save England, which never has even partially got on its feet from the effects of the World War. Even in Germany the number of impoverished people is far less than in the United States.

States.

Good man though he may be in some respects, the most monumental failure this country has ever been so unfortunate as to elect as Chief Magistrate sits back calling for Congress to supply him with more commissions to make a gesture at doing the very things he himself ought to be able to do. But he seems unable to devise plans to pull the country out of the hole into which he and a Republican Congress put it. The lightning does not strike twice in the same place. Neither can the American people be deceived the second time by a rehearsal of promises which have gone unfulfilled and pledges which there never was any intention of redeeming. There is a day of reckoning coming and it will be here on There is a day of reckoning coming and it will be here on Tuesday, November 8 next.

In the past the Democratic Party has made mistakes which have

In the past the Democratic Party has made mistakes which have cost it dearly. Four years ago we made such a mistake; but this year our party is not going to make the mistake of nominating a man the country will not vote for. From the unfortunate experiences of the past some of us have lost heart and are apprehensive of the result of the election even this year, when our prospects of success are brighter than they have been in many years. For the benefit of these, permit me to recite a little story which has come down in my memory when he has come down in my memory when he were down in the past series and the series of the past series and the series of the past series are the past series and the past series are the past series and the past series are the past series and the past series are the past series are the past series and the past series are the past series ar which has come down in my memory since my boyhood days and which has often given me encouragement and inspiration.

At the Battle of Marengo, fought between the Austrians and French, Napoleon, sad, discouraged, and disheartened, rode behind his lines and seeing the frightful gaps the Austrians had torn in the French ranks and believing defeat inevitable, ordered a drummer boy standing idly by to beat a retreat. The boy, measuring his words, because he knew to whom they were being addressed,

"Sire, my master never taught me to beat a retreat, but he taught me to beat a charge. Oh, I can beat a charge that would make the dead fall into line. I beat that charge at the Bridge of Lodi, I beat it at Mount Tabor, I beat it at the Pyramids. Oh, may I beat it here?

The charge was ordered; instantly the French lines re-formed and with courage born of despair swept the Austrian army from the field. And when the sun set on June 8, 1800, the battle of Marengo had been added to the long list of victories of the Man Marengo had been added to the long list of victories of the Man of Destiny.

Blessed be God, the Democratic Party will beat no retreat this year. But it will beat a charge that will be heard from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, from the turbulent Atlantic to the placid Pacific—it will beat a charge that will find a responsive echo in the heart of so many millions that when the returns begin to trickle into the White House on election night it will sound to the Republican candidate like the swish of the waves as they lap the lonely shores of a desolate midocean island.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here a statement from John M. Reynolds with reference to Senate bill 2657, a bill prepared by him with reference to the unemployment situation. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and in the same connection an editorial from the Puyallup Valley Tribune entitled "Feed the Hungry First," by Robert Montgomery. It is a very carefully prepared editorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Reynolds's statement is as follows:

PROSPECTUS OF THE NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION OBJECT

To secure to unemployed American citizens opportunity to work cooperatively in the production and mutual exchange of food, clothing, shelter, commodities, and services, and to relieve the community of the burdensome cost of maintaining citizens in involuntary idleness.

Nore.—It is reliably reported that there are between 700,000 and 800,000 persons receiving relief in New York City, and that it costs about $75,000 per week to only keep them alive. Seattle, Wash., has about 60,000. All communities lying between are similarly affected. larly affected.

Major depressions have occurred every six or seven years during the last 100 years, according to President Hoover's last message. During and after every one, millions suffer. The Nation owes every citizen not a living but a chance to support himself and dependents.

It is here proposed that instead of spending vast sums only to keep unemployed citizens alive, which is degrading and unsatis-factory to recipients and irksome to investors, a definite sum be determined and set aside to equip the unemployed so that they can support themselves.

Labor has builded our civilization. Labor maintains it. Material wealth of all kinds is so much dead weight, only made useful by labor. Labor—the unemployed—need only a chance to work advantageously to amply provide for themselves.

To enable the unemployed to do so, organize and incorporate a citizens' employment cooperative association. Let it be operated upon strict business principles so far as its affairs relate to the investor. (The investor may be one or more individuals, district, or State.) The operation of the equipment, however, is to be strictly cooperative, as between the unemployed who operate the equipment, under the supervision of the investor or his representative.

ciation, taxes, interest, and betterments shall all be paid out of the operations.

To protect the investment, the charter will stipulate that a written agreement between each of the unemployed citizens (who are given work) and the C. E. C. A. that, in lieu of legal money and because of the opportunity and benefits to be obtained, while using the equipment set up by the C. E. C. A., the unemployed applicant will accept the products and services of other employees of the C. E. C. A. upon equal terms to those that are applied to him and his products and services.

To protect the employees it will be provided in the charter that the wages of each employee shall be at the same rate per hour, and that the sales values that will be placed upon all products, services, and commodities shall be determined by the labor cost, plus the cost of material, overhead, taxes, interest, depreciation, amortization of the investment, and betterments.

By incorporating the enterprise the charter can and must be so worded that protection and fairness will be meted out to all concerned. The last-stated provision will enable all fixed charges to be met, as is essential and usual in successful business.

To secure legal money to meet these fixed charges the charter will empower the C. E. C. A. to bid on, contract, and do work on public roads and public improvements. This provision obviates the necessity of selling products in the open market, secures to the necessity of selling products in the open market, secures to the public an organization to do its work at a reasonable cost, and gives to the C. E. C. A. opportunity to obtain funds, not only to pay fixed charges but also to buy raw materials and carry on independently.

The charter will provide that applicants must be citizens and 106, 400 38,000 independently.

The charter will provide that applicants must be citizens and residents of the district, in which the association is incorporated, for — years, thus protecting the district organization from an influx of the unemployed from other districts.

The unemployed are men and women from the various walks of life. Farmers, mechanics, clerks, engineers, accountants, and their children just entering the ranks of industry. The equipment then must be land and a gradual set-up of modern machinery.

Application blanks can be so worded to obtain desired information as to vocation, experience, references, and capacity. Then, by personal contact, the investor or his representatives can select experienced foremen for each department. These foremen, by provisions in the charter, should be the board of operations, acting as such under the supervision of the investor or representatives, who would see that the provisions of the charter are carried through as prescribed.

The accounting system should be simple. Work done by each employee should be regularly credited, in hours, upon a pass book, similar to a bank-deposit book. Debits, in dollars, are to entered as supplies are withdrawn and balances regularly struck. This brief prospectus represents a local application of Senate bill 2657 of the Seventy-second Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

[From the Puyallup Valley Tribune, Puyallup, Wash.] FEED THE HUNGRY FIRST

Government—from the National Capitol to the thousands of county courthouses and city halls—is compelled to recognize that a critical condition confronts all America.

Congress may "balance the Budget" and evolve administration economies and taxation schedules adequate to face the future. State legislatures, county boards, and city councils are busy doing likewise locally, but all these adjustments are for the year ahead. Sheer necessity, as never before in a generation, has already driven every public relief agency into action. All must realize that to-day and to-morrow are no time for academic discussions of economic theory or for trifling about technical tactics of social relief.

There are several millions of men, women, and children throughout America facing lack of food in a land of ample food supply—and there will be more millions in want next winter. These multitudes must be fed by their fellow men to-morrow, next week, next month—perhaps into next year. This is no day of miracles. There is no modern Master with power to multiply the loaves and fishes for the needs of the hungry multitude. While they wait for future employment and self-support, they must eat to survive!

This is no time to "stand pat" for "sound" business prin-

This is no time to "stand pat" for "sound" business principles—to prate about the danger of setting "bad precedents."

Of course, "the dole system is un-American," but the starvation alternative would be inhuman if it were not impossible.

Community chests are bare; county and city relief funds are overdrawn; public provision for 1932 aid to the needy is everywhere exhausted with the year not half run and with unemployment still unrelieved.

Municipal and county bonds and warrants for emergency relief of the unemployed and destitute meet with rejection by all the private credit agencies. State resources can not be rallied to meet the crisis.

Only the National Government, armed with sovereign credit and backed by national wealth, can meet the needs of to-day—can avert the disaster of an unprovided to-morrow and the days that immediately follow.

It was well that the Nation should establish a giant Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to release "frozen credits," to unlock hidden hoards of dollars, and to give industry a stimulus from stagnation toward progress.

The hour demands that the ministrations of this beneficial agency be expanded to meet the imminent necessities of social and community relief, no less than those of private corporation

Surely, the several States of the Federal Union and their thousands of county and city municipalities can offer securities for the giant of public credit at least equal to those offered the Federal reserve by the banks and railway corporations. Perhaps the public loans may be less liquid to-day, but they will prove more solid to-more. to-morrow

President and Congress-Republicans and Democratspatriots in a crisis hour, should not let the sun set many more days without the enactment of adequate provision for immediate social relief and a national program to overcome unemployment and restore self-support as speedily as possible.

Whether by amendment of the Federal reserve and Reconstructions.

tion Finance Corporation acts, or otherwise, provision for applying the Federal credit upon the securities of States, counties, and municipalities should be promptly and adequately enacted and put in force

Social and community relief funds to meet necessity everywhere and at once should be the first order of business, to be given the preference so long as the necessity may last.

State, county, city, and other public district projects of public works, backed by the local faith and authorities in the form of lawful securities, should receive the benefits of national credit and forward on a program of State and local warfare upon unemployment.

And the Federal Government should not fail to authorize and advance a national program of necessary public works, wisely planned and prudently directed.

Between the threatening Scylla rocks of social disaster and the luring Charybdis shoals of Hearst financial wreckage there is a safe channel for our common ship of state through the crisis of to-day to the progress of to-morrow—steered by the national credit credit.

Hundreds of millions are needed for immediate relief and for specific war on unemployment conditions; but not a dollar for an economic theory or political program.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have a telegram relating to the same subject, which I ask may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., June 5, 1932.

Hon. Wesley L. Jones,

United States Senate, Washington:
Supporting the resolution of Seattle Chamber of Commerce which was unanimously adopted last Tuesday, urging the necessity of immediate Federal appropriation of $150,000,000 for relieving distress among the unemployed, and, inasmuch as local private, county, and city funds have been used very generally throughout the country to the limit, I urge you to support this request and help see that a Federal appropriation of this or like amount be made available for quick distribution through proper channels. REGINALD H. PARSONS.

VETERANS' RELIEF

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Times of Sunday, contrasting the measures of relief which this country has adopted with respect to its veterans and those adopted by other nations which were in the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, June 5, 1932] VETERANS' RELIEF: WHAT OTHER NATIONS DO—PROVIDING NO GENERAL BONUS AND BASING THEIR PENSIONS IN THE MAIN UPON WARTIME DEATHS AND INJURIES, THE CHIEF BELLIGERENTS HAVE LIMITED OUTLAY TO A FRACTION OF THAT MADE BY THE UNITED

At a time when there is clamor for immediate payment of the "soldiers' bonus," it is illuminating to compare what the various governments have done for the relief of World War veterans and their dependents. From the standpoint of annual outlay for this purpose the United States leads the world; its appropriations for veterans exceed those of all the chief belligerents combined, despite the fact that the number of men it mobilized and its total casualties were far below those of these other nations.

The leading combatant nations, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy, together with our neighbor, Canada, will spend this year for so-called veterans' relief a total of about $891,190,360, or some 10 per cent less than the Government at Washington. The ranking is as follows:

	Men mo- bilized	Dead and wounded	This year's relief bill
United States	4, 355, 000	360, 300	$1, 072, 064, 527
	13, 000, 000	6, 111, 862	298, 690, 000
	8, 410, 000	5, 623, 000	286, 722, 000
	6, 600, 000	3, 000, 000	174, 802, 060
	5, 615, 000	1, 597, 000	69, 853, 300
	619, 636	232, 045	61, 123, 000

The cost of relief in America as compared with that of other countries is attributable to two factors—political pressure of the veterans themselves and a refusal on the part of Congress to limit aid only to the wounded and the dependents of those who died in action. Thus all who were mobilized are entitled to free hospital and dental care and to a 20-year bonus certificate on which they may receive cash at maturity, with loans in the meantime.

THE BONUS AN AMERICAN PLAN

While free medical service to veterans is provided also in Canada, Germany, and, to a limited extent, in Italy, the idea of a bonus for all is a distinctly American departure. Elsewhere, save in special instances, outright payments are made only on a pension basis, corresponding to the compensation paid in this country to those partly or wholly disabled in the war and to the dependents of those who died in service.

France, in addition, promises a small pension to active-service veterans on reaching the age of 50, but this age provision limits the burden on the taxpayer.

Various projects for settling veterans on the land, by means of loans or easy payments, have been undertaken in some countries, notably Italy and Canada. In Italy social and moral considerations are closely tied up with relief. In Germany the loss of earning power, the local cost of living, and the size of a disabled man's family are taken into account in fixing pensions, Canada, although it has no bonus system, ranks next to the United States in the generosity with which it has treated its veterans. Great Britain, on the other hand, shows a steadily decreasing outlay to survivors of the war. survivors of the war.

Dispatches describing veterans' aid in the various countries

GREAT BRITAIN

By Charles A. Selden

London.—In the past 12 years Great Britain has reduced the financial burden of pensions growing out of the World War by 55 per cent.

The peak of the pension load came in 1920, when it cost the British Government £105,660,000 to pay the allowances of her disabled soldiers and sailors and those of surviving dependents of men who had been killed. This year that charge has dropped to £47,243,800 ($174,802,060 at current exchange).

The gradual diminution of the World War pensions is one of the certainties of British finance. There will be nothing left of them by the end of the century, except for an isolated case here and there of an old soldier, or the widow of one, who lives to be a centenarian. Thus will end the pension phase of a war in which Great Britain had nearly 6,600,000 men engaged, nearly 2,000,000 wounded, and about 1,000,000 killed.

FEWER CHILD DEPENDENTS

FEWER CHILD DEPENDENTS

But long before the end of the century the pension expenditure will cease to be a major item of the national Budget. Five years will cease to be a major item of the national Budget. Five years hence the last of the largest group of dependents, the children, will have vanished altogether, save for some exceptional cases so few in number that they are practically negligible in the book-keeping. The law provides that the child ceases to be a beneficiary when he or she attains the age of 16. As the war period is considered to have ended on September 30, 1921, for purposes of determining eligibility, the last of the children will be eliminated in 1938. in 1938.

The exception already noted covers the cases of children for whom extended education is desirable in the opinion of the Government. The theory of that is that the state must take the place of the father who was killed or who is disabled. Are the circumstances of a given case such as to suggest definitely that if there had been no war the father would have sent the child to college? If they are, the pension in respect of such a child is continued until he is 21 years old.

Widows also are decreasing in number, and, anyway, their eligi-lity as pensioners ceases with remarriage. Women who were withows also are decreasing in number, and, anyway, their engi-bility as pensioners ceases with remarriage. Women who were married to ex-soldiers after September, 1921, do not become pen-sioners when they lose their husbands, and children born more sioners when they lose their husbands, and children born more than 10 months after September, 1921, are not eligible.

Ten years ago there were 992,116 children on the list of pension beneficiaries; last year there were only 185,125. In the same period the number of widows decreased from 226,700 to 137,750. Reductions in the number of pensioned soldiers and sailors themselves are from 57,870 officers and 1,328,697 men in 1922 to 23,850 officers and 463,000 men last year.

In 1920, when the pension budget called for the expenditure of £105,650,000, the aggregate of men, women, and children who benefited was 3,344,506. Last year, with the budget reduced to £51,725,-000, the number of pensioners had shrunk to 1,265,500.

SEPARATE MINISTRY NEEDED

The present pension law was enacted in 1917 when war casualties had amounted to such enormous proportions that old methods and systems became inadequate to handle them. A separate Minand systems became inadequate to handle them. A separate Ministry of Pensions was created with powers to take over from the War Office, the Admiralty, and the Ministry for Air the whole administration of pensions, which formerly had been handled separately. At the same time the present rates of payments were established and the all-important question of eligibility was determined. To qualify for a pension for either himself or dependents it was necessary that a man should have been killed, wounded, or impaired by illness definitely attributable to war service. A slight wound which did not impair a man's future health or capacity for his work did not qualify him for a pension. Nothing has been done since to widen the basis of eligibility or otherwise interfere with the year-by-year reduction in the cost of the system.

cost of the system.

Politics has not been a factor in the matter except in one negative respect. When the amount of pension was determined in the beginning of the new ministry it was fixed at 40 shillings a week as the minimum for a totally disabled single man without dependents. It was understood at the time that this would be reduced in the event of decrease in the cost of living. Well, the cost of living has decreased materially, but so far no government and no party has seen fit to propose a reduction in the pension's minimum. Very recently, however, the war pensions, together with old-age pensions, health insurance, school costs, and unemployment insurance, have been considered, tentatively, as susceptible of cuts should the present strain on the Exchequer become more serious.

NO VETERANS' LOBBY

But, even so, it is not at all likely that the pension system will become a political issue. It never has been one. It never figures in parliamentary elections and there is no such thing as an organized propaganda or a group of lobbyists to exert pressure on candidates or members of the House of Commons to compel them to support amendments which would widen the basis of eligibility. Neither is there any incentive to press bogus claims upon the Government. All claims are examined free of charge by the ministry itself or by its organized but unpaid committees. Every claim is decided upon its merits and nobody pays anybody any fee for the transaction. This, of course, eliminates the middleman who would undertake to get a pension for a client with the understanding that he would receive a percentage of it.

On the whole, the system is satisfactory to its beneficiaries, to the taxpayers, and the Government. It is considered the most humane, generous, and yet graft-proof method of compensating disabled veterans that England has had in centuries of handling this problem, either by government action or private charity.

The Ministry of Pensions will have finished its work within the next two generations, unless there is another war. Already it has been able to amalgamate so many of its branch offices and so reduce its working staff that the cost of administration has decreased from something over a shilling for every pound of expenditure on benefits themselves to 5d.

In the first year after the peak load of 1920-21 the total expenditure on account of pensions dropped by about £10,000,000. The

The next year the decrease was £14,000,000. The next it was only £9,000,000. Thereafter the annual reduction varied between £2,000,000 and £3,000,000, until this year's total appropriation of £47,243,800 was reached. Rough estimates are that the decreases from now on will average about £1,000,000 a year. This would mean that the pensions growing out of the World War will end in about 1980, except for the few cases of unusual longevity.

FRANCE

By P. J. Philip

-While the United States is paying this year more than Paris.—While the United States is paying this year more than $1,000,000,000 in war veterans' relief, France is paying just over a quarter of that sum, the total appropriation being $286,722,000. This does not mean, however, that France does not also have a war veterans' problem which is becoming a growing embarrassment to each successive government and to the country as a whole. During the recent elections the claims of the "former combatants," as they are called, played a very considerable rôle in many constituencies, though there was no combined political action. From the outset the effort of each successive government has been to try to deal justly by the men who fought the war, while giving an attentive eye to the taxpayers' interests. Adjustments have had to be made at various intervals for the decline in the value of the franc and for other reasons. The difficult question has not yet been finally settled, and it has about it this unfortunate aspect: That the annual payments which will have to be made under the present law tend to increase.

At present there are listed as "former combatants" in France 3,633,100 men who are entitled to compensation in the form of a pension or invalidity allowance. Each of these holders of a "combatant's card" has had to convince some competent authority that he served on the front for at least three months. It is believed that at least another half million claims can be presented and justified, but the control of claims has recently become more severe as the need for economy has increased.

PENSIONS AT 50

The present law, passed in April, 1930, provides that each "former combatant" shall receive at the age of 50 a pension of 500 francs ($20) a year and from the age of 55 a pension of 1,200 francs ($48). As the average age of the World War veterans is still well below 50, it is apparent that the burden of this decision has not yet been felt in its entirety. On the other hand, by the time these pensions must be paid in any large amounts, other expenses resulting from the war, such as the pensions to wounded men, will, it is calculated, have diminished and the cost of reconstruction in the devastated districts will have been wiped out.

This pension allowance is distinct from and in addition to all gratuities and allowances paid to wounded and disabled men, gratuitles and allowances paid to wounded and disabled men, which are appraised on a different scale. Totally disabled men which are appraised on a different scale. Totally disabled men receive, according to the revised schedule now in operation, $286 a year, but to that must be added other amounts covering medical attention, etc. Here, indeed, it might be interpolated that the whole system of grants and allocations is so immensely complicated that it is almost impossible to discover accurately how much any man is entitled to, almost every case being treated as special in one sense or another

According to one official statement an ex-soldier who is completely invalided can receive on all accounts as much as 35,200 francs ($1,400) a year. Wounded also benefit by reduced railway fares and medical treatment. In almost every department or county there is a soldiers' home in which "unemployable" men are cared for. In all these homes there are recreation rooms and are cared for. In all these homes there are recreation rooms and gardens attended by the men themselves, and in most of them they do their own cooking and service.

One very important feature of the French veterans' pension system is that it is individual. If an ex-soldier dies before having reached the age of 50, his heirs can not collect any part of his pension. Neither can he capitalize his claim in any way except by the ordinary insurance methods. He can not borrow on his prospects, except at the risk of the lender.

The following annual provisions are, however, made for the relatives of deceased soldiers:

Father and mother jointly__ Children of deceased soldiers, until the age of 18_____

On February 1 this year the number of men drawing invalidity pensions or receiving provisional allowances was 1,098,047. The number of widows receiving pensions was 379,710, and remarried widows receiving similar allowances numbered 270,080. Parents and grandparents receiving allowances numbered 826,069.

The appropriations for veterans' relief for the current year are made up as follows:

Ministry of Pensions:

Provisional advances against unsettled claims	$13, 822, 000
Payments to disabled veterans	14, 142, 000
Care and treatment of tubercular cases	8, 880, 000
Pension payments to veterans	45, 600, 000
Medical and surgical equipment	880,000

Government subsidy to National Veterans Bureau_	2,000,000
Total	87, 378, 000

Grand total_ 286, 722, 000 Compared with the other main items of expenditure in the French budget the cost of pensions and veterans' allowances ranks third. The highest burden on the taxpayer is for the service of the public debt, with national defense ranking second.

GERMANY

By Hugh Jedell

Beelin.—Veterans' pensions are handled in Germany by the Labor Ministry, which has charge of social insurance and other welfare services. This fact emphasizes the character of the German war-pension system. To risk his body for the Fatherland gave no German a monetary claim on it. He must have been at least partly disabled to be entitled to a pension.

One exception is made. The surviving members of the active officers' corps of the old army—the professional officers—draw pensions on retirement, trrespective of disability, because they were state employes. Dependents of deceased members of these state servants also come in for pensions.

All the others of the 13,000,000 Germans mobilized during the World War were simply "the people in arms." What the Reich pays out to those of them who were maimed and the dependents of the dead are not pensions in the true sense of the word; the budget carries these disbursements under the head of "care of war sufferers," but they are much like what Americans know as warkmen's compensation and are graded according to loss of workmen's compensation and are graded according to loss of earning capacity.

THE FINANCIAL BURDEN

Despite the modest standard of payment, veterans' care lays a heavy financial burden on the Reich. It has constituted the biggest single item of expenditure outside reparations, and in the eight years since the mark was stabilized in 1924 has cost 11,380,-000,000 marks ($2,708,440,000), distributed (in round numbers) as follows:

931

The vast bulk of these disbursements is on account of the World War. In the 1,355,000,000 marks ($322,490,000) paid out in the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1931, there were included 9,000,000 marks to veterans of the war of 1870-71 and a few even of the marks to veterans of the war of 1870-71 and a few even of the Austro-Prussian War of 1866, and their dependents. Some 170,-000,000 marks went to members of the regular establishment of the old army or their dependents. All the remainder, 1,185,000,000 marks—17.5 per cent of the Reich's total expenditures for the year—went to those of the "people in arms" who suffered disability in the World War or the dependents of those who died of it, 570,000,000 being paid out to the former, 615,000,000 marks to the latter. the latter.

The 570,000,000 marks paid out in 1931 as disability compensation was distributed to 838,360 rectplents, giving an average of 687 marks ($163.50) per head per year. The 615,000,000 marks paid as dependents' allowances went to 1,282,871 recipients. They include widows, full and half orphans, and dependent parents.

It is pertinent to recall that Germany's war losses were: Dead, 1,865,156 (officers, 54,780); wounded, 4,246,706 (93,247 officers). Of the dead 30 per cent were married; of the more or less disabled, 25 per cent.

35 per cent.

The number of dependent pensioners has been fairly steadily diminishing from natural causes. Since pension allowances on account of orphans cease when these attain the age of 18—except for education allowances in exceptional cases—this class will have for education allowances in exceptional cases—this class will have become practically eliminated in 1935-36.

The number of disability pensioners, on the other hand, rose from 1924 to 1930 by nearly 120,000. This increase of claimants and progressive loss of earning capacity, due to aggravation of wound effects, etc., are chiefly responsible for the rise of the total disbursements up to 1929. The sharp decline in the total for 1931 is due to the emergency decree of July, 1930, which cut allowances and summarily barred all new applications. The Labor Ministry estimates that the veterans' "pension" bill, with present rates maintained, will from natural causes diminish by about 100,000,000 marks in the current year, by 50,000,000 more in 1933, and by 30,000,000 in 1934.

100,000,000 marks in the current year, by 50,000,000 more in 1933, and by 30,000,000 in 1934.

The veterans' pension schedule is a complicated system of coordinates. First, there is a base rate, fixed according to loss of earning capacity. During the war a loss of 10 per cent entitled one to compensation; right after the war the admission limit was raised to 20 per cent loss of earning power. Since 1923 it has been 30 per cent. In determining loss of earning capacity, in any individual cases account is taken not only of the civil status or actual earnings of the man before he was drafted into the army but also his education, and training; in a word, his potential earning capacity.

earnings of the man before he was drafted into the army but also his education and training; in a word, his potential earning capacity. There result three subschedules: Disabled who get the simple base rate, others who receive this plus a "simple" monthly bonus, and a third class whose supplement is a "raised" bonus.

Married men who are disabled 50 per cent or more receive an additional small allowance for their wives. And all disabled veterans suffering 30 per cent disability or more receive an addition for each child up to 7. Finally, the pension varies according to where the recipient lives. All places in the Reich are divided into five classes, according to size and relative cost of living. The lowest amount provided in the schedule is 13.50 marks a month; that is, the monthly pension of a nonbonus childless veteran 30 per cent disabled and belonging to the lowest residence class. The highest amount payable is 326.15 marks a month, to completely disabled maximum bonus veterans with seven children living in Berlin.

Widows, orphans, and dependent parents' pensions are also graded according to the five residence classes and occupational and educational status. The highest widow's pension is 56.90 marks a month. The highest amount payable on behalf of an orphan is month. The nighest amount payable on behalf of an orphan is 37.95 marks monthly.

To aid the seriously disabled veterans—those from 50 per cent up—a statute of the Reich requires that 2 per cent of the employees in the larger business establishments must be recruited from among them. In the administration services of the Reich 3.86 per cent of the officials and employees are such gravely war-injured veterans.

Special attention has been paid to veterans' medical care; 45,-000,000 marks was expended last year on this score. This service—free to the veterans—is considered to have paid for itself many times over by removing or limiting incapacity.

ROME.—The legislative measures applied by Italy in favor of ROME.—The legislative measures applied by Italy in favor of World War veterans and their relatives aim especially to enhance their prestige. Measures for moral assistance, therefore, have a preponderating part. Among them, worthy of special notice, are the granting of special emblems to the mutilated, to those decorated for valor, and to the parents and orphans of the fallen, and the concession of precedence at court and at official functions.

Many important measures also exist for veterans' relief in the economic field, alming to indemnify the war invalids and the families of the fallen by means of pensions and to provide remuneralies of the fallen by means of pensions and to provide remunerative work for the veterans in general.

The state, in certain cases, attends directly to the application of these relief measures. Generally, however, they are applied by three great national "opere" and by three great national associations, which have been delegated thereto by the state, respectively, for the veterans, the invalids, and the orphans and relatives. The state superintends the work of all these organizations through a special office under II Duce.

Important relief duties on behalf of veterans in general are intrusted to the Opera Nazionale per i Combattenti, whose task it is to buy or expropriate lands, improve them for farming purposes, and sell them to veterans at the lowest possible price on the installment plan. The "opera," moreover, performs land-reclaiming work on contract on land not its own, employing many thousands of veterans. It promotes the founding of agricultural colonies and new centers of habitation, the organization of cooperatives for purchases and sales and for the transformation of agricultural products, the establishment of agricultural-experiment stations, the development of agricultural and fishing industries, the founding of schools and libraries, and, in general, all those projects aiming to perfect and render more widespread the technical, professional, and cultural education of the workers who participated in the war. in the war.

FINANCES OF THE " OPERA"

The "opera" was originally endowed by the state with a capital of 300,000,000 lire ($15,780,000), which has since considerably increased. A part of the revenue is dedicated to the relief of individual veterans.

By the side of this "opera" exists the Associazione Nazionale dei Combattenti, which, in addition to the moral relief of the veterans, has among its duties:

1. Economic and social relief, including the grant of small mortgages for the purchase of agricultural machinery, tools, seeds,

2. Sanitary and hygienic relief by means of numerous sanitary stations and the distribution of medicines, particularly quinine, to veterans stricken by malaria.
3. Legal help to aid veterans to receive their due in the matter of pensions, insurance policies, war medals, etc.

4. Legal help to aid veterans to subsidies and the finding of work for veterans.

The "associazone" is financed by the membership fees of its members and by contributions made by the state and by the Opera Nazionale per i Combattenti.

PRIVILEGES OF VETERANS

All veterans enjoy the following privileges:

1. Special facilities for entering the Government services.

2. Preference for employment by private enterprises when unemployed.

3. Free insurance policies.

3. Free insurance policies.
4. Preference for apartments in the houses built by the Institute for Workmen's Dwelings.
5. Special facilities to enable them to obtain licenses to sell the articles produced by the state monopolies—tobacco, salt, quinine, stamped paper, etc.

The veterans who have received medals for military valor, moreover, receive a small pension and various small additional privileges. Their interests are safeguarded by two organizations, called the Gruppo Medaglie d'Oro and the Instituto del Nastro Azzurro. Invalid veterans have all the privileges and benefits enloved by

They are also protected economically by special legislative measures which make it obligatory for carry by special registative measures which make it obligatory for private enterprises to give work to 1 invalid veteran for every 20 men they employ, while the state administration must employ them in an even greater proportion. Moreover, they receive relief in other forms, principally sanitary and educational, and enjoy special privileges for the granting to them of dwellings in the inhabited centers. A special institute exists to build houses for the mutilated veterans.

SAFEGUARDING THE DISABLED

Relief measures for the invalid veterans are applied by the Opera Nazionale per la Protezione ed Assistenza agli Invalidi di Guerra, with state funds. Their interests are safeguarded by the Associazione Nazionale fra Mutilati ed Invalidi di Guerra, which is financed by membership fees and by contributions made by the state and by the "opera." It also carries out important relief measures on its own initiative. It runs, for instance, a great number of homes for blind veterans and many homes for totally disabled veterans.

The families of the fallen in the war receive war pensions, free insurance policies, preference for employment by state and private enterprises, and several other privileges. War orphans, in addition, get scholarships, free books, and scholastic materials, exemption from payment of school fees, etc. Private enterprises must employ a fixed proportion of war orphans, who can also, in certain cases, obtain tools free. Female war orphans receive a small down when obtain tools free. Female war orphans receive a small dowry when they marry.

The relief measures for war orphans are applied by the Opera Nazionale per gli Orfani di Guerra, which is financed by the state. By its side exists the Associazione Nazionale delle Famiglie del Caduti in Guerra, which, with state funds, looks after the interests of the relatives of the fallen in the war. Connected with the Opera Nazionale per gli Orfani di Guerra are several other organizations, existing for special purposes.

The number receiving relief from the aforementioned organizations are:

Mutilated and war invalids	264, 652

Large sums are also contributed for the relief of the veterans by various public bodies or are raised locally, but it is not known with precision how much they amount to. The total spent for relief between the end of the war and the end of 1931 is estimated at over 20,000,000,000 lire ($1,052,000,000). It is believed that no substantial decrease in the expenditure for relief will be possible for another 15 or 20 years.

OTTAWA.—Toward the relief of World War veterans and to their dependents the Government of Canada is paying to-day more than $1,000,000 every week, and will continue to pay as much, or more, for many years to come. The total for the years since the war now is more than $950,000,000, and in the federal budget for the present fiscal year, which ends March 31, 1933, there are items totaling $61,123,000 for war pensions and relief..

The present annual expenditure is as much as the total cost of government as late as 1906 and to-day accounts for more than one-sixth of the budget. Veterans' relief is the largest single item in federal expenditures after interest on the public debt.

Enlistments in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces were 619,636, federal expenditures after interest on the public debt.

Enlistments in the Canadian Expeditionary Forces were 619,636, and 59,544 men were killed in action. Other casualties—sick and wounded—were 172,505. Presumably 560,092 men were demobilized into civil life, and to-day 75,878 of these veterans—better than 1 in 7—are in receipt of pensions. In addition, 19,308 dependents of deceased soldiers receive monthly checks from Ottawa, bringing the total pensioned to 95,186. Adding children and wives of pensioned veterans, children of pensioned widows and mothers, there is a grand total of 258,495 Canadians maintained by their country as an obligation inherited from the war vears.

The pension list is growing at the rate of about 500 each month, and the end is not in sight. Something like 24,000 applications for new or increased relief still are pending. Probably by the end of the present year the number of Canadians drawing World War pension checks from the Canadian Government will pass 100,000, with the assurance of going still higher before it is lower. The cost also will mount, and before the last check is drawn, more than half a century hence, the bill will have gone well into the billions of dollars.

The administrative machine which cares for the disabled veterans operates under a minister of the Government and has many branches. Thus for the present year pensions alone are estimated at $48,000,000, and hospitals, unemployment relief, land settlement, administration, etc., bring the total to $61,123,000. From April 1, 1916, to date there has been spent on pensions $500,000,000; on account of "reestablishment," which includes vocational training and hospitals $200,000,000; the soldiers' land-settlement scheme has cost more than $45,000,000 in debts written down and will go higher before the books are closed; general administration has accounted for $6,000,000: there was paid as administration has accounted for $6,000,000; there was paid as war gratuities on demobilization to veterans and to the dependents of those who had given their lives the sum of $164,171,673; and there are smaller items which roll up the majestic total of $950,000,000—for a country of 10,000,000 people.

The history of pensions in Canada shows a continued tendency toward liberalization, the extension of rights and privileges. While Canada lacks the problem of a deferred bonus, there is unceasing agitation in Parliament and out of it to broaden the scope of benefits.

Until 1918 pensions were paid under the war measures act. The 1918 law was the medium for handling the question until 1930, when there was a general overhauling of the machinery. The 1930 law made eligible for pensions many thousands of veterans who had commuted their claims for small cash payments, and in the two years since this legislation became effective nearly 20,000 additional pensioners have been added to the lists. A further increase in the lists, to the extent of 1,000 pensioners, was made by provision that women who married before January 1, 1930, shall be eligible for pensions if their husbands die of World War disability. Under the pensions act of 1930 a Board of Pension Commissioners was created to which all veterans' claims are submitted. From the board appeals may be taken to the pension tribunal—a body which sits in six sections at points throughout the country. As the final court of appeal, there is the Federal Appeal Board, headed by a former high court judge.

Holding an important place in the pensions organization is the Veterans' Bureau, created as a branch of the department to give organized assistance to applicants, that their claims may not fall veterans Bureau, created as a branch of the department to give organized assistance to applicants, that their claims may not fall through improper advance work.

Every petition not granted by the Board of Pension Commissioners must pass through the bureau before being dealt with by the tribunal or the final appeal court. It is the first and foremost duty of the bureau to act as the soldier's friend, to do its utmost within the law to secure his rights.

SCALE OF PAYMENTS

In the scale of pensions established in 1930 there is no distinction between the lieutenant and all ranks and rating below, this basic total-disability allowance being set at $900 per year. The scale increases in the higher ranks to $2,700 for a totally disabled commodore or brigadier general; more elevated rank brings no higher pension. For all ranks there is an additional pension of $300 for a married man, $180 for one child, $324 for two children, and $120 for each additional child. Thus a totally disabled private, married, with three children, receives $1,644 a year, plus hospital service under certain conditions, cheap insurance, and sundry other benefits of minor degree.

sundry other benefits of minor degree.

Aside from the fundamental business of monthly pension checks, the service Canada renders her war veterans is varied, checks, the service Canada renders her war veterans is varied, complex, and intimate. Eight departmental hospitals are maintained, and there are soldiers' wards in general hospitals, which are treating more than 12,000 men each year. In addition, under the heading of "Veterans' care cases," more than 170 incurable tuberculosis cases are being treated at various hospitals. Up to March 31 of this year there had been expended in the form of hospital assistance $42,696,667, and for the current year the estimated expenditure is $7,135,000.

There is a dental service for veterans which, in a year, gives more than 50,000 treatments to 3,200 patients. There are departmental orthopedic depots throughout the country in which are manufactured artificial limbs for veterans, special boots and appliances, artificial eyes, etc.

The Government has an insurance department which gives protection to veterans at about half the rates of commercial companies and under conditions of special advantage. This service is practically self-sustaining.

practically self-sustaining.

WORK FOUND FOR VETERANS

Assistance is given returned men seeking employment through

Assistance is given returned men seeking employment through a special branch of the department, which gets about 18,000 applications a year and succeeds in placing a fair proportion even in present times. Its labors are lightened by the fact that preference is given veterans by the Government itself in filling civil-service posts, and by many private employers. For veterans' relief, caring for cases not adequately covered by pension regulations, there will be spent this year something like $2,500,000. Vocational training, on which the Dominion spent $4,345,759 in the earlier years of postwar rehabilitation, is now a closed chapter.

Still another aid for the unfortunate veteran is found in the departmental organization known as the War Veterans' Allowance Committee, which is allocated $1,300,000 this year. Its object is to relieve from necessity the aged or totally incapacitated veteran whose resources or income are insufficient to provide for his comfortable maintenance. The committee may supplement the income of such a single man up to $365 a year, and a married man to $730. Only those come under this fund who are 60 or more, or who are permanently unemployable through physical or mental disability. Old-age pensions are available to war veterans at 60, while 70 is the civilian age for this public relief.

The scheme for settling soldiers on the land, principally in western Canada, on which great hopes were based directly after the war, has achieved a fair measure of success although at high cost. Through Government loans 24,491 soldier settlers were established on farms, of whom 11,612 remained at the end of last year. Most of the reverted soldier farms have been taken over by civilians under a general land settlement plan of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, which administers this project.

For the current year the estimated expenditure on land settlement is $1,500,000, which is $680,000 less than for the preceding 12 months.

WHAT WE DO FOR VETERANS-THE GOVERNMENT'S OUTLAY VIEWED IN ! TERMS OF THE EX-SERVICE MAN'S BENEFITS

Up to the end of February, 1932, the American Government had spent a total of $5,475,505,520.29 directly for the relief of World War veterans and their dependents. Of this sum, $2,100,888,433.65 was for various forms of disability and death compensation to exservice men and those dependent upon them; $582,931,845.08 for allotments and allowances; $486,936,049.78 for medical and hospital care; $644,943,719.72 for vocational training; $1,003,406,857.64 for insurance; and $656,398,614.42 for miscellaneous expenditures, including administration.

During the war and until July 2, 1927, the American service man was entitled to low-cost war-risk insurance, up to $10,000, against death or total permanent disability. On July 2, 1927, he could convert his policy to any one of a number of forms handled by the Government on a nonprofit basis. A $60 cash bonus was his on demobilization. Free hospital and dental service have been at his disposal, the Veterans' Administration having 54 hospitals with 26,307 beds and the use of 9,732 beds in other Government hospitals. If the veteran is not in the income-tax paying class, he is entitled to an allowance if he suffers a 25 per cent or greater permanent disability, from whatever cause, provided this is not the result of willful misconduct. the result of willful misconduct.

All this applies to the veteran who was in the best of health when the war ended. For those partly disabled during the war years there have been, in addition, allowances based on disability, and, until 1928, free vocational training.

and, until 1928, free vocational training.

Besides these privileges, which have cost the Federal Government the huge sum referred to, there have been bonuses and tax remissions from many of the States, and in 1924 Congress provided that all World War veterans receive adjusted-service or bonus certificates. These certificates entitle them to collect, at the end of 20 years, adjusted-service compensation averaging more than $1 a day for their terms of service. In case of death before the maturity date, the sum is paid at once to the veteran's beneficiary. The certificates have a loan value, which last year was increased to 50 per cent of the face value. Loans amounting to $1.248,000,000 are now outstanding, against a total face value of $1,248,000,000 are now outstanding, against a total face value of $3,638,000,000. These loans would be canceled and the difference of $2,390,000,000 would be paid the certificate holders if Washington acceded to demands for immediate bonus payment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2458) for the relief of Ralph E. Williamson for loss suffered on account of the Lawton, Okla., fire, 1917.

REVENUE AND TAXATION-CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I crave the close attention of the Senate, as I have risen to make a point of order against the report of the conference committee upon the tax bill.

I make my point of order upon the ground that the conferees exceeded their powers in connection with Senate amendment 180, appearing as section 616 of the pending bill. Section 616 deals with the consumption of electric energy and its taxation.

I make my point of order upon this ground: First, that the conferees exceeded their authority by including in the provision a sales tax not authorized by either House on the domestic and commercial consumption of electric energy supplied by publicly owned power plants.

Mr. President, the amendment adopted by the Senate reads as follows:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold.

It will be noted that the amendment applied to the energy supplied by privately owned power plants only.

The conferees added new matter to this amendment by providing in effect a 3 per cent tax on domestic and commercial consumption of energy supplied by privately owned power plants and then included in effect a tax also upon the consumption of energy supplied by publicly owned power plants. It must be evident to everyone that this is absolutely new matter, and because it is new matter it is subject to a point of order, which should be sustained.

The Senate specifically excluded from taxation energy supplied by publicly owned power plants. The provision adopted by the conferees provides for the taxation of the consumption of publicly owned power plants. Nothing of the kind was contemplated by the Senate. It was not contemplated by either House. This class of consumption has been included in the provision by the conferees. It is legislation by the conferees and nothing else. That must be evident, and under the rule that no new matter can be inserted by conferees in an amendment or in a bill, the conferees have exceeded their authority, and as a consequence their action is subject to a point of order, which should be sustained.

Mr. President, I call attention in this connection to a case which arose in the House of Representatives:

Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, made the point of order that the managers of the conference had exceeded their authority in relation to a certain paragraph of the bill which, with the Senate amendment, appeared as follows in the printed copy:

No part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers for the personal use of any officer provided for [herein] by this or any other act other than the President of the United States, the heads of executive departments, and the secretary to the President.

The managers had inserted between the words "personal" and "use" the words "or officials." In other words, they excluded the right of any other officials to use horses and carriages provided for in this appropriation bill not only for personal use but for official use.

The point of order was ruled upon by Speaker Cannon, who concluded his ruling by saying:

As to the wisdom of such a provision the Chair is not called upon to intimate any opinion.

And that is right in point here-

As to the wisdom of such a provision the Chair is not called upon to intimate any opinion. It is for the House and the Sen-ate to determine upon the wisdom of it, and, as the House and the Senate never have considered that proposition, the Chair is of opinion that the conferees exceeded their power, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. President, neither the House nor the Senate considered at any time the taxation of the consumption of electrical energy supplied by publicly owned power plants. However, the conference committee inserted bodily a provision to tax the consumption supplied by publicly owned power plants. Upon that ground alone, Mr. President, a point of order is properly made against the act of the conferees and, in my opinion, should be sustained.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the language substituted for the Senate amendment, which appears as section 616, is practically identical with the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] as a substitute for my amendment, in which he proposed to levy a 5 per cent tax on the consumption of electrical energy, to be paid for by the consumer. That substitute was voted down in the Senate, and, mark you, it is practically identical in language with section 616 as substituted in the tax bill by the conferees for section 616 as placed there by the Senate.

Again, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] submitted another amendment, in which he proposed a 4 per cent tax upon domestic consumption plus commercial consumption in the same language as that of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which, as I have before stated, is practically identical with the language that has been inserted by the conferees. That amendment was voted down. Why? Because the Senate had determined, in order to supply the Treasury with funds, to impose a tax upon the great profits of the power companies of the country, and it was for that reason that there were introduced into the amendment that was adopted words which in effect excluded publicly owned power plants.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Am I to understand the Senator to say that a substitute proposal for his amendment in the Senate was voted down by the Senate and that then, notwithstanding the fact that it had been voted down by a majority of this body, the conferees took it upon themselves deliberately to insert that substitute in the place of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. HOWELL. It is a fact.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And in the same language?
Mr. HOWELL. In the same language, with the exception that at the end of paragraph (b) there is inserted the following:

The provisions of sections 771 to 774, inclusive, shall, in lieu of the provisions of sections 619 to 629, inclusive, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this section.

That is the only new matter inserted; the language otherwise is identical except that gas is not coupled with electrical energy.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the Senator have any idea what would prompt five Members of this body to substitute their will for that of a majority of the Senate?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like an answer to my question if the Senator can answer it.

Mr. HOWELL. There is just one reason, and that is they did not want to levy this tax upon the power companies. The Senate determined to levy it upon the power companies, and the conferees wanted to put it upon the 24,000,000 consumers; such is the personnel which the conferees' change in the Senate's amendment affects throughout the country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that is where it is now.

Mr. HOWELL. And that is where it is now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator has unintentionally misstated the facts when he says the amendments are identical. The substitutes offered were first for a tax at 5 per cent; that was rejected. Then I offered a substitute providing for a tax of 4 per cent, and that was rejected; and then the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska for 3 per cent tax prevailed. The tax approved by the conferees is 3 per cent.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I should make a correction in so far as the figures "5," "4," and "3" are concerned there is that difference, together with the exclusion of coupling gas with electricity; but otherwise the language is practically identical.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That being true, I should like to ask the Senator whether it is his judgment that the Power Trust has more influence in this body than a majority of the Senate?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I simply say this: The question that was squarely before the Senate was whether we would tax the highly profitable electric companies or whether we should put the tax on the people; and the conference committee decided that we should put it on the people; that we should eliminate the companies. The companies are not to pay a dollar; and I desire again to call attention of the Senate to some of the facts respecting the great profits of these companies.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator goes into that subject, referring to the language found in the conference report, to wit—

To be paid by the person paying for such electrical energy and to be collected by the vendor—

Is not that the same language that was incorporated in the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed]?

Mr. HOWELL. The identical language.

Mr. President, the profits of these power companies throughout the country are tremendous. Consider the situation here in Washington. Last year, notwithstanding a reduction in the rate to 4.2 cents per kilowatt-hour as the maximum, the Potomac Electric Power Co. had net earnings, after paying all costs of operation, maintenance, depreciation, taxes, and sufficient to pay 7½ per cent return on their rate base, and, in addition, had some $882,000 left. If a tax had been levied last year upon the Potomac Electric Power Co. as provided in the Senate amendment, it would not have had $882,000 left, but would have had about $550,000 left. Surely no hardship with such a surplus.

That is the situation largely over this country. Consider the results in my city of Omaha. In that city the American Power & Light Co. controls the Nebraska Power Co., which supplies Omaha and Council Bluffs and small communities around about. The 1,000,000 shares of common stock of Nebraska Power which the American Power & Light Co. own cost them $766,000, and that $766,000 went as a fee to the Electric Bond & Share Co.-a fee for putting American Power & Light in control of Nebraska Power. As a matter of fact, that 1,000,000 shares of stock is pure water; but out there in the agricultural regions, where this depression is most acute, what has been the result? Dividends on this $766,000 in 1924 were 48 per cent; in 1925, 48 per cent; in 1926, 66 per cent; in 1927, 97 per cent; in 1928, 96 per cent; and that power plant has been more profitable during the last three years than ever before. Right in the midst of the depression the $766,000 invested in 1,000,000 shares of Nebraska Power Co.'s stock earned 191 per cent in 1929. You would think that that was enough, but no; it earned 226 per cent in 1930, and last year it earned 250 per cent.

It is these power companies that it was aimed to tax. It was the intent of the Senate that they should be taxed. The Senate voted down the language that is to be found now in this conference report; but the conferees took that very language and put it back. The Senate never intended to tax the consumers of electricity. The language shows plainly that they intended to tax these great power companies; but the conferees, to save the power companies, placed this tax directly and unavoidably on the 24,000,000 consumers in the United States. That is the number of consumers, domestic and commercial.

Why did they do it? What was their purpose? To relieve the power companies. They not only did that but the Senate had included industrial power use subject to this tax. Why? Because under the terms of the amendment adopted by the Senate it would only increase the cost per kilowatthour forty-six one-thousandths of a cent on an average. These large power users get their energy at the lowest possible price, below the average cost of production. The 20,000,000 domestic consumers pay for more than the average cost of production. The commercial consumers pay a little more than the average cost, but the power users pay much less than the average cost of production. Yes; and although they are the beneficiaries of such low rates the conferees would exclude from tax the power users, who consume 65 per cent of all the electric energy produced, and place the tax where? Upon the home owner, upon the grocery store, and other commercial users. That is where they propose to place it.

Mr. President, what influence could have changed them? Had they nothing in their hearts for the people of this country who are the real sufferers from this depression? Here was an industry that was more prosperous in 1930 than it was in 1929. It was more prosperous in 1931, last year, than it was in 1929. Here was one industry that had not felt the depression, and for that reason the Senate put a tax upon these power companies; but the conferees have no regard for that fact. They put the tax back on the little-home owner, on the homes of the 8,000,000 people who have not employment at this time. They put it back upon the man with a family who is struggling with adversity. But the power companies, with great profits in their coffers, are not willing to pay this tax, notwithstanding the edict of the Senate to apply a tax to them, so they appealed to the conferees in question and triumphed.

Mr. President, when this tax bill went to the conferees the Senate had increased the income-tax rate on the incomes of corporations from 12 to 14 per cent, and the conferees reduced it one-quarter of 1 per cent. They had already relieved the power companies in this manner, and then they relieved them of this just tax by shifting it very largely to the common people.

Mr. President, it is an outrage. This is a tax upon a necessity. You know that light and power in the home to-day is nearly as much of a necessity as is food; and from the time we began with this tax bill, from the time it was conceived in the House, there has been one principle governing—that we would not tax a necessity. But in this case, although the Senate would not tax a necessity, the conferees, without any regard for these home owners, without any regard for the people out of employment, have taxed them rather than the opulent power companies; in fact, deliberately relieved the power companies.

What influence has been at work?

Mr. President, the Senate made it very clear that it proposed to tax power companies not only by the language in the amendment adopted but by its action upon the two substitutes offered, the first one by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], and the second by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed]. The votes recorded made it very plain what was intended to be done; but the conferees have changed this proposed tax from one interest, the power companies, to another interest, the consumer, the home owner. This action by the conferees also constituted the insertion of matter in this measure that was not considered by either House of Congress; and upon that ground alone a point of order properly lies against this report. But when we take this last proposition, as I have stated it, and add to that the fact that the conferees have taken a class of electrical consumption and taxed it when such taxation was not considered by the Senate and was never considered by the House, of course such action is properly subject to a point of order. There is no question that they did this: They said, in effect. whereas the Senate authorized the taxation of consumption supplied by privately owned power plants, we hereby add the consumption supplied by publicly owned power plants. That, Mr. President, is an undoubted insertion of new matter in this bill by the conferees, and without power to do so. The point of order should be sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I trust that the Chair will indulge me while I submit a few observations upon the point of order which is now raised. It depends upon the provisions of the second paragraph of Rule XXVII, which reads as follows:

. Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

The question is as to whether there is new matter included in this particular part of the report of the conference committee.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] has called attention to two features in respect to which new matter has been introduced, namely, that by the conference report the tax is imposed upon municipally owned corporations, while the bill confined the tax to privately owned corporations; next, he insists that the Senate laid the tax upon the corporation and refused to provide that it should be laid upon the consumer.

The conference committee reports a tax to be imposed, not upon the producer of the electrical energy but upon the consumer of the electrical energy, a proposition which was entirely rejected by the Senate.

Mr. President, I submit a third ground upon which this is objectionable. Let me read the Senate provision and the conference report provision. The Senate provision is as follows:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned, operating electrical-power companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold.

The conference report states:

There is hereby imposed a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the amount paid on or after the 15th day after the enactment of this act for electrical energy for domestic or commercial consumption furnished after such date and before July 1, 1934, to be paid by the person paying for such electrical energy, and to be collected by the vendor.

"And to be collected by the vendor." That language is entirely new. In other words, it imposes upon the vendor of the electrical energy an obligation to discharge a duty to the Government of the United States, namely, to collect a tax for the Government of the United States. That, it seems to me, must be agreed upon all hands to be entirely new.

Moreover, not only is it new, but it is unconstitutional and unenforceable, for this reason, that in the case of a municipally owned plant by this provision the committee undertakes to force the municipality to collect this tax of the consumer, a thing which the Congress of the United States can not possibly do. The Congress of the United States can not impose such a duty upon municipalities, a subdivision of a State government, any more than it could impose a duty of that character upon the State government.

Mr. President, it therefore occurs to me that in these three particulars the conference report is violative of the rule, and subject to the point of order which has been raised against it.

When the matter was before the Senate, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] proposed the following amendment to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Nebraska:

There is hereby imposed a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount paid on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this act for electric energy for domestic consumption or gas for domestic consumption furnished after such date and before July 1, 1933, to be paid by the person paying for such electric energy or gas and to be collected by the vendor.

"And to be collected by the vendor." The Senators will observe that the language is the same. It is easy to see that this was the progenitor of the language in the conference report, except that it includes gas, and makes the rate 5 per cent, instead of 3. That amendment was rejected by the Senate by a vote of 40 years to 45 nays.

Thereupon the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] offered an amendment. Bear in mind, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania were two of the three majority members of the committee on conference. The Senator from Pennsylvania then proposed the following amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska:

There is hereby imposed a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the amount paid on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this act for electric energy for commercial or domestic consumption or gas for commercial or domestic consumption furnished after such date and before July 1, 1933, to be paid by the person paying for such electric energy or gas and to be collected by the vendor.

That, it will be seen, is quite the same, except that it introduces energy sold for commercial use as well as that sold for domestic use. That amendment was likewise rejected by the Senate by an even more decisive vote, as my recollection now serves me, by 47 nays to 35 yeas.

In other words, the Senate refused to put that tax upon the consumers of electrical energy. The question was squarely debated here as to whether we should put this tax upon the consumer or put it upon the producer and vendor of the electrical energy.

When that matter went to conference they had the power to change the provision as adopted in any way they saw fit, but obviously it was entirely new matter to endeavor to impose the tax upon the consumer and not upon the producer. That matter was very carefully considered here, and the question was debated as to whether, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, the tax could not be passed on to the consumer, and varying views were entertained with respect to that.

The next day after the bill was passed I had inserted in the Record an article from the Journal of Commerce of June 2, 1932, entitled "Electrical Industry Not to Shift 3 Per Cent Tax." I read from the article: ELECTRIC INDUSTRY NOT TO SHIFT 3 PER CENT TAX—UTILITY MEN SAY COMPANIES WILL ABSORB NEW $55,000,000 LEVY ON GROSS INCOME

The electric power and light industry is not expected to be able to pass on immediately to consumers any important part of the 3 per cent excise tax adopted by the Senate and included in the new revenue bill, it was indicated yesterday by local utility men.

So that we had the matter as it passed the Senate in such shape that the tax was to be imposed, not upon the consumer of electricity but on the producers and vendors of it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, what was the language of the House?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bill as it passed the House contained no provision on the subject at all.

There were abundant reasons for that course, which were elaborated in the debate. The Senator from Nebraska this morning called attention again to the fact that among all the various industries of this country, of almost any character one can think of at all, this is the one industry that has not only maintained the standard of prosperity which it enjoyed in 1929 but which has shown even better returns since that time.

Mr. President, on this point I desire to call attention to an interesting observation on page 85 of the New Republic of June 8, 1932, the last number of that magazine, reading as follows:

What's all this nonsense about a depression? The Worcester Electric Light Co., of Worcester, Mass., hasn't heard of any such thing. It paid a 32 per cent dividend last year.

I trust that Senators present at least may learn of this splendid success of the Worcester Electric Light Co., of Worcester, Mass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. Mr. WALSH of Montana. The article reads:

What's all this nonsense about a depression? The Worcester Electric Light Co., of Worcester, Mass., hasn't heard of any such thing. It paid a 32 per cent dividend last year, amounting to three-quarters of a million dollars, and a 64 per cent dividend, or a million and a half, the year before, making a neat total of 96 per cent in two years, during which most business men were out in the garden eating worms. All this money went to the New England Power Association, which some time ago bought the Worcester company and is now proceeding to get back the purchase price as rapidly as possible. The New England Power Association also bought local electric companies in other New England cities, and has been squeezing profits out of them at a similar fantastically high rate. In Quincy, the rate was 48 per cent in 1931; in Attleboro, 40 per cent; in Lowell, 14.4 per cent, etc.

Large sums are also taken by the parent company for "manage-

Attleboro, 40 per cent; in Lowell, 14.4 per cent, etc.

Large sums are also taken by the parent company for "management fees." These charges increased from $66,000 in 1927 to $1,500,000 in 1929, and there is no evidence that they have been much decreased, if at all, since then. Another scheme by which the local companies are bled white is the withdrawal of money for taxes. It is stated by the Federal Trade Commission that each subsidiary company is forced to pay an amount equal to its full Federal taxes, although the New England Power Association makes a consolidated tax return. While these vast sums are rolling into the pockets of the Power Trust, the cities which are thus being mulcted are struggling desperately to feed and clothe their unemployed. In Worcester, for example, the public treasury with difficulty found $1,200,000 for the poor last year, while the power company took away two-thirds of that sum in profits. As we don't need to say, these profits are made possible by unfairly high rates permitted by the State regulatory authority. * * *

Mr. President, I submit that it is a circumstance which ought to be taken note of by every Member of this body, that the Senator from Utah having been defeated upon the floor of the Senate in the amendment he proposed, and the Senator from Pennsylvania having been defeated in the Senate upon the amendment he proposed, both becoming members of the committee on conference, then insert in the conference report practically the same propositions which met with the disapproval of the Senate upon a yea-and-nay vote.

Of course that is aside from the question as to whether they have introduced new matter; and I submit, sir, that in three particulars the matter is new in these particulars: The imposition of this tax upon the consumers of energy, the imposition of the tax upon all companies municipally owned or privately owned, and third, the attempt to transform the municipalities of the country owning their own electric-light plants into agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government for the collection of that tax.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, this is a most amazing thing to me. After the Senate of the United States, by a majority, adopts an amendment to a revenue bill or to a bill of any kind, and instructs its conferees, in this case five Senators, to insist on the Senate amendment, I am wondering why the conferees should deliberately go into conference with a like committee from the House and then and there undertake to substitute their will for the will of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment that is now in the conference report was submitted by Mr. Crisp, chairman of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator from Utah. This is an important question, and I would like to know what he is saying.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that the amendment which is in the conference report was submitted by Mr. Crisp, chairman of the conferees on the part of the House. The Senator from Indiana said that the conferees on the part of the Senate insisted upon having their way in the matter.

Mr. GLASS. But the Senate conferees yielded to the proposition as submitted by Mr. CRISP.

Mr. SMOOT. We did.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I want to say, with reference to what the Senator has presented as to him an astounding thing, that it seems to me to be entirely something that has taken place in the natural course of conferences. The discussion has gone far from the point of order. The prosperity of the electric companies or their bankruptcy has nothing to do with the point of order. The catalogue of offenses recited by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell], even an indictment for alleged crimes by the electric companies, has nothing to do with the point of order.

The amendment, thoroughly debated as it was, agreed to by the Senate by a large majority, went into the conference room under the formal vote of the Senate that its conferees were to insist upon the Senate amendments.

Under those circumstances the situation in which the amendment was found in the conference room was that the House conferees had three courses which they could pursue: They could agree, they could refuse to agree, or they could agree with an amendment. The third course is the one which the House conferees adopted. Since it has become the fashion in this session of Congress to make public things which happen in the conference room, the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate has now said that this proposal to agree with an amendment came from the House conferees, as, indeed, it had to come. There was no other way in which it could come.

The House conferees having pursued their constitutional duty with the three alternatives presented to them, and this amendment having gone to the conferees in such fashion that the entire subject was open for discussion and for amendment through an agreement with an amendment, the conferees acted perfectly in line with the precedents, perfectly in line with their constitutional functions, and, in my opinion, the point of order can not be sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have been very glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, though I do not agree with all he has said in this connection. I may say that I am not so much interested in the outcome of the point of order, whether it lies against the action taken or not. I think a point of order does lie and find myself in substantial agreement with the eminent Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] in the position he has taken with reference to that matter and against the position of the Senator from New Hampshire.

But regardless of the point of order, the bill is still in control of this body, and something can be done and, in my judgment, ought to be done. We have undertaken with this amendment to raise approximately $50,000,000. With one measure before the United States Senate and before the Congress known as the economy measure we reduced by 10 per cent the pay of all employees of the Government. even, as has been mentioned, the charwomen and the janitors, and those who receive very low pay. In the next moment we tax these same people for a necessity, electric current and gas and all the various products of the utilities of the Power Trust, which has a monopoly on these very necessities of life, so that the consumer gets hit both ways. We reduce his pay regardless of how little and inadequate it may be, and in the very next moment we heap this additional burden of taxes upon him, 3 per cent for the electric energy, the power used or the current used, and then with a sort of ironic gesture authorize the power company itself to collect that money from the consumer.

Power companies, if any in this land, should be successful and prosperous to-day. They have a complete monopoly of the product. The American people must use that product. Power companies have insisted on keeping their rates at the highest point throughout all the depression. But for some cause or other they have an enormous influence in this body, and apparently in the body at the other end of the Capitol, from all I have learned in the last few minutes.

But it makes no difference whether the proposition came from the House conferees or from the Senate conferees, it is unquestionably wrong. The Senate has decided on two successive votes that it was wrong, and finally on the third vote decided definitely that the vendor, the power company itself, must pay this tax. Then why not let the power company pay the tax? Why should the five Members of this body undertake to substitute their will for the will of a majority of the Senate? Has the Senate become defunct? Is it impossible for this body to make up its own mind any further, but must we have 3 or 4 or 5 Members of the body decide for us what we are to do and set aside with impunity the action taken by a majority of the Senate?

Mr. President, regardless of the point of order, whether it lies or not—though I think it lies—the bill should be sent back again for further action and this tax should be assessed and placed right where it belongs and where the Senate decided it should be placed, and that is on the vendors themselves. In the name of God, let us have some consideration for the consumers of the land, for those who are being taxed out of their homes, out of almost everything that life holds dear. Let us give the consumer, the man farthest down, a chance. I think the whole thing should go back to conference.

Mr. President, I am not certain about the parliamentary situation, but I do know the bill is still in control of the Senate, and we should see that justice prevails before we release that control. I think the whole thing is an outrage that ought to be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator want to have the roll called before the Chair rules?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let the roll be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following

Senators answered to their names:

Connally Hale Ashurst McKellar Harrison Hastings Coolidge Costigan McNary Metcalf Bailey Bankhead Couzens Hatfield Moses Neely Hebert Cutting Barbour Dale Davis Dickinson Norbeck Norris Nye Barkley Blaine Howell Johnson Borah Bratton Dill Kean Oddie Bulkley Kendrick Patterson Fess Fletcher Reed Robinson, Ark, Robinson, Ind. Bulow Keyes Frazier George Glass King La Follette Lewis Capper Caraway Schall Carey Glenn Sheppard Goldsborough Shipstead Shortridge Thomas, Idaho Tydings Walsh, Mass.

Smith Thomas, Okla.
Smoot Townsend Wagner Watson
Stelwer Trammell Walcott White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. If there be no further debate, the Chair is ready to rule.

The Senate amendment is as follows:

There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned, operating electric power companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold.

There is no provision in the Senate amendment relative to the payment of the tax by either the vendor or the purchaser, although it was doubtless the intent of the Senate that the tax should be paid by the power companies themselves. However, in a parliamentary sense the conferees, in the absence of specific instructions by the Senate, undoubtedly have the right, in the interest of adjusting differences between the two Houses, to take the action they did in providing for payment by the purchaser.

There is no provision in the House bill on the subject of power sold by electrical companies. Therefore, there are no restrictions upon the power of the conferees, subject, of course, to the limitations of the rule itself in dealing with this matter. They have broader latitude and authority than would otherwise be the case. They are empowered to make any change or modification that is germane or relevant.

The term "new matter" contained in the rules embraces, as the Chair thinks, matter that is entirely irrelevant to the subject matter.

The point of order is overruled.

The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, as I listened to the reading of the ruling by the President of the Senate, I did not particularly note that he ruled upon the point that the conferees had provided for the taxing of the consumption of electricity produced by publicly owned power plants. That was not included in the Senate amendment; that had not been passed upon by either House; and that was unquestionably new matter introduced into this provision.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I did not understand the question which was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the parliamentary question ought to be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska having appealed from the decision of the Chair, the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham], who is necessarily absent. I find, however, that I can transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. I make that transfer and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called).

I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague [Mr. Copeland] is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted. Mr. THOMAS of Idaho. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My colleague [Mr. Wheeler] is unavoidably absent. He is paired, as has just been announced, with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Thomas]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the pair of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart]. If the Senator from New York were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM]. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 33, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Brookhart

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to explain briefly why I shall vote against the conference report. I do so as a protest against the action of the conferees in relation to the tax on electricity. I think it is the most indefensible thing that has been done by conferees for the Senate in many years. It is clearly a move in the interest of the great power corporations of this country and against the consumers of electricity. I will not be a party to any such action. The Senate voted against this exact provision twice, as it is now

For that reason I shall vote against the conference report. Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for a moment only.

I very much regret that the conferees of the Senate, as I apply in respect of admissions to the games of the Tenth Olympiad, to be held at Los Angeles, Calif., from July 30, 1932, to August 14,

As will be seen, that was a section exempting from admission tax tickets to the Tenth Olympiad, which is to be celebrated in the United States, in Los Angeles, Calif., beginning July 30 and continuing until August 14.

I will not trouble the Senate, for I assume that it has learning, with any words touching this great international meeting-a great honor, a great distinction to our country. A proposition to exempt admissions to it from this tax was submitted in the House when the revenue bill was pending in that body. That proposition did not meet with the approval of the House. With great respect for the membership of the House, I am persuaded that many of its Members were not advised as to the international character of this great meeting.

I had the honor to propose a like proposition to the Senate Finance Committee, which committee unanimously approved The Senate, in like fashion, unanimously approved the action of the Finance Committee; and the matter went into conference.

When the matter was before the Finance Committee I submitted a statement of reasons for its adoption. For the purpose of the record, and to the end that Members of the Senate, and particularly Members of the House may know the reasons which prompted the Finance Committee and the Senate to approve section 712, I ask permission that the remarks I made in the Committee on Finance be incorporated in our Record here to-day as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT BY HON. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM CALIFORNIA

Senator Shorraidge. Mr. Chairman, I have a matter which I have been waiting to present to the committee.

The Chairman, Senator Shortridge.
Senator Shortridge. Mr. Chairman, to H. R. 10236, the bill now

Senator Shortenges. Mr. Chairman, to H. R. 10236, the bill now under consideration by our committee, to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, I offer the following amendment:

On page 251, after line 14, insert the following new section:

"Sec. 712. Admission to Olympic Games.—The tax imposed by section 500(a) (1) of the revenue act of 1926, as amended, shall not apply in respect of admissions to the games of the Tenth Olympiad, to be held at Los Angeles, Calif., from July 30, 1932, to August 14, 1932, inclusive."

The great honor of celebrating the Tenth Olympiad has come to

The great honor of celebrating the Tenth Olympiad has come to our country, and it will be celebrated in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., from July 30, 1932, to August 14, 1932, inclusive.

When we speak of the Tenth Olympiad our minds are carried back many centuries before Christ when the Olympic Games and others were celebrated in ancient and classic Greece. There were indeed four kinds of Grecian games:

(1) The Olympian, (2) the Pythian, (3) the Nemean, and (4) the Isthmian. All were of a religious character and all were treated with the greatest solemnity and observed with the most

It was considered to be a mark of exceptional fitness, morally, It was considered to be a mark of exceptional fitness, morally, mentally, and bodily, to be allowed to compete in these games at all; while for the winner the very highest honors his nation and parent city could lavish upon him were in store. It has been said that as a proof of this one has only to instance that the ordinary entrance to the city was not considered good enough for the hero, but a breach was made in the city wall for his triumphal entry to his native home. Although the official reward of the victor was only a simple wreath upon the brow and palm branches placed in the hands, yet the greatest distinction awaited him among his countrymen. countrymen.

countrymen.

The principal and by far the best known of the four great festivals of the Greeks were the Olympic Games. Many centuries have passed since they flourished at Olympia in Elis. Kings have come and gone, dynasties risen and waned, but the memory of these glorious gatherings of all that was best and purest among the ancient peoples is as fresh in the mind of the world to-day as it was before the coming of Christ. Indeed, they were alleged to have been under the direct supervision of the Olympian deity Zeus, before whose statue, made by Phidias and erected in the temple at Olympia, the athletes made their prayers for victory. The festive rites were made up of processions invocations and The festive rites were made up of processions, invocations, and public banquets, together with the singing and recitation of odes

I very much regret that the conferees of the Senate, as I am advised, were forced to recede from the action of the Senate in having incorporated in the bill what is known as section 712, which reads as follows:

SEC. 712. Admission to Olympic games: The tax imposed by section 500 (a) (1) of the revenue act of 1926, as amended, shall not

In a word, the first Olympiad, participated in by competitors from many nations, was celebrated in Athens, Greece, in 1896, and since then, at intervals of four years, these games have been celebrated in different countries so that, as I remarked, the Tenth Olympiad is to be held and celebrated in Los Angeles.

In recognition of the great honor and distinction coming to our country and in aid of the successful carrying out of the program the Congress passed House Joint Resolution 72, which reads as "To permit the temporary entry into the United States under certain conditions of alien participants and officials of the Third Olympic Winter Games and of the games of the Tenth Olympiade to be held in the United States in 1932.

"Resolved, etc., That alien participants, officials, and other accredited members of delegations to the Third Olympic Winter Games and to the games of the Tenth Olympiade to be held in the Games and to the games of the Tenth Olympiade to be held in the United States in 1932, and members of the immediate families and servants of the foregoing, all the foregoing who are nonimmigrants, if otherwise admissible into the United States under the immigration laws, shall be exempted from the payment of the tax of $8 prescribed by section 2 of the immigration act of 1917, and exempted from the fees prescribed under the law to be collected in connection with executing an application for a visa and visaing the passport or other travel document of an alien for the purpose of entering the United States as a nonimmigrant, and such aliens shall not be required to present official passports issued by the governments to which they owe allegiance: Provided, That such aliens shall be in possession of official Olympic Games identity cards duly visaed without charge by American consular officers abroad: And provided further, That such aliens shall comply with regulations not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor and the Secretary of State: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall relieve an alien from being required to obtain a gratis nonimmigrant visa if coming to the United States as a nonimmigrant, or an immigration visa if coming to the United States as an immigrant: Be it further the passport or other travel document of an alien for the purpos their personal effects and their equipment to be used in connection with the games, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Approved, December 19, 1931.

In further aid of those charged with the responsibility of financing the Tenth Olympiad I have introduced and there is pending before our committee Senate Joint Resolution 143, which reads are follows: reads as follows:

"Joint resolution for the admission, free of duty, of equipment for the games of the Tenth Olympiad

"Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to admit free of duty any article of equipment which it may be necessary for the 'Tenth Olympiade Committee of the Games of Los Angeles, United States of America, 1932 (Ltd.),' a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, in charge of the games of the Tenth Olympiad, to be held at Los Angeles, Calif., from July 30, 1932, to August 14, 1932, inclusive, to import for the proper staging and performance of such games."

As will be seen by the amendment, I propose that the tax imposed by section 500 (a) (1) of the revenue act of 1926, as amended, shall not apply in respect of admissions to the games of the Tenth Olympiad.

of the Tenth Olympiad.

In support of this amendment I offer and request the sympathetic consideration of a statement of reasons why it is hoped that the games of the Tenth Olympiad will be exempted from the proposed amusement tax on tickets of admission. This statement furnished by the Tenth Olympiade Committee of the Games of Los Angeles, United States of America, 1932 (Ltd.), by Mr. William May Garland, president, and Mr. Zack J. Farmer, secretary-manager, reads as follows:

"STATEMENT OF REASONS WHY IT IS HOPED THAT THE GAMES OF THE TENTH OLYMPIAD, TO BE CELEBRATED IN LOS ANGELES, CALIF., JULY 30 TO AUGUST 14, 1932, INCLUSIVE, WILL BE EXEMPTED FROM THE PROPOSED AMUSEMENT TAX ON TICKETS OF ADMISSION

"It seems obvious that the proposed tax is intended to apply to established or regular amusement or entertainment business, which business can readily adjust itself to meet the tax obligation.

"The Olympic Games, however, have necessarily been budgeted and in course of preparation for the past two years, tickets have all been printed and many are in circulation, and we therefore all been printed and many are in circulation, and we therefore find ourselves in the unhappy position of not having been able to anticipate this possible burden on our budget, and it is impossible to protect ourselves on our tickets by adding the tax.

"As our budget has always presented the possibility of a deficit, it being our sole aim at all times merely to achieve a balanced budget at the conclusion of the games, it is evident that if the games of the Tenth Olympiad are not exempted from the proposed tax a very serious, and it seems to us, a very unfair, financial result will ensure.

tax a very serious, and it seems to us, a very unfair, financial result will ensue.

"By 'we' is meant the Tenth Olympiade Committee of the Games of Los Angeles, United States of America, 1932 (Ltd.), a California corporation, organized as a nonprofit, cooperative corporation, without capital stock.

"This corporation is known, under the Olympic protocol—rules and regulations—as the Organizing Committee of the Games of the Tenth Olympiad, carrying the sole responsibility for the creation of all necessary stadia and other extensive facilities, assisting in many ways the participation of the athletes from the many nations, making all other preparations for the games and of administering the same.

"The corporation is provided for under an act of the Legislature of the State of California known as the California Tenth Olympiad bond act of 1927, which act was made fully effective by the adoption by the voters of a constitutional amendment and the act referred to fully established the responsibility of the corporation to make the necessary preparations for, and to hold the celebration of the games of the Tenth Olympiad.

"It must be remembered that the International Olympic Committee first awarded the games of the Tenth Olympiad to the United States of America, thereafter designating the city of Los Angeles as the precise location for the games.

"In all respects the corporation has, from the inception of its activities four years ago, felt its responsibility to perform its task in a manner creditable to the United States of America as well as to city and State.

"The National Government has heretofore evidenced its interest in, and recognition of, this great international event through passage by the Congress, in December, 1931, of a joint resolution providing important measures of assistance to the nations participating in the games, in the entry of their teams and equipment into the United States of America, and enunciating a message of valence. welcome.

"The Internal Revenue Department has heretofore exempted the corporation from payment of income tax, and more than a year ago informed the corporation that there would be no tax upon its individual tickets of admission to the games if same were soid at a price not exceeding $3. The corporation has acted accordingly in respect to its ticket prices, and in fact, due to the nonprofit and civic character of the games, the prices for admission have been made the lowest in the history of the games.

"All expenditures of the corporation are being defrayed at the present time by public moneys of the State of California, and the city and county of Los Angeles, and the balance of its expenditures, it is contemplated by the budget, will have to be met from receipts of sales of admission, and a desperate effort is being made to have the sum of these funds equal the expenditures in the hope of preventing this nonprofit enterprise from suffering a deficit in "The Internal Revenue Department has heretofore exempted of preventing this nonprofit enterprise from suffering a deficit in addition to the obligation already existing in the form of the referred-to advancement of funds by the State of California and the city and county of Los Angeles.

"The officers, members, and directors of the corporation are stellars."

"In conclusion we again respectfully petition special consideration of the thought that the proposed tax legislation could hardly have been conceived with a view to being retroactive against a national and international nonprofit event such as the Olympic Games, for which the herein referred-to corporation is liable, which event has been in course of preparation for several years, and which event likewise could not be expected to have contemplated in its civic financing plan the exigencies of such a situation as is presented by the proposed legislation, and, in fact, has been helpless at all times to protect itself from such unexpected burden.

"We therefore most earnestly and respectfully ask that the games of the Tenth Olympiad and/or the undersigned corporation be exempted from paying any tax on tickets of admission, or otherwise, under the referred-to legislation now pending in the Congress.

Senator Shortrings. Supplementing this statement, I receipt of the following telegram from President Garland:

Los Angeles, Calif., March 31, 1932.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE

Senate Office Building:

Please emphasize in Senate committee on tax bill that Olympic Games and managing corporation are entirely nonprofit, and that entire underwriting financing is funds from State of California and city and county of Los Angeles, and that tax on tickets to games will be a direct tax on Los Angeles City and County and games will be a direct tax on Los Angeles City and County and State of California.

Also emphasize that Olympic rules governing limit of ticket prices make it certain that tax will not fall on rich, as stated in House, but will fall on the games, organization, and the municipal and State financing which have been helpless to protect themselves because our preparations have necessarily been under way for several years before present bill anticipated, and it is impossible for any protective measures to be taken before bill is effective. We plead that Olympic Games, already recognized by joint resolution of both Houses last December, be not made helpless victim of tax law, which can hardly be considered as having been fundamentally designed to tax such unusual and unprecedented event like the Olympic Games. Please stress these points in addition to the full statement we have previously sent. We will greatly appreciate your utmost effort, because this tax threatens financial success of most important event in California since the exposition and in which taxpayers through State bond issue already have invested $1,000,000.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM MAY GARLAND, President.

Senator Shortrings. Further supplementing the statement quoted and in earnest support of the amendment I have proposed, I am in receipt of the following telegram from Mr. Frederick J. Koster, president of the California State Chamber of Commerce:

Los Angeles, Calif., April 16, 1932.

Los Angeles, Calif., April 16, 1932.

Hon. Samuel M. Shoetelge,

Senator from California, Washington:

California State Chamber of Commerce in session Los Angeles to-day unanimously urges adoption of amendment to general tax bill exempting Olympic Games tickets of admission from tax. Proposed tax would be levy on State, city, and county, which are financing Olympic Games with public funds. California resents references by opposition quoted in press comparing Olympic Games to prize fights and similar affairs. Games are great international noncommercialized, nonprofit event, and United States is host nation. Games tickets of necessity already printed and audited, many sold and in distribution. Impossible for games management to have anticipated this tax burden on budget or to collect save from public without serious injury and confusion. Preparations for games have been under way for several years. This and many other sound reasons differentiate games from amusement business in general, for which tax is obviously intended. Tax application to games would be retroactive and confiscatory. We strongly urge Senate to amend in favor of exempting Olympic Games and urge adoption of such amendment in the House.

Respectfully, Respectfully,

CALIFORNIA STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, By FREDERICK J. KOSTER, President.

Senator Shortedge. Contestants in the game will come from many foreign nations. And it is hoped and believed that the President of the United States will be able to be in Los Angeles during great festival occasion.

this great festival occasion.

I repeat that I sincerely hope the committee will approve the amendment I have offered. Los Angeles and California have gladly assumed the financial responsibility of making a success of the Tenth Olympiad; no profit is anticipated or expected; my amendment seeks to prevent any deficit.

Perhaps I have said enough to impress members of the committee and others with the honor and distinction coming to our country, and the merit of the amendment I have offered to the bill under consideration.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] or the chairman of the committee for his interpretation of language appearing on page 284, relating to the tax on telegraph dispatches and messages and on cable and radio dispatches.

Subparagraph (B) provides for a 5 per cent tax on telegraph dispatches and messages. Subparagraph (C) provides for a 10-cent charge on cable and radio dispatches.

I have the impression that subparagraph (B) relates to messages of a domestic character within the continental United States, while subparagraph (C) applies to messages going without the continental United States. The use of the word "cable" would suggest this interpretation. Is that the Senator's construction?

Mr. REED. I do not know, Mr. President, that my impression has any value in the construction of the act.

Mr. WHITE. I value it.

Mr. REED. But the construction that I put upon it myself was that paragraph (B) referred to all forms of telegraphic communication, whether aerial wire or conduit or cable or radio was used within the boundaries of continental United States and that paragraph (C) related to similar messages by whatever means of telegraphy to our outlying possessions, such as Alaska and the islands of the Pacific, including, of course, Hawaii, and to foreign countries.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, there has been introduced in this bill, as a result of the action of the conferees, a tax upon a necessity-a necessity required by 24,000,000 consumers in this country. That means that there are 100,-000,000 people affected by this tax.

From the outset, it seemed to be determined, and properly, that taxes should not be levied upon the necessities of life. However, the conferees have seen fit to place on the backs of 24,000,000 home-owner and commercial consumers of this country this sales tax, excluding, however, the power users, who consume about 65 per cent of all the electric energy produced.

It is largely the little fellow who is to be taxed. It is the big fellow who has the lowest rates, who gets his energy at about one-fourth of what is paid by the rest; yet he is to be excluded from the tax. The home owners must pay. The responsibility for this ought to be placed right where it belongs. The Senate voted, initially, against it. Yet it has been done. It is the old, old tale of the big interests ruling.

As a consequence, I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word.

I do not like the conference report on the power matter. I am decidedly against it. There are so many propositions involved in this report, however, and its acceptance is so urgent, that I do not feel justified in voting against this conference report on that ground alone. I do, however, want to express my dissent just as strongly as possible against the action taken by the conferees with reference to power.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have heard the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones]. I have heard it a hundred times since I have been in the Senate from various Members of the Senate, and I have heard it several times from the Senator from Washington.

We have no recourse here except one that on the face of it may seem harsh, and that is to vote down the conference report. As long as we continue to apologize for the violation of our rules by conference committees and the bringing in of such reports as this, just so long will we continue to be trampled under foot by conferees. It does no good to apologize and say we are going to vote for the conference report anyway. I realize that a majority of the Senate are going to vote against some of the most important things that they favor, and for things that they do not favor.

After a full debate, after full consideration, after several roll calls, the Senate put into the bill as it passed the Senate its judgment on the question of taxing power and where the tax should be levied. The amendment first offered by my colleague [Mr. Howell] providing for a tax upon power, so worded as to prevent its being passed on, was the subject of full discussion. The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] offered an amendment containing his view, which he had a right to do. It was fully discussed. It was fully debated; and the Senate, by a very decisive vote on a roll call, voted down the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Then came the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the same amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, as I remember, excepting to change the rate and to put in commercial lighting as well as domestic lighting; and that was debated. The debate went on, one following the other, and the matter was fully discussed, and more and more of the Members of the Senate became convinced that the position taken by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania was wrong. The same fundamental proposition was involved in each amendment. Then we had a roll call again, practically the same question over; and by a much more decisive vote we voted down the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania.

If there ever was a deliberate expression of the will of the Senate it was expressed upon the amendment we adopted to the bill providing for the taxation of power companies.

It so happens that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and our great leader here, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson], constitute in effect the conference committee of the Senate. They constitute the majority. With those votes staring them in the face, they go into the conference and back down completely. While they do not offer the amendment in the conference committee, the amendment is offered in the conference committee that was probably copied out of the RECORD from the amendment of the Senator from Utah or the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and they get what they want. They can snap their fingers at the Senate. They care nothing about what a majority of the Senate says upon this important proposition, but lie down and surrender. because in surrendering they get what they want; and, incidentally, that is what the power companies want. It is just a coincidence, of course, but it happens to be the same.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that we have before us a case where we are justified in voting against the conference report rather than to see the will of the Senate stricken down and killed by the wish of 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 Members of the Senate. After they had had their day in court, after they had been heard, after the Senate had patiently and courteously listened to them and then deliberately voted them down, then in the dark rooms of the conference committee, where the sunlight of publicity can not penetrate, where no record is kept of the proceedings, secretly, silently, they take out what we put in, and put in what they tried to get in and failed.

More than that, Mr. President, as the amendment passed the Senate it levied a tax upon all the great private power companies which are getting returns that are exorbitant in these days and times of distress. They deal in a necessity of life. They have, in the main, a monopoly of the production and sale of their product. They have made exorbitant profits; they made more in 1930 and 1931 than in the prosperous years, while everybody else has been stricken, every business on earth nearly suffering distress. While millions are tramping the streets hunting for employment, while children are scantily clothed and unfed, when widows are starving, in need of bread, the Power Trust goes marching on, levying its unholy tribute upon God's poor, upon every home, as well as every business, under our flag, making more money than they used to make.

The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] called our attention earlier in the day to a profit made by the Power Trust of 96 per cent in two years in these years of depression. Yet we are afraid to tax that monster. We hesitate. At least our conferees, who seem to be our masters, hesitate; no; they do not hesitate; they just go over to the other side without hesitation. They take the tax off this great giant, this monopoly, this trust, which is making more money than anybody else, reverently lift the burden of taxation which the Senate wanted to put upon this trust; and where did they put it? Upon the homes and the little stores all over the United States.

The washerwoman who is working by electric light and operating her washing machine by electricity must pay a tax, but the millionaire who uses a hundred thousand horse-power pays no tax. The boy and the girl going to school who study their lessons by the light of electricity at night at the fireside must pay a tax on every kilowatt, but the mighty giant which uses enough electric power to turn the mighty wheels of commerce, worth millions and millions of dollars, is tax free, as far as this item is concerned.

Oh, no, we are not going to tax the rich fellow, we are not going to tax the monopoly which is making more money than anybody else on earth, but we are going to put the burden upon the poor. The poor can not contribute to campaign funds, and the big fellow can. Perhaps that explains it. Maybe it is only a partial explanation. At least, our conferees, disregarding our direct instructions, have said that that is what we are going to do, and the question now is, are we going to be so submissive as to say, "Yes, that is what we are going to do"?

Are we going to listen now to the siren voice that has been yelling at us ever since last December, "Do this, and do it now, or you will not balance the Budget?" Are we going longer to heed the command of big business, of millionaires, of men who can make great contributions to political campaigns, and obey their will, and shift the burden of taxation from the rich to the poor? That is the question here.

Mr. President, I want to discuss another item in this conference report, amendment No. 42, which I can not explain, unless I say that the committee must even have been moved by malice in this case to add a burden to those who are now toiling, to raise the food that feeds the world.

There is a law on the statute books which was intended to relieve from the operation of the income tax law farmers' cooperative organizations. We enacted that law on the theory that those organizations really make no profit as such. I think it is a fundamentally sound theory. No one, so far as I know, has ever disputed it. No voice has been raised against that kind of a law.

It was found, however, by cooperative organizations of farmers in the Middle West that they were not getting the benefit of the law, that the agents who went out from the Bureau of Internal Revenue were in the habit of gathering together the farmers where they owned cooperative elevators and cooperative institutions, and scaring them and frightening them into the belief that they had not kept their books properly, that they had made returns which were false, that technically they were guilty of perjury and were liable to go to jail, were liable to go to Leavenworth, as some of the letters here in evidence show, unless they back tracked. Then these specialists, these scientific bookkeepers and auditors, would pull prepared affidavits out of their pockets and have these farmers in their fright sign them, in order, as the farmers in many instances believed, to escape the penitentiary, where they were led to believe, in their mistaken fright, they were about to go.

When it was all over, those organizations got no exemption. Out of more than 12,000 of such organizations in the United States, less than 700 were granted the exemption intended by the law.

Mr. President, when the tax bill was pending, and when the amendment to which I am speaking was before us, representatives of the Bureau of Internal Revenue were invited to be present at a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Bulow] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hatfield] were with me members of that subcommittee. We had a full hearing and adjourned with the understanding that an effort would be made to reach an agreement so that the farmers would get the exemption which the law was intended to give them.

Within a day or two I received a letter from the bureau calling my attention to a statute which made it impossible for them to let us see the records in any of these cases. When I read the letter and consulted the law, I came to the conclusion that the bureau was right, that they could not show those records to us, that they were secret. So the farmers were barred by the closed door of the bureau from seeing their affidavits, seeing the written statements which they had sent in, and which they had been trying to see in order to find out what they had said.

They were told, "You can not come in. You can not see what the record shows in your case. Your attorney can not see them; the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry can not see them. The members of the subcommittee, specially deputized to investigate the subject, can not see them. They are secret. Nobody from the Senate can see the records, unless he is a member of the almighty Committee on Finance," coming right back to the Senater from Utah, who, I think, either drew or had to do with the drawing of the law when it was made

Mr. President, I am wondering whether the members of the Finance Committee, given rights and privileges denied to other Senators, did not have the big head when they come into the conference committee and say, "Under the law we take a special privilege of seeing what is behind these closed doors, or seeing what is locked up which these farmers have reported, these affidavits which have scared them to death, and because we have a special privilege there we have one here. We will write into this bill whatever we please, and the Senate will take it, because the cry will go forth that we must have this bill at once, we must pass it now, or the Budget will remain unbalanced a few hours longer."

I can not help remembering when the President of the United States came here the other day and deferred our action on the tax bill. He deferred the balancing of the Budget by the very length of time it took him to deliver his address. If he had not come here, we would have gotten through just that much more quickly. Nobody has said anything about that, and I presume I will be decried all over the United States because I have dared to raise my voice against precipitous action and the approval of this report instanter, because it is necessary to pass it in order to balance the Budget.

Let me pause here to say that if it is money we are after, the members of the committee who represented the Senate on the conference have thrown away a great amount of income. Under the bill as it passed the Senate we would have gotten a tax from all the big power companies of the United States. Under the bill now reported by the conference committee we have lost all the revenue which would have been received from them, except that from commercial and domestic lighting, from the homes and the stores. Big business is entirely free, and we have lost that revenue. I wonder how much that unbalances the Budget. If some one like myself had succeeded in having that done, he or I would have been denounced throughout the land as a traitor, because it would have been said, "You unbalanced the Budget, the sacred Budget." The Finance Committee can do it and it is all right.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Jones in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that undoubtedly the amount saved to the big interests will go into the campaign fund; so it will be well spent, at least.

Mr. NORRIS. It will not all go into that fund. They will put in a portion, likely, but they will take their interest in advance when they do put it into that fund, because the possibility of getting returns afterwards is a little more uncertain at this time than ever in years past.

But I was talking about amendment No. 42. The subcommittee adjourned. They agreed upon the amendment to the bill. I brought it into the Senate. I offered it. It was debated. I read into the Record parts of the evidence that had been produced before the committee.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HATFIELD. The gentlemen who represented the Internal Revenue Bureau seemed to be friendly toward the amendment as they expressed themselves to the subcommittee. Especially was that so with respect to the chief counsel of the bureau. Does the Senator agree?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. There was no objection raised anywhere along the line. The amendment went into conference and was kicked out of the window. Why? I understand that in the secret conference room the Senator from Utah had some kind of communication from the Treasury Department. If I am wrong, I would like to have him correct me now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been out of the Chamber, and I do not know what the Senator is talking about.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean what information, if any, did the Senator have in regard to amendment 42? That is the amendment trying to make the law plainer which gives cooperative organizations an exemption from taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember having any communication from the department. I will look it up and let the Senator know.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not caring whether the Senator had any or not. If he did not have any, it is a good deal worse than if he had a communication.

Mr. SMOOT. If I had any, I would not hesitate to tell the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Then if there was none, why in the world did the amendment go out? Nobody was objecting to it. Everybody was for it. But in that secret meeting with closed doors it went out for some reason and nobody knows why. I was told that the Treasury Department had sent some kind of communication to the Senator from Utah. If that be true—and I have to argue it both ways, because the Senator from Utah does not know—if he did get a communication, then in the name of courtesy, in the name of ordinary honest dealing between men, in the name of common ordinary courteous treatment between Senators and that courtesy one Senator should give to another, why should we throw this amendment out without giving some one an opportunity to refute the argument that was heard in secret?

Why did not those same men, if there are any who are opposed to this matter, show up before the committee or in the Senate? I was careful when the committee meeting took place to notify the bureau, and there appeared at that meeting David Burnet, Commissioner of the Bureau of Internal Revenue; Mr. Clarence M. Charest, general counsel; Mr. L. K. Sunderlin, head of rules and regulations; Mr. P. R. Baldridge, special deputy commissioner: Mr. L. P. Watson, member of the general counsel's office; and Mr. Benjamin H. Bartholow, special assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury. They were all there and heard every word. If the bureau or the department had any objection, why did they not say so then? Were these men there for the purpose of learning what the farmers were claiming in order that they might go back and tell their masters so they could send a command to the conference committee when they met in secret and throw out the amendment? Yet without a word the amendment is thrown out.

Mr. President, I think it is an insult, particularly to myself and to the other members of the subcommittee who had been backing the amendment and who had fathered it and followed it through from the beginning. Why were not we entitled to a hearing? We gave them an opportunity to be heard. If this provision was going out in secret conference, why should not the Senator from Utah have said, "These men in good faith have presented this amendment. Nobody has offered a single objection to it. Before we throw it out we will see what they have to say in answer to this argument, whatever it may be, that is being made in secret "? Common courtesy would have demanded that. But now the conference committee, endowed almost with the powers of the Deity, said, "We do not care what our fellow Senators are trying to do. We do not like the looks of this thing, and so we will throw it out."

Now, when the conference report is up before the Senate, the Senator from Utah says he has no recollection of having received word from anybody. That makes it worse yet. The members of the conference committee of the Senate, with the record full of evidence, had knowledge of the fact that it was shown here in the Senate that nobody had objected, and that because of the lack of this kind of law thousands and thousands of farmers were being denied their rights which the law gives them because somebody in the Bureau of Internal Revenue singles out these farmers to wreak upon them the vengeance of their wrath, as it seems to me. If nobody objected then, how in the world did this thing get thrown out of the bill?

Mr. President, in all my experience it seems to me I have never known an instance so flagrant as this. I know it is unimportant as compared with great national questions. I realize that. Perhaps the other one is not so nationally important. I realize that. Members may say, "Oh, this is wrong, of course, but it only affects about 11,000 or 12,000 farmer associations and takes away something that the law undertakes to give them; but in order to balance the Budget we will not have to send this thing back to conference. We will have to get through with this and let the Budget be balanced." I realize that; but how are we ever going to correct such things unless some time, somehow, somewhere we lay down the rule that a conference committee of the Senate is not greater than the Senate itself. Here is an opportunity to do it. The country will go on, probably, if we send this matter back to conference. Some of those in the Government who are so anxious to balance the Budget will begin to realize that if we insist upon taxing the Power Trust under the amendment we put into the bill as it passed the Senate it will raise millions of revenue that we are not going to get under the conference report.

Mr. President, it seems to me like a cruel, hard-hearted thing. Here are a lot of farmers to whom the law undertakes to give, with the consent of everybody, a certain right, a certain privilege. Then because of the methods pursued by an executive department of the Government, which they use in enforcing the law, when we all realize and know they are not going to get it, then we put an amendment into a bill that will rectify the error or correct the mistake, if mistake it may be called. Nobody objects. Everybody said, "Yes; that is fair. We should do that."

We sent it to conference and all we know about it is that when the bill comes out of that secret chamber the amendment relating to these farmers is not in it. The conferees were too busy thinking about how to serve the Power Trust. Everything everywhere points to this one fundamental principle: Relieve the rich and sock the poor! Release the Power Trust and put the burden upon the washerwoman, the student, the home, and the fireside. Relieve the great trust and withdraw from the farmers of America the protection which the law is intended to give them in taxing matters. Help the rich and sock the poor! That is the slogan all through this taxing matter. Every fight that we had was fundamentally along that line.

After a desperate struggle, a life and death struggle, we were compelled to go back in the tax bill and adopt the Connally income-tax rates and put them into effect, the rates against which great wealth had protested in the beginning and which the Senate had rejected in the beginning. That far we had to go because we were beginning to realize that the burdens which were being placed upon the poor were too great to be borne. We tax the checks of every one of these cooperative organizations. We have made them pay millions and millions of dollars upon the checks that the great cooperative organizations will issue, and yet in the next breath we take away their right under the taxing law which the law intended to give them.

Oh, that is consistency. Every time we do it we relieve somebody who could pay millions and millions of taxes without being hurt. There is not an institution, there is not a corporation, there is not an outfit under God's shining sun that could so well pay the tax that was levied by the bill as the Power Trust could pay what was levied against it; but, hoggish in their monopoly and with their influence over the Senate and the House and the White House and all the legislatures and all the officials of the Government, with their mighty power reaching into every community, they said, "No; we are sacred. You must not tax the millions that we filch from the student and the washerwoman and the farmer and the merchant. We will not pay it." And the conferees on the part of the Senate say, "Amen. God bless you."

How much will that be worth in the campaign, Mr. President? Yet that is what we were up against during the earlier consideration of this bill and that is what we are up against now in the last hour of its consideration. They will say, "It is not right," of course; they will apologize, of course; they will say, "We do not like it; it is wrong, but we are going to do it just the same, though we will not do it again"; but the next time the same apology will be made, and it will be done again.

Here is the law, Mr. President—it has been on the statute books for years—which provides that cooperative organizations of farmers and fruit growers shall be exempt from the payment of income taxes; and here are the administrators of the law sending their men out making it impossible for the small, or comparatively small, organizations of farmers to get this exemption. The big institutions get it, but the little fellows do not get it because, as the evidence before the subcommittee, a copy of which I have in my hand, shows, they were so bothered, they were so frustrated, and found it so difficult to meet the requirements of these technical experts who came there from the Bureau of Internal Revenue that they gave up and said in despair, "We will pay the tax and say no more about it." That is the kind of enforcement we have.

I want now to go back to a matter which I had almost forgotten. The Senator from Utah did not know anything about it; this action was taken without his remembering how or why these people were cut out. I am informed that one of the same specialists or experts who appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who listened to the hearings and knew what we were going to do was the same expert who sat right there by the side of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], during the long deliberations on this bill. All those fellows knew about it. There was not anybody in the bureau who did not know about it. The amendment itself was printed for weeks. Six or seven of the experts appeared before the committee. I had conferences with some of them in my office. Besides that, one of them appeared here as an expert and sat by the side of the Senator from Utah and by the side of the Senator from Pennsylvania and was there when I argued this amendment. Why did he not speak? If there was any objection, why did he not say so? Why did he not whisper into the ear of the Senator from Utah what the objection was and let the Senator state it to the Senate and give those of us who favored the amendment an opportunity at least to answer the objection?

Are you going to try these men without giving an opportunity to see the witnesses who testify against them? Are you going to condemn these men when the evidence against them is secret, and nobody, not even God, knows, what it is? Still, you are proposing to throw the amendment out. Are we going to do such a thing? Are we going to do so unjust, so cruel, so unfair a thing as to slap the farmers of the West in the face with that kind of a proposition? That is what we will be doing, it seems to me, if we shall agree to this conference report.

PROPOSED REPUBLICAN PROHIBITION PLANK

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it looks as if with the coming of the month of June the season for political bunk has opened in full bloom. I read in the New York Times of this morning that a number of prominent Republicans met yesterday and devised a plank dealing with prohibition. The purported draft of the plank agreed upon is contained in this morning's New York Times, and I shall read it at this time:

The Republican Party is the party of the Constitution, and we stand for its complete observance and also for the faithful enforcement of all laws.

My, my, my, how wonderful! Think of it, Senators, the Republican Party stands for the Constitution and for the laws of the United States! Wonderful! I wish this party and all the other parties could have such noble, such patriotic, such fine principles as are enunciated in paragraph 1 of this proposed prohibition plank. That language is put in there, as Senators know, to get the dry vote. Now, let me go a little farther. There may be a few drys who will wiggle out on that pronouncement, so they add another paragraph:

We abhor the saloon and are unutterably opposed to its return.

That ought to satisfy any dry in the world. "Elect us and no saloon will come back; we are against that institution." Wonderful!

Paragraph 3:

But-

There is no "but" in this proposed plank, but I, myself, am putting in the "but"—

[But] we recognize, however, the honest difference of opinion regarding the eighteenth amendment, and we recognize the right of the people, who ordained the Constitution, to pass upon any portion of that instrument.

Wonderful! Wonderful! Here is the Republican Party that says the people have a right to amend their own Constitution.

Senators, that is commendable; patriotism in this hour of stress rises to heights that words can not describe.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield, if the Senator will wait until I finish. The mountains of California look like ant hills as compared to the wealth of patriotism piled up in that superb paragraph. But let me go on.

We, therefore, favor the prompt resubmission of the eighteenth amendment to the people of the several States, acting through nonpartisan conventions called for that sole purpose in accordance with the provisions of Article V to determine whether that amendment shall be retained, repealed, or modified.

What could be more complete? "We are in favor of retaining it; we are in favor of repealing it; we are in favor of modifying it; but we want most of all to get the votes of those who think in either one of these three categories."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I just came into the Chamber. I should like to inquire from what the Senator is reading?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am reading from the proposed draft of the conference of yesterday of the prohibition plank in the Republican platform as contained in the New York Times.

Mr. BORAH. Did that plank come from the conference? Mr. TYDINGS. That is what it says; I can not vouch for its authenticity, but the Times is a very reliable newspaper.

Mr. BORAH. Several of those who participated in the conference are here, and I wonder if any of them would own it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish they would.

Mr. BORAH. I would be very happy to find its author. I do not like to fight an abstract proposition nor even to get enthusiastic about an abstract proposition, but I should like to know whether anyone is responsible for that plank? It is the sheerest combination of ambiguity and insincerity that I have seen put out in a good while.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think I could add to that description, because that is exactly what it is. I have searched around in my mind in an effort to find out what could actuate men to draw a plank of this kind, but, being somewhat green in the field of politics, I have been unable to discover the reason motivating those who put this plank into being. I am constrained, however, to offer as a suggestion a song I recall, which has been sung more or less with gusto for some decades, the opening line of which I will quote, and by putting the accent on the first word I think this plank will be described—

Nobody knows how dry I am.

[Laughter.]

There is not a genius walking on two legs beneath God's heaven who could read that plank and tell whether the Republican Party, if it should adopt the plank, stands for the retention of the eighteenth amendment, the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, or the modification of the eighteenth amendment. It is the biggest piece of sham, hypocrisy, bunk, and camouflage that I have ever seen assembled in about 150 words of the English language in any book or pamphlet ever printed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The song would be equally applicable if its words were "Nobody knows how wet I am."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that that is the plank as to which there is an effort moving through both parties to have both parties adopt it in their respective conventions?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is true.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator, but I should be obliged if he would wait until I express a thought which is in my mind.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand that the Senator would favor the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator has any doubt about that, he certainly has not been present in the Chamber during the last six years; but may I ask the Senator what he favors?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I should like first to get an answer to my question. Assuming that the Senator is in favor of repealing the eighteenth amendment, am I right in further assuming that he would prefer that the question be submitted to conventions in the several States rather than to the legislatures of the States?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is all I wish to ask.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to recapitulate. I want to read again paragraph 2 and then paragraph 4. Paragraph 2 says:

We abhor the saloon and are unalterably opposed to its return.

Therefore, it may be assumed that they would not be willing to submit the eighteenth amendment to the States so that the eighteenth amendment could be repealed, and then, if States so desired, permit the saloons to come back, but to prove that they are willing to go that far even in the face of paragraph 2, paragraph 4 says:

We, therefore, favor the prompt resubmission of the eighteenth amendment to the people * * * to determine whether that amendment shall be retained, repealed, or modified.

Mr. President, did you ever see a greater attempt at camouflage, a greater effort to disguise; did you ever see greater hypocrisy and—I use the word measuredly and with no disrespect—more dishonesty? There is not a man in this body who can tell me what that plank stands for.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator in all sincerity does he know of any way to prevent the return of the saloon if nothing but the naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment takes place?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator ever heard of any one proposing a plan which would prohibit the return of the saloon upon the naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have seen plans devised to repeal the eighteenth amendment and to substitute a system in its place which would prevent the return of the saloon as we knew it.

Mr. BORAH. But I am speaking now of the mere naked repeal of the eighteenth amendment without an alternative plan.

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. BORAH. If this question were turned back to the States and left to the States, might not any State that saw fit adopt the saloon system?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in just a moment. Therefore may I say that if they are willing to repeal the eighteenth amendment they are willing for the saloon to come back, although in paragraph 2 they say, "We abhor the return of the saloon."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The States would have their original power to control the subject matter discussed; and, of course, Congress has the power to control interstate commerce, and that power could be exercised by appropriate law. That is the position of the Senator, as I understand.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to delay the discussion of the revenue bill, but here is a question about which everybody in the United States has an opinion. I doubt if you could stop any man on the street out of 10,000 you would meet and ask him, "Where do you stand on prohibition?" without his saying that he is for it, or against it, or he believes it ought to be modified. Yet here are the geniuses, the giants of intellect of the majority party, sitting down in a room all night long, and after their labors they have the sensible men can read it.

Mr. President, it had one purpose only. The purpose of that plank was to make beyond any question a slogan for the next campaign. Referring to the standard-bearer who now sits in the White House, we can all say with truth and in unison, "Nobody knows how dry he is." [Laughter.]

REVENUE AND TAXATION-CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not disposed to delay action at all. I do not like some things in this bill, and some things that I should like to see in it are left out of it; but I presume a majority of the Senate are going to adopt the conference report, as they usually do.

I can not understand the action of the conferees in many respects. What has been said here to-day seems to me entirely sound with respect to the amendment regarding the tax on electrical energy.

I can not understand why the conferees gave up amendment numbered 267, which simply provides that when a tax has been paid by two or more taxpayers on the same income, the department shall be authorized to refund the tax so paid in excess of the amount lawfully due.

I can not conceive that the House conferees objected to that amendment. It was not quite satisfactory to the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the conferees. I suppose; but why should the Senate conferees surrender a proposition like that, so absolutely fair? It is inconceivable to me that there should be any objection to it; but the conferees have eliminated it. It goes out of the

It had been my purpose, and has been all along, to vote to sustain the conference report. I am not quite clear in my mind now whether I can do that or not.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, just a moment before we vote on the conference report.

I am influenced to say just a word because of the speeches that have been made by some of my colleagues, who seem to condemn all the Senate conferees and what they have done about this and that, but particularly about the tax on electrical energy.

Of course, it is not proper to say what happened in conference. So far as I am concerned, as one of the Senate conferées I tried to carry out the wishes of the Senate. But while that was one of the moving purposes with me, I felt that I wanted, and the American people wanted, expenditures and receipts to balance, and that the all-important proposition was, within the rules that guide conferees, to get the revenue that the Budget might be balanced.

When the committee reported out this electrical-energy tax last Friday, I voted with the committee on two roll calls. I voted with the committee on every proposition that came up on the floor of the Senate. I did not like to do it, but I knew that the only way to pass this bill was to stand foursquare with the committee. So I went down the road with them. After the Senate had adopted the Howell amendment, however, I thought we should make a fight for it, and should carry out in general terms its purposes.

But be not deceived, Senators, about this electrical-energy proposition. That is not everything in this bill. That is not the worst tax in this bill. There are a lot of bad taxes here. Not only did we tax light and heat on the consumer, but practically everything in this bill is on the consumer. We tax soap in this bill. We tax the consumer in a thousand other ways.

I want to read what the chairman of the House conferees, Mr. CRISP, said on Saturday when this bill was reported with reference to this particular tax about which so many people condemn the conferees of the Senate, and on account of which some would now hold up and defeat this report. And when I read from this gentleman's remarks in the House I want to say that no man in the country has effrontery to paste up a piece of sophistry like that where acted more patriotically and unselfishly than he in the consideration of this legislation from beginning to end. The country is indebted to him for his fine and unwavering service. I never saw conferees act finer than all the House conferees. They appreciated the emergency of the situation and performed fearlessly and promptly.

Mr. CRISP said:

The House conferees, for the purpose of raising money and for that purpose only, accepted, with a substantial modification, the Senate's amendment to tax electric energy. The Senate provided for a 3 per cent gross tax on public utilities that sold electric energy. The conferees became convinced that that was inequitenergy. The conferees became convinced that that was mediated able; that it would destroy many of the companies; that men, women, and children throughout the United States holding stocks would lose their investment; and and bonds of those companies would lose their investment; and the conferees finally agreed on a 3 per cent sales tax on commercial and domestic consumers of electric energy, to be passed on, the companies to be the collecting agencies for the Government. Statistics before the Ways and Means Committee showed that the average cost to the domestic consumer for electricity was $3 a month. This tax will place a tax of 9 cents per month upon the average household consumer of domestic electricity.

It has been stated in this debate that this proposition was advanced by the House conferees. Even if they did, it was a compromise. Remember, if you please, that when the Secretary of the Treasury first made his recommendations to the House Ways and Means Committee he recommended that $95,000,000 in taxes be raised from electrical energy. and the method was to tax the consumer. The Ways and Means Committee, for which Mr. CRISP is speaking, had extended hearings. They heard witnesses. They spent days over there in studying this proposition; and then it was only in a spirit of compromise that Mr. CRISP offered to the conference this proposition that his own committee had discussed, and around which controversy had raged in the Committee on Ways and Means. It must be said that the Ways and Means Committee had studied the matter.

The Finance Committee never did study the proposition. The administration had recommended the proposal that the conferees adopted; and I submit, as bad as it may be, that there are other items here that are just as bad. If we expect to finish the job which the Senate and the House have so patriotically and untiringly worked to finish—that is, to balance the Budget and raise the necessary money—we ought not to hesitate to-day and hold up this matter longer even though this item may be in the report, and even though some will condemn it.

The conference report should be adopted.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, that is a favorite plea.

In the first place, this bill does not balance the Budget. Nobody can tell whether it comes within a thousand miles of balancing the Budget until the Congress gets through with the bill now being considered by the Senate, reducing expenditures. Nobody knows what is going to happen to that bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. We will have to take into consideration also the fact that we will be collecting on diminishing returns the revenues which are supposed to balance the Budget.

Mr. GLASS. Precisely; but both bills put together will not balance the Budget.

I have no hesitation in voting against this conference report. I voted against the bill itself because I would not be a party to some of the things that have been done to construct the bill. Now, I am going to vote against the conference report with added zest because the conferees have utterly ignored the deliberate and considered action of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I appreciate the pressure which was on the conferees to get a report and to dispose of this subject finally. It is something like the pressure as a result of which the bill passed the Senate, regardless of the fact that there are a great many things in it which perhaps almost every Senator in the Senate would oppose. But, Mr. President, before the bill is disposed of I must say that no sufficient explanation and no sufficient defense has been made of this change with reference to taxing electrical power, and placing the tax upon the consumer instead of upon the company. That was a change of great moment.

It was not necessary to do that in order to balance the Budget. That did not enter into the question of raising more revenue. The amount of revenue which would have been raised under the provision which went from the Senate was the same amount that will be raised under the provision which comes from the conferees. Am I not correct in that, I will ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Not quite, Mr. President. Mr. BORAH. But this says, "to be paid by the person paying for such electrical energy and to be collected by the vendor." The amount to be collected is the same. change the party who is to pay it.

I do not see how that had anything whatever to do with the question of balancing the Budget. I realize, of course, that the question of balancing the Budget was uppermost in the minds of the conferees all the time, and undoubtedly they worked with that great objective in mind; but this had nothing to do with the question of balancing the Budget. It would have been balanced just the same had the companies been allowed to pay this amount instead of the consumers. I think it is an injustice to the consumers, and there has been no valid reason assigned for the change.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Might there not be some conclusion as to whose budget is to be balanced under this provision?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's question implies a suggestion which I think is sound. I am now speaking of the proposition that has been used as a plea for these changes which were made. The changes were not made for the purpose of balancing the Budget. They were made for another reason; and thereby a great injustice, in my opinion, was worked upon the people of this country.

If there is any organization or any corporation which could afford to pay this tax, laid where it was laid, it was the corporations producing electrical power in this country. According to the figures which have been presented, they were receiving an amount of money equal to the amount which they were receiving in the days of prosperity. Their income has not been reduced. Their profits have not been reduced. They were able above all other corporations and companies in the United States to pay this amount. No source could more justly be drawn upon for taxes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that it does not appeal to me, at least, to have one of the House conferees undertake to hide this thing behind the skirts of widows and orphans.

Mr. BORAH. Are the widows and orphans in this matter, also? How many crimes are committeed in their names!

Mr. President, if the Senate conferees had stood by the bill as passed by the Senate, there was at least one Member of the House conferees who was always in favor of receding from the House position. Assuming that the Senate conferees would carry out the instructions of the Senate as evidenced by votes repeatedly taken, there were at least six members of that conference committee who were in favor of the proposition as passed by the Senate.

Mr. RAINEY, speaking in the House, says:

The bill as it passed the Senate with reference to electrical energy contained this clause:

"There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electric-power plants a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold."

The tariff conferees kindly adjusted this tax so that there would be no doubt at all about who was to pay it. Under this clause in the Senate bill, to which, of course, the great power companies objected, they would have been compelled to absorb this tax and could not have increased their price to consumers. could not have increased their price to consumers.

That was from one of the conferees upon the part of the House. Therefore there was no necessity, it seems to me, for the Senate conferees yielding upon the proposition when they had a clear majority of the conference. There was another and more potent reason.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to know why this change was made, if I am to judge by anything which has been said in the Senate in defense of it. I assumed, when I read the amendment in the conference report last Saturday, that there would be given to the Senate some reasons for making this radical change. The committee has changed the entire policy of the bill upon a most fundamental proposition in the bill, and I assumed that there would be given to the Senate at least an attempted argument based upon some facts, real or manufactured, which were brought out in the conference, justifying this change.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. BORAH. I yield.
Mr. SMOOT. I have just secured the estimate of the Treasury Department as to the return under the House provision and under the Senate provision.

Electric energy under the 3 per cent tax on sales for domestic and commercial purposes, as the conferees finally agreed, will return about $39,000,000 in revenue, and as the bill passed the Senate the revenue estimate was $50,000,000, or there will be $11,000,000 less revenue collected under the conference report, according to the estimate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has misunderstood, I think, my contention. I am asking why it was necessary to transfer from the corporations, who would pay the tax under the bill as it passed the Senate, to the consumers of the country, who the Senate voted should not pay the tax. That would not change the amount collected. It does not change the amount to say that the consumers shall pay the tax instead of the corporations.

Mr. SMOOT. One estimate is based on what the consumer would pay for his current and the other is upon the cost to the producer, and it is estimated there would be a difference in revenue of $11,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senate conferees, by reason of the fact that we would collect $11,000,000 more, were willing to transfer the incidence of this tax from the corporations to the consumers? Was that why the transfer was made?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that. The Senator asked me the difference and I have stated the difference. I have already stated that the House conferees proposed the change, and we discussed it, as the Senator from Mississippi has already said, and came to an agreement on it, as reported here to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask what reason was assigned by the House conferees for insisting upon this change? Is it permissible to tell that?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think I ought to say just what the House conferees had to say in relation to it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber or not, but the Senator from Mississippi pointed out that it was because of the effect upon the investments of widows and orphans in these power companies that they transferred the cost from the power companies to the consumers. I think the Senator from Mississippi read that as a part of a statement made by Mr. CRISP.

Mr. HARRISON. I was merely reading from the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia on the floor of the House.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, that was not the argument made in the committee of conference. That is the excuse, the explanation that is being made at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In that event, the widows and orphans would have to pay for the current just the same. so that it seems to me it is a poor excuse.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not only the widows and orphans, it is everybody who uses the electricity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Precisely.

Mr. SMOOT. So when the Senator says the widows and orphans will have to pay it, he does not mean that, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood that was what the Senator from Mississippi was alleged to have said.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Mississippi did not say that. The Senator was quoting what Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, said upon the floor of the House. I read from the Record. I did not use that argument.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Mississippi does not accept that argument, I am sure.

Mr. HARRISON. No; in the conference I tried to carry out the Senate's wishes in this matter. I think that the consumers will pay the bill whether we put it on gross receipts or profits or what not.

Mr. BORAH. How interesting it would be to know who it was in the conference committee who did not try to carry out the Senate's instructions and why.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho has been on conferences enough to know that neither House can have its own way. The same may be said of the Senator from Nebraska. I have known of conferences of which he was a member when there have been compromises. No tax bill, no revenue bill of any kind, no tariff bill has ever been passed when there have not been compromises between the two Houses in conference, and that will be true as long as the two Houses act upon legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not complain of that practice or that principle. I am trying to find, however, why it was that the Senate conferees felt under the necessity of yielding on this proposition, what the argument was, in view of the fact that one of the members of the House conference committee was in favor of the Senate proposal.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I have been on many conferences, and I say now that I have never known the House conferees to agree to a proposition which had been adversely voted on in the House without taking it back to the House for instructions.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, if it were not for the exigency which confronts us, and the situation with which we have to deal, this matter would undoubtedly go back to the conferees. It is glaringly unjust; it is indefensible. But as it is, we recognize the fact that we are not really getting an opportunity to pass upon the merits of the report. We are influenced by the necessity of getting the bill out of the way and supposedly balancing the Budget.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The Senator from Idaho asked what seemed to me to be a perfectly reasonable question a moment ago, seeking the reasons advanced in the conference for transferring this burden from the power companies to the backs of the consumers; and I understood the Senator from Utah to say that he could not very well divulge anything which took place in the conference.

Certainly the Senate, which overwhelmingly adopted the view which the amendment expressed and which was overturned so lightly, has the right to know why it was overturned, and some one on this floor ought to be able to give that explanation without violating any particular confidence. It seems to me it is not only the business of the Senate to know but that it is the business of the American people to know.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think it all comes down to the proposition and is an illustration of the well-known rule that when an able gentleman knows what he wants he usually controls the body of men with whom he is associated.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator was absent from the Chamber when the Senator from Mississippi read Mr. Crisp's remarks upon the floor. There is no privilege concerning them, of course, because they were made upon the floor of the House, and they apparently state the reason for the action that was taken in reference to electrical energy. May I recall it to the Senator?

Mr. BORAH. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. He said:

The House conferees, for the purpose of raising money and for that purpose only, accepted, with a substantial modification, the Senate's amendment to tax electric energy. The Senate provided for a 3 per cent gross tax on public utilities that sold electric energy. The conferees became convinced that that was inequitable; that it would destroy many of the companies; that men, women, and children throughout the United States holding stocks and bonds of those companies would lose their investment; and the conferees finally agreed on a 3 per cent sales tax on commercial and domestic consumers of electric energy, to be passed on, the companies to be the collecting agencies for the Government.

If that is not a statement of the reason for the action of the conferees, I am unable to read the language with any degree of intelligence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is a very clear statement upon the part of the able Representative from Georgia, and I am wondering whether that is the argument which finally brought the conferees to an agreement upon this matter.

For myself, I do not think that was the controlling proposition. The able senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], undoubtedly convinced of the correctness of his position, has been from the beginning in favor of passing the tax on to the consumer. He had his reasons and, undoubtedly, in the conference committee he advanced them with the same zealousness and the same ability that he displayed here.

I think that another reason for passing the tax on to the consumer than that of taking care of the situation as indicated by Mr. Crisp, was present and controlling.

Mr. President, I do not care so much about the breach in parliamentary law, although that is important. But I do care about the signal injustice of this change. It is another illustration of how this body protects the strong and burdens the weak. These companies, some of which are gathering wealth in the midst of a national depression, are excepted from carrying a just portion of the national burden, while the poorest person who would have a light in his shop or his home is made to pay. Such a proposition could only get a hearing in the secret sessions of the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GLASS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, before the roll is called, may I direct a question or two to the chairman of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah give his attention?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Doubtless the dominant phrase throughout the discussion of the revenue bill has been "balance the Budget." Will the chairman of the committee on Finance be good enough to advise how much money the pending bill is supposed to raise in order to balance the Budget?

Mr. SMOOT. In round numbers it is supposed that the bill will raise $1,118,500,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is my understanding that the amount specified by the Senator from Utah is the increased amount above ordinary revenue which is expected to be raised. My question is now directed to the total amount which must be raised to balance the Budget.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be $2,370,000,000 in round numbers from internal-revenue taxes alone after adding to the present yield the expected yield from the new taxes and from the changes made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What is the total amount which must be raised in order to equalize Government expenditures?

Mr. SMOOT. No human being can tell that. The only thing we can do is to estimate what business is going to be in the future.

Title I. Income tax:

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, the question whether | the Budget is to be balanced is undetermined?

Mr. SMOOT. Undetermined, for nobody can say definitely the exact amount that will balance the Budget, but all the estimates made by the Treasury Department, on which we have to rely, with the action taken with this and other legislation, this will balance the Budget, in the estimation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For the information of the country, may I ask that there be incorporated in the RECORD first the total yield of revenues to be expected under the conference report?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want a summary of the

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask first the estimated yield of revenue under the conference report?

Mr. SMOOT. That is $1,118,500,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. As before stated, it is my understanding that the specified sum is the estimated increase, not the total amount to be raised.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct, if I understand your

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is not a total of approximately $2,630, 000,000 now estimated as the amount to be raised in the coming fiscal year?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not quite understand the Senator. Does the Senator mean that there is going to be a deficit of $2,630,000,000?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not at all. My understanding is that the figure the chairman of the committee has given merely represents the estimated increased amount of taxes now expected over and above this year's revenues.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Senator. The amount I have quoted here, $1,118,500,000, is to be raised by the pending bill in addition to what we would receive under existing law if no changes were made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In what fashion are the additional revenues to be raised?

Mr. SMOOT. The total revenue which would be raised under existing law by internal-revenue taxes is approximately $1,250,000,000; the changes made by the pending bill will result in $1,118,500,000 additional, making a grand total of some $2,368,000,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In other words, certain revenues are accruing to the Government under the existing revenue law?

Mr. COSTIGAN. What amount accrues to the Government under existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. About $1,250,000,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. To that how much is being added by the present bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The amount is $1,118,500,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. How much is to be raised by the income tax according to the estimates of the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. With the increases-I suppose the Senator wants that as well as what is carried in the bill-it would be approximately $1,035,000,000, including back-tax collec-

Mr. COSTIGAN. Approximately $1,035,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Approximately.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The tobacco tax is approximately how much?

Mr. SMOOT. Say $400,000,000. Mr. COSTIGAN. Included in the figures given by the Senator from Utah will not be found the customs and miscellaneous revenues of Government?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the Senator the figures for those so they may be incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate that was made last February, I am informed by the representative of the joint committee, is $430,000,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, approving to-day's criticisms of the conference committee in regard to the tax on electricity, I wish merely to add that the extraordinary burden of taxes just mentioned is being placed upon the taxpayers of the country in the darkest period of our economic history.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It should be remembered by the people of the country that it would have been possible and far more reasonable, instead of following literally the recently invented slogan about "balancing the Budget," to have undertaken to balance the Budget, let us say, in two years or some other moderately extended period rather than in one

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it is just as well to provide it in one year because we do not know what will happen in the second year. No human being can tell. Conditions may be a great deal better and may be a lot worse.

Mr. President, I ask that the items agreed on in conference may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, whether or not the conference report should be denied and the bill be sent back to conference rests, of course, with each individual upon the floor and with his conscientious belief as to what should be done with particular items that he deems of supreme importance.

I read a little while ago the remarks of Mr. Crisp which had been read by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] merely that they might be reimpressed, if it were possible, upon the Senate. I read them because, purporting to state the reasons for the action of the conferees upon the particular item relating to electric energy, they presented—and I say this not in a spirit of criticism of Mr. Crisp or anybody else—the threadbare statement that ever is made when the Government comes to deal with a great public utility. I read them because it seemed to me a sort of acme of irony to state that a tax could not be levied upon these great public utilities because of the harm that would be done the men, the women, the children, the widows, the orphans, and the like who hold public-utility securities.

Ever since I have been in public life I have heard that argument advanced whenever an endeavor was made to have a public utility do justice unto its people. When one speaks of the harm that may be done to men and women and children and widows and orphans and penniless individuals generally throughout the land who hold the securities of the great public utilities by putting a tax upon the public utilities and then it is put upon these individuals themselves, I confess to a bit of peculiar mental strabismus that seldom comes to me in this life or in this particular activity.

So we may take it, I think, as to the alteration made in what was passed by the Senate in relation to electric energy and the tax upon it, that the reasons for rejecting what the Senate did are adequately expressed and of course honestly expressed, that the change was made by the conferees because of the harm and the injury and the wrong that would be done to the poor who held the securities in great value of the big public-utility corporations of the land. So in order that we may not do that awful incalculable injustice to men and women and children and widows and orphans and the poor who held these securities of the mighty public utilities, we are going to say by our action, after we voted otherwise upon it in the Senate, that we will now put the tax upon those very people.

It is rather a difficult thing for me to understand, I confess. But I rose merely because I feared there might be some misunderstanding of why I read the reason that had been given upon the floor of the House for this particular matter, and in order that my fellows as well as myself might understand that if we do not put this tax upon the consumers, if we take it away from the great public-utility corporations and relieve them of its payments, the widows and orphans throughout the land will weep their tears over the enormous amount of securities which they hold in the great public utilities, and I want my brethren to know the awful incalculable harm that will be done to the poor who hold in such large amounts the great public-utility securities.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to state briefly why I shall vote against the conference report. I voted for several items in the tax measure that I did not like because of the necessity that we were told existed for balancing the Budget. I did not agree with some of the arguments for that necessity, but I voted for the bill. It seems to me on the particular item of electric energy the action of our conferees was unfair, unjust, undemocratic, so much so that any Member of the Senate who believes in majority rule, who believes a majority of the Senate should dictate to the conferees, instruct the conferees, might well feel justified in voting against the conference report. It seems to me it is so unfair that we can not logically support it.

If the conference report is rejected, there is no question that the House vote by which the report was adopted will be reconsidered. The House is as anxious to pass this measure as is the Senate; so that argument, it seems to me, falls flat entirely.

I wanted to make this short statement as to why I shall vote against the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Waterman], and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLENN. I find that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. I make that transfer and will vote. I vote "yea." The Senator from Ohio, if present, would also vote "yea."

Mr. NORBECK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard]. If he were present, he would vote for the adoption of the conference report; and, if permitted to vote, I should vote against its adoption.

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague [Mr. Copeland] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Iowa would vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily detained in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the necessary absence from the city of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens], and the junior Senator | from Louisiana [Mr. Long].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 35, as follows:

Mr. BLACK subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to have the RECORD show that had I been present when the vote was taken on the adoption of the conference report upon the revenue bill I would have voted "nay."

So the report was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Conference of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America, in session at Washington, D. C., favoring the making of an appropriation to aid in rural sanitation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Tri-Cities Central Labor Union, Sheffield, Ala., praying for relief of agriculture and the unemployed, the passage of legislation for the completion and full operation of the Muscle Shoals plant, and also legislation which will tend to stabilize prices, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the directors of the Waukegan-North Chicago Chamber of Commerce, Waukegan, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation providing a bond issue up to $5,000,000,000, the proceeds thereof to be used to finance construction projects, so as to furnish employment and aid industry, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a paper bearing the printed name of Bruce L. Keenan, Tahlequah, Okla., relative to a plan for the inauguration of a State dispensary system and at the same time inhibiting the return of the old-time saloon, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the board of commissioners of Cook County, Ill., favoring the reduction of taxes and retrenchment in governmental expenditures, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the Maryland State and District of Columbia Federation of Labor, at Cumberland, Md., approving the theory of limiting navies by international agreement and also favoring the maintenance of the strength of the United States Navy for national defense to the full treaty limits, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of administration of the Department of the District of Columbia, United Spanish War Veterans, Washington, D. C., favoring the elimination from pending legislation of provisions affecting veterans with the exception of the pro- ufacturing Co., of Forestville, all in the State of Connecticut, vision creating a joint congressional committee to formulate a veterans' policy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by General Nelson A. Miles Camp, No. 1, department of the District of Columbia, United Spanish War Veterans, protesting against any radical change of policy affecting veterans' legislation in the legislative appropriation bill, and known as the economy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of transmittal from the secretary to Mr. George Wood Bacon, of New York City, N. Y., inclosing copy of a letter addressed by him to Hon. ROBERT L. BACON, House of Representatives, relative to pending tax and retrenchment legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the councils of the cities of Effingham and Hazel Crest, Ill., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing a substantial bond issue, the proceeds thereof to be used to aid municipalities in financing public improvement projects so as to furnish employment and aid industry, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of New Jersey, protesting against inclusion in House bill 10236, the revenue bill of a tax on gasoline, which was ordered to lie on the table. (See resolution printed in full when presented to-day by Mr. KEAN.)

Mr. BLAINE presented a resolution adopted by the county board of supervisors, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the passage of legislation authorizing a $5,000,000,000-bond issue to finance a nation-wide public-works program, so as to provide employment, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WALCOTT presented a resolution adopted by the Protestant Ministers' Association, of Meriden, Conn., favoring the retention and enforcement of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented papers, in the nature of petitions, from the Mothers' Club and the Philathea Class of the South Park Methodist Episcopal Church, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the regulation of the motion-picture industry, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from William McKinley Auxiliary, No. 9, U. S. W. V., of Norwalk, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Gasque-Robinson bill, providing relief for veterans' widows and dependents, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented letters in the nature of memorials from Electa Chapter, No. 12, Order of the Eastern Star, of Thomaston; the Connecticut Paint Salesmen's Club, New Haven; Eureka Lodge, No. 75, I. O. O. F., of Plantsville; and the board of directors of the Family Welfare Society, of Stamford, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Oddie bill, being the bill (S. 4080) to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the memorial of Local No. 38, Bakery and Confectionery Workers International Union of America, of Bridgeport, Conn., remonstrating against reduction in the pay or changes in the hours of labor of postal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Ladies' Auxiliary to H. F. Emmett Post, No. 994, and the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Hartford District Council, both of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, in the State of Connecticut. remonstrating against the passage of legislation reducing the compensation or pensions of widows and orphans of all wars, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from the Chambers of Commerce of Meriden and Middletown, the Riverside Association, and employees of the Humason Manthe balancing of the Budget, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kingman and vicinity, in the State of Arizona, remonstrating against the passage of legislation to relieve the owners of unpatented mining claims from performing their annual assessment work on such claims, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from Agnes Mae Bedwell, secretary and treasurer executive board Chin Lee Federal Employees, dated at Gallup, N. Mex., remonstrating against the reduction in compensation of Federal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from Mrs. Robert Wankowski, of Venice, Calif., remonstrating against inclusion of veterans' provisions in the legislative appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the

He also presented a telegram from Leonard C. Brown, deputy commissioner, etc., dated Chicago, Ill., June 5, 1932, relative to certain consolidation of bureaus in connection with the pending legislative appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a petition, signed by Major McLane, Phoenix, Ariz., stating, "Reserve officers strongly urge retention 2,000 Army officers," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented telegrams, in the nature of memorials, from H. W. Fowzer, Orval Jordan, Mary Ebniger, and Margaret Wiget, all of Los Angeles, Calif., remonstrating against inclusion in the pending legislative appropriation bill of the so-called pauper clause relating to veterans, which were ordered to lie on the table.

GASOLINE TAXES

Mr. KEAN presented a resolution adopted by the Senate of New Jersey, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE OF NEW JERSEY, State House, Trenton, N. J.

Resolution adopted by the senate on June 1, 1932

Whereas news has just reached the Senate of New Jersey that the Senate of the United States has passed a revenue bill which, among other things, imposes a tax of 1 cent per gallon upon gasoline; and

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a resolution adopted by the Northern California Branch of the League of Nations Association, signed by Mrs. John Wesley Hamilton, also a letter signed by Rev. F. M. Larkin, executive secretary of the California State Church Federation, of Los Angeles, urging the Senate to ratify the protocols providing for adherence by the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign praying for retrenchment in governmental expenditures and | Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS ASSOCIATION, NORTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH, San Francisco, Calif., March 28, 1932.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: The Northern California Branch of the League of Nations Association has on several occasions informed you of its unqualified approval of the World Court protocols which provide for American adherence to the World Court.

Will you kindly insert in the Congressional Record the following resolution which has been unanimously approved by the members of the northern California branch of the association:

"The Northern California Branch of the League of Nations Association respectfully urges the Senate of the United States to ratify the protocols providing for the adherence by the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice."

Very sincerely.

Very sincerely,

CAMILLE LOYALL HAMILTON, Secretary.

CALIFORNIA STATE CHURCH FEDERATION, Los Angeles, Calif., March 31, 1932.

Senator Samuel M. Shortridge,

Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The California State Church Federation, representing 80 per cent of the Protestant church members in the State, has again and again taken strong action in reference to world peace, and recommends that all churches cooperate in the promotion of the World Court. We trust that you will put, therefore, every effort to pass this during this session of Congress and to insert this in the Congressional Record.

Very cordially yours,

REPORT OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. AUSTIN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7238) to amend section 5 of the suits in admiralty act, approved March 9, 1920, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 771) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, June 6, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 6. An act for the relief of the Union Ferry Co., owners of the ferryboat Montauk:

S. 326. An act for the relief of Abram G. O'Bleness; and S. 2436. An act for the relief of Alfred G. Simmons, jr.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. METCALF, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Perry W. Reeves to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education (representative of labor).

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. SCHALL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Sterling D. Bennett, of Texas, to be United States attorney, eastern district of Texas.

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Henry C. W. Lauberheimer, of Illinois, to be United States marshal, northern district of Illinois;

Carlos A. Imperial, of the Philippine Islands, vice Norberto Romualdez, resigned, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands; and George C. Butte, of Texas, vice E. Finley Johnson, resigned, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 4825) to enroll on the citizenship rolls certain persons of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4826) for the relief of A. M. Dickey; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4827) for the relief of Patrick Reilly; and

A bill (S. 4828) to grant allowances for quarters and subsistence to retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps while in Army or Navy hospitals; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 4829) to authorize the presentation of a distinguished-service cross to Ralph Ellsworth Ladue; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4830) granting the consent of Congress to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y.; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 4831) directing that copies of certain patent specifications and drawings be supplied to the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox, and Tilden Foundations, of New York City, at the regular annual rate; to the Committee on Patents.

A bill (S. 4832) granting a pension to Mrs. Henry William Daly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ODDIE:

A bill (S. 4833) to reduce construction charges on certain lands within the Newlands reclamation project, Nevada; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4834) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4835) to provide for the conveyance of the abandoned lighthouse reservation and buildings, including detached tower, situate within the city limits of Erie, Pa., to the city for public-park purposes; to the Committee on Commerce

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 4836) granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. Bowman (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4837) granting an increase of pension to Matilda Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

LOANS TO STATES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4632) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to States and municipalities, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF-ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is my purpose to make a brief statement and to submit a request for unanimous consent. The attention of all Senators is invited

A number of bills intended for the relief of unemployment is pending in both Houses. There is somewhat general consensus of opinion that an emergency relief measure having regard to the relief of destitution should be promptly acted upon. Since it seems likely that differences of opinion may arise with respect to any construction program that may be taken up by the Senate, and since it also appears that there is both desirability and need for setting at rest as soon as practicable the question as to whether the Congress at this session will adopt a measure of emergency relief, I desire to point out the fact that since the 29th day of February last there has been pending on the calendar Senate bill 3696, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], a bill to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for

If this bill should be taken up under the arrangement I am about to propose, the author of the bill, the Senator from New York, will himself propose amendments that will limit the subject matter to emergency relief or provision for destitution, reduce the amount of the appropriation carried in the bill from $375,000,000 to $300,000,000, and propose the incorporation of those features of a more general relief measure under consideration by the Committee on Banking and Currency having relation to the subject of emergency relief.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that after the bill now under consideration, the so-called economy bill, shall have been disposed of, the unfinished business, the Glass bill, may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3696, having in mind the amendments and purposes already stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Couzens in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I should like to hear the request of the Senator from Arkansas. My attention was distracted by a number of Senators. Will the Senator from Arkansas again kindly state his request?

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator please state the calendar number of the bill to which he refers?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The calendar number is 366, and the number of the bill is S. 3696, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner]. Reference to the bill will be found at the bottom of the first page of the calendar.

Mr. MOSES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, my primary reason for suggesting that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill referred to is that it is on the calendar, and that the action proposed will not require the discharge of any committee of the Senate in order to bring the subject matter of the bill before the Senate.

I have already stated, and will repeat for the benefit of the Senator from Indiana, that, if consent is given as requested, it is expected that the author of the bill himself, the Senator from New York, will propose amendments limiting the provisions of the bill to the one subject matter, namely, relief of destitution, and reducing the amount carried in the bill for that purpose from $375,000,000 to $300,000,000. The object manifestly of the proposal is to secure prompt action on this phase of legislation about which there seems to be a somewhat general consensus of opinion as to the necessity.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the Senator to ask unanimous consent to take up now the bill to which he

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No. My request is that after the pending bill, the so-called economy bill, shall have been disposed of, the unfinished business, which is the Glass bill, may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate then proceed to the consideration of the measure to which I have referred.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I think there has been general consensus of opinion that legislation of the character referred to by the Senator from Arkansas must be enacted before the Senate adjourns. I think, perhaps, we are approaching an agreement, so that there is not now the difference that once existed between advocates of different ideas of relief. I know that the other day, when the Secretary of the Treasury came before the Banking and Currency Committee, his first statement was, "I accept three-fourths of the propositions proposed by the Senator from New York." The debate then proceeded upon the other fourth or fifth, as we might fractionize it.

Under the existing conditions, and because a number of Senators have requested me to do so, I think I shall object to unanimous consent now, trusting that we may be able to make some sort of a compromise agreement before we finally come to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that the proposal which I have made, the one to which he has objected, eliminates in large part the controverted questions arising out of the bill introduced by a special committee of five, including the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], and that the object of my motion is to make certain that the matter of emergency relief may be acted upon promptly.

It is not conceivable to me that any agreement would be | reached that would eliminate the possibility of amendments in the Senate, and I believe that if the proposal is confined for the present to $300,000,000 for destitution, with the amendments to which I have already referred and such other amendments as the Senate may find it desirable to propose or incorporate, the bill can be disposed of within a very few hours.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator for an observation; but I want to conclude.

Mr. MOSES. I desire to observe to the Senator from Arkansas that in preferring his request for unanimous consent he spoke of certain amendments which were to be offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is the author of the measure. The only amendment which the Senator from Arkansas specified was the amendment reducing the total appropriation from $375,000,000 to $300,-000,000, but he said that there were other amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; the Senator is entirely mistaken. If he had done me the honor to comply with the request I made in the beginning of my statement, he would know that I said that the amendments referred to which it is expected will be proposed by the Senator from New York will limit the bill to emergency relief, and that other amendments will be designed to make the bill conform to the provisions of the measure introduced by the committee of five, which includes the Senator from New York, the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Ohio, and myself.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator from Indiana will permit me further, I probably expressed myself badly. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to have said exactly what he now states. Therefore I wanted to observe that probably, in view of the attitude taken by the Senator from Indiana, the best way of proceeding would be for the Senator from New York now to offer his amendments and have them printed, so that we might know what is involved in granting the unanimous-consent request preferred by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no objection, of course, to that course.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

Mr. WATSON. Which I was about to suggest.

Let me say this to the Senator: I had understood that there was an effort to make some sort of an arrangement by which $300,000,000, the sum proposed by the Senator from New York, might be segregated to be lent to the States, the States to deal with it as they deemed best-

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me-because there have been very strenuous objections raised to lending money directly to municipalities and cities. and the $300,000,000 might be set aside to be lent to States. Now, the Senator from Arkansas did not state what the Senator from New York will state for the information of the Senate and what the Senator from Arkansas would have stated had he been interrogated. Does this involve the issuance of five hundred or three hundred million dollars of bonds, or any other hundreds of millions of bonds, for the construction of public works?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; none whatever.

Mr. WAGNER. May I answer the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. May I answer the Senator? I thought I made it plain; and if I have not found language that will reach the understanding of the Senator from Indiana. I will try to do so.

Mr. WATSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator will have to make it very plain.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendments which it is expected will be proposed will authorize $300,000,000 through an expansion of credit on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and my request for unanimous consent eliminates all controversial matters relating to programs of construction which many of us realize can not be quickly worked out and which might very well be separated from this question of immediate relief.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Senator. That does clarify the situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Nevada. Mr. PITTMAN. I think we should not confuse two bills. One bill is pending before the Banking and Currency Committee which deals with relief in various forms. As the Senator has said, the Secretary of the Treasury does the authors of the bill the honor to approve three-fourths of it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a second, please.

The bill that we are now considering under the unanimous-consent request is an entirely different bill which was reported by the Manufactures Committee favorably about three months ago. It evolved from a contest that took place on the floor of the Senate. It was the outcome of the Costigan-La Follette bill and a substitute that was offered on this side of the Chamber.

While a majority of the Senate favored the purpose, they were divided. Eventually, the Wagner bill, which we are talking about, a compromise measure, was reported favorably. It embraces just two things. One of them is $375,-000,000 to be loaned to the States where they ask for it in a proper way, in proportion to population, on certification of the Government; and the other is the proposition of $375,000,000 for Federal aid in road construction.

It is proposed to strike out that portion of the bill dealing with road construction, which leaves nothing on earth in the bill except $375,000,000 available to be loaned through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to States on proper certification. The further amendment will be to reduce the amount of $375,000,000 to $300,000,000; and then it would seem to come within the accord not only of the administration but of everyone else who has spoken on this subject. Therefore, I should appeal to the Senator from Indiana, the leader on the other side, to withhold his objection at least until he understands the question. I think possibly now that he does understand it.

The President this morning has appealed to the country and appealed to the conscience and sentiment of the people of the country to make available $300,000,000. Here is a bill that has been reported by a committee after due consideration, after a vote in this body, after the sentiment was tested, when we know that a majority is in favor of the bill as it was. Here is a proposal of the Democratic leader to limit this proposition purely and simply to $300,000,000, to be loaned through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and leave all the other questions out of it. If you want that you can get it, and you can get it now.

Mr. WATSON. Oh, not right now. Mr. PITTMAN. You can get it immediately after this bill passes, unless you object.

Mr. WALCOTT, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. WAGNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. WATSON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], who tells me that he desires to ask the Senator from New York a question, if the Chair will permit

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator had better yield the floor until the other Senators get through discussing the matter.

Mr. WATSON. I will yield the floor, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York or the Senator from Arkansas if, in speaking of the amendments to this bill, they include an amendment to clarify the language that was under discussion last week with reference to the relation between the Federal Government and the State governments. I understand clearly what the Senator from Arkansas said, that the portion of the bill referring to loans to States for charitable purposes is taken.

Mr. WAGNER. Destitution.

Mr. WALCOTT. Destitution. In our discussions, as the Senator recalls, there was an element of discussion as to the language, whether it created a partnership relation between the Federal Government and the State governments.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator's recollection is a little inaccurate as to that. That discussion took place in discussing the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey which had to do with self-liquidating projects, which I contended, as the bill had been drawn, created a partner-ship between the Federal Government and the State governments or some subdivision thereof.

That discussion did not relate to the matter which we now have under consideration. I want to appeal, if I may, to the distinguished leader on the other side to grant this unanimous consent, because, as I understand, in all quarters there is practical unanimity that we must make this provision to take care of the needy cases in States which are unable, or soon will be unable, to cope further with the situation; and, as the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Nevada have so clearly explained, this has no relation whatever to the construction program about which there is some controversy now. We are separating the matters upon which there is practical unanimity from the controversial matters.

Mr. President, what I intended to do was now to ask that I may send to the desk the amendment which I propose to offer to the bill now upon the calendar, which can be printed over night, so that all the Senators will have an opportunity to examine its provisions. It is very simple in wording and application.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I have talked this matter over at considerable length with the Senator from New York. I feel that what he is doing now is something that would meet with the unanimous approval of this side of the Chamber so far as I can see, and exactly what the Secretary of the Treasury wants; but, inasmuch as it is a little technical, and as it requires exact language, I suggest to the Senator from New York that he let this request for unanimous consent go over until we have seen the amendment, because the wording is important.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator yield to ne?

Mr. WALCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator will pardon me, as I said in my statement preceding the request for unanimous consent, it does not seem to me either practicable or necessary for a few of us to undertake to agree on the exact language to go in this bill; and if we did so, the Senate probably would exercise its right to revise the language, and we would have accomplished nothing by undertaking to work out the details which the Senator has in mind.

My thought is that if we can agree upon the general proposition that we are going to abate controversies about disputed matters and proceed promptly to legislate upon the one phase of the subject about which there are only minor disputes, we should do so at once, and that we ought to do it without great difficulty.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WALCOTT. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I just wanted to say to the Senator that I do not know what technical language the Senator has in mind; but as the Senator from Arkansas has so clearly stated as to language, or even as to policy, we can easily enough consider it when the matter is before the Senate. Perhaps some amendment may be made. Perhaps there may be differences of opinion as to how the money is to be apportioned, but those matters will not be up for consideration until the bill is before us, and those of us who are interested—and I hope the Senators on the other side are as much interested as we are—think this consent ought to be given, so that we might bring this bill up for consideration at the earliest possible day. Any action to the contrary I should think might be misinterpreted by the country as being for the purpose of delaying consideration of this very important piece of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from New York very properly assumed that I would not interpose any objection to a unanimous-consent agreement which would involve obstruction to the emergency legislation for the relief of the destitute, although neither of them conferred with me about the proposition to lay aside the bank bill.

I rise now only to say that I am not willing by my silence to have it implied that I have at all abated my conviction that unless the bank bill is passed at the present session of the Congress we are going to have in this country another era of bank failures which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not be able to avert or even to arrest.

I shall interpose no objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I want the Senate to know that the bill introduced by the five Senators, the Senator from New York and the Senator from Arkansas among them, is before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and has been for several days. Several sessions have been held on the bill, the committee wrestling with it, some hearings have been held, and I agreed with the Senator from New York an hour or two ago to call a meeting for tomorrow morning to proceed with that measure, which includes, among other items, the one just under discussion.

That is not the question now, however. I do not care how that matter is taken care of. The committee can be relieved of further consideration of the bill without any objection on my part. But my attention is called to the fact that the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, which bill passed the Senate a couple of months ago, and on which the conferees agreed some six or seven weeks ago, is on the table. That report occupies a privileged status, and there is great need of adopting it soon, as there are emergency measures in the bill. I just want to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether in asking unanimous consent, he will not change the request so as to take up the conference report on the agricultural bill first, and then the relief measure? It is a privileged matter, anyway.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, we can not do that, for the reason that it will be necessary to apply the same cuts to the agricultural appropriation bill that have been applied to the other bills. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] has held that bill up for the purpose of seeing what is done with the economy bill. Of course, I will be very happy to have the bill taken up as soon as the economy bill is passed, and we know what we are going to do.

Mr. NORBECK. It is proposed to take up the relief bill after the economy bill is disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from South Dakota that the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill will have a privileged status, and I should think he could call that up at almost any time he desired and was ready to do so.

I would not like to modify the request so as to require the emergency relief bill to come behind the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, for the reason that we do not know when that report will be ready. My whole thought is that we ought to get this emergency proposition disposed of, and that we can do it in a very few hours.

The Senator from Connecticut has indicated some possible controversy which may arise with respect to the language in the bill, and with the exception of one or two features I do not think there will be very much controversy over the bill. So that if we can take it up we can dispose of it, then when the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill is ready we can act upon that.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield. Mr. COUZENS. I have had very great interest in the problem, as the Senator from New York has, and it has been before the Committee on Banking and Currency a number of times. I have had no opportunity to study the bill, and I am waiting for some information, so for the time being I will have to object. Perhaps later in the day, or to-morrow morning, I may not object; but for the time being I am going to have to object to any agreement to take up the bill referred to by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I recognize that if the Senator from Michigan makes the objection he has intimated he is going to make, that will prevent an arrangement being entered into. I will renew the request in the morning if the opportunity shall arise.

Mr. JONES obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I just wanted to make a suggestion. We have been spending all this time on the conference report on the tax bill, and the Senator from Arkansas has asked unanimous consent regarding the emergency relief bill. I trust we may go ahead without further delay with the legislative appropriation bill, and I have no doubt that when that is out of the way unanimous consent will be given to take up the other measure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the economy bill has been before the Senate for several days. The Senate has consumed whole days in discussing a single amendment. The proposal I have made has consumed perhaps 5 or 10 minutes, and it is in the interest of dispatching legislation and of making possible an adjournment of the Congress in the early future.

I do not think the Senator from Washington is justified in making the remarks he has made about the delay which this proposal for unanimous consent has caused with respect to the economy bill. What assurance has the Senator from Washington that the Senate will not continue to do what it has been doing for several days?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I can not assure the Senator of what the Senate will do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator can, of course, object to a unanimous consent which has for its purpose the prompt passage of an emergency relief measure.

Mr. JONES. The Senator knows I did not object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; but the Senator has rather resented the idea that the proposal is made.

Mr. JONES. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He has seemed to think that it has caused some delay in the business of the Senate.

Go on and pass the economy bill. The quicker it is done the greater will be my satisfaction and the greater will be the relief of the entire country.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will not take more time in discussing that Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. As the author of one of the unemployment relief bills, I would like to say, without intending to interfere in any way with the discussion, that in principle I am whole-heartedly in accord with the Senator from Arkansas and approve what he said. I shall myself be very glad to see the request for unanimous consent renewed, if that is possible, for I know exactly what the Senator means, and I am sure I know exactly what the Senator from New York means. As one on this side of the aisle perhaps more interested than any other Senator, I want to make it clear that I would like to see accomplished exactly what the Senator from Arkansas is striving to bring about.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES. I was about to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LEWIS. I enter here a thought which I think I ought to put into expression.

I am one of those with whom the President of the United States conferred touching the matter of these bills for relief to the States. I am one of the five Senators, I assume. to whom the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck] has alluded.

Mr. President, it is due to be said that when the President had that conference, particularly with me-and I am sure it was the same with my colleagues, at some other time, either later, or possibly preceding me-there was something of an understanding, which honor can, I think, add its color to, that there should be no other feature of these relief bills esteemed to have been consented to by the President other than the single one of the power to be conferred upon the board of relief, privileging them to extend loans to the States, and it is upon the theory that the States then would distribute this benefaction to such localities or associations or aggregations of the States as the necessity justified.

I was authorized to communicate these views to the leader of the Democracy on this side, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], and opportunity had not been given me to do so. It is apparent to me that he had the advice directly and it now seems it would have been unnecessary for me to speak of the matter to him. But I can not permit those who are interested in the bill to go farther on the theory that the unanimous consent may be granted in the morning, and that unanimous consent to take up all the features, when something of an honor agreement had been made that the President gave his adherence to the single feature of this $300,000,000 as a loan to be granted through this corporation of relief to the States.

In this connection I beg the indulgence of the Senate a second; no longer time will I presume to take, nor is it necessary to take. I refer to the very pathetic and threatening condition of the State of Illinois, with its great mass of unemployed, its countless thousands of hungry, the distress of those without habitation—that condition, sir, which has been caused by the vast mass of people, who are not altogether of Illinois, but having come from the East toward the center, from the Pacific coast toward the center, happen to find themselves in the great city of Chicago, but for whom care must quickly be had lest, in their great and dire distress, a more serious condition arise out of the confusion which may take on the form of lawlessness and danger.

Therefore, Mr. President, the interest I have will be clearly seen to be very serious, and I am anxious that in this time of reflection there shall arise no objection to the unanimous consent upon the theory that all the provisions in all of these relief bills will be entered upon merely after and immediately after the consent is granted.

I must say that I have an understanding, so far as that for which I speak is concerned, that at the present time I keep my contract with the President to limit the situation, the contention, and the debate to the issue solely to give the right to the corporation to make a loan to the States in the sum of $300,000,000, now pending.

Having made the matter clear, showing that there is no purpose on my part or consent on my part that there shall be any possible violation, inadvertently or otherwise, of the agreement, I have expressed the purpose for which the Senate has been kind enough to indulge me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was somewhat surprised that any objection should have been raised to the proposal of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], especially in view of the fact that we were trying to expedite the public business and get some of the relief to which the President has finally given his assent. The only reason I can attribute for the objection is that perhaps some of these distinguished gentlemen want to give to the moving pictures an opportunity for the President to get on the screen and repeat that memorable Senate speech that he made here on last Tuesday. It will be recalled-and the Senate is familiar with that historic journey here—that he came up on Tuesday on that sensational trip after the work of the Senate was finished and after the program had been all but concluded; but if any Senator would travel down to the movie pictures here in Washington, he would see the picture of the President making that speech to the movie audience. Of course, it is supposed to be the same speech he delivered here and gives the impression he was speaking to the Senate. He said:

Time is of the essence. Every day's delay makes new wounds and extends them. I come before you in sympathy with the difficulties which the problem presents and in a sincere spirit of helpfulness.

No doubt the same picture is being sent to all the movingpicture houses of the country, showing the President of the United States speaking to the Senate, driving them into action on a tax bill that had already been framed and was ready to be shot through its final stages just as soon as he could carry himself away from the Capitol.

I dislike to shatter the dreams of the youth of the country who in the movies will sit and view the President driving the Senate into action, but the truth ought to be told, the facts ought to be given to the people, even though these movie audiences by the thousands will be disillusioned. There is a rule of the Senate that no picture can be taken in the Senate Chamber. It is an old regulation of this body that camera men may not come here and photograph Senators in action, or even the President of the United States making an historic address. So this pretended picture that will be flashed upon the screen from one end of the country to the other does not present the true facts at all. There was no picture taken of the President last Tuesday during that memorable speech. No picture is ever taken of this body while the Senate is in session.

I would tell the folks back home, so the truth could be known. Whether he rehearsed that speech in the Vice President's room just before he came into the Senate Chamber or after he had expressed himself to the Senate I do not know. I do not know-I wish I did know so I could give the truth to history—whether the President made the speech for the movies the day before he came down here. whether he made it in the Gold Room or the Red Room or the Blue Room at the White House, or whether he waited until the day after he spoke to the Senate. But one thing the people of the country must know, and that is that the speech which they may see him making upon the screen "driving the Senate" to consideration of the tax bill was not made in the Senate Chamber. It is merely a pose. It is a piece of gross hypocrisy, mere sham and pretense, and the President is a party to it when he permits it to go out over the country that he was making the speech to the Senate of the United States. What a spectacle! How beneath the dignity of a President of the United States!

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had risen a moment ago to ask the Senator a question, but he has already answered it. I wanted to inquire whether the Senator had seen the picture.

Mr. HARRISON. No, I have not; but I am going to see it, because I like to keep up with Republican shams as the campaign proceeds.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the picture show the Senate in session?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no; it shows just the President. I understand that it discloses the President speaking in a louder tone of voice than he used in the Senate Chamber [laughter], because, close as I was to the place from which he spoke here in the Senate Chamber, I could hardly hear him. I understand that in the movie speech, however, he can be heard to the uttermost parts of the great moving-picture theaters. He is pictured as a fighting man.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the picture upon the screen does not show the audience, it may be the distance of the audience from the President at the time required him to speak louder.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and after the next election he will be still farther from the audience and the audience will be still farther away from him. [Laughter.]

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. WAGNER submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3696) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. Wagner to the bill (S. 3696) to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering caused by unemployment, and for other purposes, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That (a) to aid in furnishing relief and work relief to the needy and distressed people residing in the several States and in relieving the hardship resulting from unemployment, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make grants to the several States for such purposes out of the funds made available by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, under the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, and in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $300,000,000. Such amount shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the States of the United States according to the Fifteenth Decennial Census. Such apportionment shall be made by the corporation within 10 days after the date of enactment of this act, and the corporation shall immediately certify to the governors of the several States the amount apportioned to each State. The amounts so apportioned to any State shall be available for payment to such State for the purposes of this section until the expiration of two years after the date of enactment of this act.

date of enactment of this act.

"(b) The aggregate amount of the grants made to any State under this section shall not be in excess of the amount apportioned to such State. The amount of the grant or grants to each State shall be reimbursed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by making annual deductions, beginning with the fiscal year 1937, from moneys payable under regular apportionments made from future Federal grants in aid of the States for the construction of highways and rural post roads, of an amount equal to one-fifth of the share which such State would be entitled to receive under such apportionment, except for the provisions of this section, or of an amount equal to one-fifth of the grant or grants made pursuant to this section, whichever is the lesser, until the sum of such deductions shall equal the total amount of such grant or grants. Whenever any such deduction is made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall immediately pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount so deducted: Provided, That such deduction shall not be made with respect to any State which shall enter into an agreement with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the repayment of the amount of the grant within 10 years of the making thereof in such installments and upon such terms as may be agreed upon between such State and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and so long as such State shall not be in default in the performance of the terms of such agreement.

"(c) Any State making application for funds under this section shall, through its governor, (1) certify the necessity for such funds, and that its own resources, including moneys made available and which can be made available by the State, the civil subdivisions and private contributions are inadequate to meet its relief needs; and (2) submit its plan for the administration of such funds within such State. In any State having a State department of welfare or charities, such department shall administer the funds granted to the State pursuant to this section, except that in any State in which, in accordance with the laws of the State, there has been set up a special emergency organization for the administration of relief, such special organization may administer the funds so granted to such State: Provided, That in any State where no state-wide board of charities exists, or no special emergency organization has been set up, the amount allotted to such State shall be distributed by the joint action of the governor and the State board constituted for controlling the financial affairs of such State, if such board exists, or by the governor, if such board does not exist.

governor, if such board does not exist.

"(d) The amount of any grant authorized under this section shall be paid to the State upon delivery by the State to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of a receipt for such amount, which receipt shall state that the grant is accepted subject to the terms of this section."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for advances to States for the relief of distress arising from unemployment, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I assume I shall probably not be able to get the bill through to-day. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say in this connection that I shall expect the Senate to remain in session until not later than 10 o'clock to-morrow night unless the bill should be disposed of before that time.

I now ask that the next amendment may be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 49, after line 14, to insert:

SEC. 107. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salaries of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), the members of the Board of Mediation, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, the American commissioner of the General Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, and the umpire and American commissioner of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum; and after June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the Federal Farm Board, the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, or of any governmental function named in this section shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum. The provisions of section 102 shall apply to the compensation of offices and positions provided for in this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Couzens in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 49, line 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 46, in one of the exceptions to paragraph (e) the active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, I desire to say that the Commandant of the Coast Guard saw me to-day and assured me that the Coast Guard are under military regulations just the same as the Marine Corps; that a man is enlisted for a certain definite length of time; that if he leaves without permission he can be arrested and put in jail, and so on. I think under those conditions I should offer an amendment so that we can take the matter to conference and look into it carefully. Therefore I move to insert on page 46, line 16, after the word "Navy," the words "Coast Guard."

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, in view of the explanation made by the chairman of the committee I think the amendment should be adopted and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the present occupant of the chair draw attention to the fact that the amendment heretofore adopted will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment heretofore agreed to is reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to, as follows:

(e) The active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marine Corps, or.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 46, line 15, between the words "adjustment" and "or," insert the following:

Provided, That any reduction in the compensation of such employees shall not in any case exceed 10 per cent of existing rates.

So as to read:

(d) Any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is adjustable to conform to the prevailing local rate for similar work, but the wage board or other body charged with the duty of making such adjustment shall immediately take such action as may be necessary to effect such adjustment: Provided, That any reduction in the compensation of such employees shall not in any case exceed 10 per cent of existing rates; or.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the present occupant of the Chair draw the Senator's attention to the fact that there is a unanimous-consent agreement to consider committee amendments first.

Mr. BYRNES. This is offered as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina in behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to inquire, for the purpose of obtaining some information, how much the exemption given the Coast Guard will reduce the alleged economies in the bill?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I must say to the Senator that I can not tell him, because the matter just came to my attention a couple of hours ago. I take it that it will not be very large, but, as I said, I can not tell the Senator. That is one matter I want to look up in conference.

Mr. BLAINE. It is very important in considering the balancing of the Budget. As I understand it, the appropriation to the Coast Guard for the enforcement of prohibition runs a little over $16,000,000 a year. Substantially all of that is for personnel, including enlisted men. In view of that one item, though this is probably only a guess, on the basis of 10 per cent it would affect it to the extent of from $1,000,000 to $1,250,000, would it not?

Mr. JONES. It might.

Mr. BLAINE. Then the regular appropriation for the Coast Guard in addition to that would amount to an additional sum, so that if we reduce the amount saved by the economy bill it will be reduced between $1,000,000 and $2.000,000?

Mr. JONES. This would not add to the appropriation for the Coast Guard, but of course it would increase the reduction made in the possible saving in the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. It would not add to the appropriation for the Coast Guard, of course.

Mr. JONES. This would not affect the appropriation for the Coast Guard one way or the other. If these men should be excepted from the reduction, that would reduce the amount we would save by this bill without affecting the appropriation for the Coast Guard.

Mr. BLAINE. That might run over $1,000,000?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it might.

Mr. President, it was the understanding, or at least it was my understanding, that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] would at this point offer a substitute for this title. I think, if consent is given for that, we should perfect the text. If in addition to the committee amendments there are any other amendments that any Senator desires to propose to the text of this part of the bill, I would have no objection to such amendments being considered. I do not know whether there are any more amendments to be offered or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one additional amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 50, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "other purposes" and to insert "purpose other than the payment of salaries," so as to read:

SEC. 108. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any purpose other than the payment of salaries, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have an amendment to offer on page 58.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is beyond this point.
Mr. MOSES. We have not yet reached that point in the bill.

Mr. JONES. The amendment just agreed to completes Title I, so far as the committee amendments are concerned.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that I may offer my amendment, which is in the nature of a complete substitute for Title I.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that I shall have no objection to the substitute being offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the substitute has been printed, but under my right as the author of the amendment to perfect the amendment I wish, on page 3, line 22, after the Arabic number "(6)," to strike out the words "insolvent bank receivers and bank examiners" and insert "public officials and employees," so that it will read:

* * public officials and employees whose compensation is not paid from the Federal Treasury.

This amendment is for the purpose of taking care of the personnel of the Federal Reserve Board, who are paid, not from the Public Treasury but from funds provided by the member banks.

I also, on page 6, in lines 2 and 3, wish to strike out the words "the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs," this being done in order to make the amendment which I am perfecting conform to the changes heretofore made in the text of the title as affected by individual and committee amendments offered and already agreed to.

I wish further, Mr. President, to perfect my amendment on page 3, at the end of the paragraph, by making the language to conform to the language which is in the bill as already agreed to. Therefore I wish to strike out, after the word "Treasury," the period and to insert the word "or," and then the words found on page 46 of the bill, beginning in line 16, "the active enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps."

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator that he insert the words "and the Coast Guard," which we just added.

Mr. MOSES. I will add the words "and the Coast Guard," those words having just been incorporated in the bill

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator again to state what his second perfecting amendment is.

Mr. MOSES. The second perfecting amendment was to strike out the words "the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs." That amendment is proposed in order to make the amendment conform to the bill as already acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. As the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds to explain his amendment, I should like to inquire what effect the adoption of the amendment would have on employees who are not under the civil service, as well as the employees of the Senate and the House, unless the Senator proposes to exempt them?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator will find, as he goes through my amendment, beginning at line 13, on page 4, all legislative salaries taken care of, including the salary of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, and so forth. He will find that matter entirely covered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator from New Hampshire begins his explanation of the amendment, will he yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a cuorum?

Mr. MOSES. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Bulkley	Costigan	Harrison
Bailey	Bulow	Couzens	Hatfield
Bankhead	Byrnes	Davis	Hawes
Barbour	Capper	Dickinson	Hebert

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered, and which is printed both in the RECORD of Saturday and in the usual form of printed amendments, presents merely the question of policy, which has not as yet been taken up and determined by the Senate in connection with the matter of dealing with civil-service employees. The Senate already, in approving of the action taken by the special subcommittee on economy, which action has been embodied in the legislative appropriation bill now before us, has passed upon the question of a horizontal uniform reduction in salaries of all who are in the Federal employment. That, Mr. President, is a form of economy which seems to me to be open to grave objection and to be unjustifiable in that it penalizes many who are in the lower brackets of Federal employment. It is open to the further objection that upon the termination of the period within which these horizontal slashes of salaries will take place both the Congress and the employees affected by the legislation will be subjected to the necessity of a complete revision of the salary schedule, and it may be that at such time the temper of Congress will be such that the employees will suffer very greatly by the outcome of such an attempt; whereas the furlough plan which I have presented—and I make no secret of the fact, Mr. President, that it embodies the views of those who will have to administer whatever form of economy is applied to the Federal service-compels no employee to lose his place; it compels no employee to lose his salary; but merely lays upon each employee the burden of absenting himself for a given period from the public service without pay.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator may have already afforded the Senate the information I am about to seek, but I should like to ask whether the so-called furlough plan which has been offered by the Senator is the administration's program for the reduction of Government expenses?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I take full responsibility as a Senator from New Hampshire for having offered this plan, and I have already stated that it embodies the views of those administrative officers who will have to put into effect whatever kind of economy measures shall be agreed upon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that include the President?

Mr. MOSES. I have never consulted the President about it, nor has the President informed me of his views.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator, then, does not know whether in introducing this amendment he represents the wishes of the President of the United States, or whether the President prefers the plan which has been adopted by the subcommittee?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Kentucky, in anticipation of the duties which he possibly will have to take on in a few weeks, is undoubtedly very familiar with current events; and, of course, he therefore is not in ignorance of the fact that the President hitherto has urged a furlough plan upon the attention of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but I do not know that that necessarily has anything to do with the performance of any duty that may be incumbent upon me in the future.

Mr. MOSES. Nor upon me.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a Member of this body, I thought it probably would not be out of place to inquire whether the Senator's amendment is an administration proposal for economy.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, my friendship for the Chief Executive is so well known that I need not dilate upon that; and I merely beg my distinguished friend from Kentucky to accept my statement that I am offering this amendment on my own responsibility.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course I realize that. We all do that here. We introduce amendments on our own responsibility. because we have to; but we sometimes have suggestions from the outside as to the propriety of introducing amendments. I, of course, would not intimate that the Senator from New Hampshire has to be prompted by anybody in the matter of amendments or any other course he may see fit to pursue here.

Mr. MOSES. No. Mr. President; I am a self-starter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. We all recognize that.

Mr. MOSES. And I hope that the Senator from Kentucky would not be deterred from voting for my amendment even if it were favored by the President of the United

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, I would not be deterred on that account, although I might be more cautious in looking into its merits than I otherwise would.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, to resume at the period where the pleasant interlude with the Senator from Kentucky took place, I want to say that when we come to decide the important question of policy which is represented first of all by a choice between what the committee has recommended and what I am now proposing to the Senate, and which in all of its implications means much more to those who are affected by it than any discussion which might take place here, we must not lose sight of the fact that those who are most immediately affected by this type of legislation have some right to be heard.

I do not assume to speak with authority for them. We all know, however, that at the outset they were rigidly opposed to any policy of Federal economy which involved them and their relation to the Federal pay roll. We know, however, that the inexorable logic of events brought them to a point where they recognized generously that every citizen, whether a public employee or not, must take on some share of the burden necessitated by the task of bringing the country out of its present fiscal situation, whether by the payment of additional taxes or by suffering a reduction in his Federal income. I think, however, from information which has come to me within the last few days, that I am quite within the bounds of accuracy in saying that the great mass of people who will be affected by this legislation infinitely prefer the furlough plan to the horizontal drastic cuts in Fed-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MOSES. I yield. Mr. BORAH. I am rather surprised at that statement. I suppose the Senator has some reason for making it. Every letter I have had, and every personal contact I have had with the employees, has been to the contrary.

I was stopped to-day on my way out by a committee-apparently a committee-very much opposed to it. Of course, they were not desirous of the salary reduction; but they said that they preferred the salary reduction to this, for certain reasons which at this time I perhaps will not state. But has there been any expression upon the part of their organizations either way?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I think I am safe in saying that those whom I have been accustomed to regard as the spokesmen for very large groups of Federal employees have made known to me that they infinitely prefer the furlough system to the pay-cut system.

Mr. BORAH. There must be a division among them. Mr. MOSES. Oh, there is a division of opinion in any body of men. There is a division of opinion in the Senate on a great many things. The Senator from Idaho and I. though seeing eye to eye on many, many questions, find ourselves in radical disagreement on some other matters of public policy.

Mr. BORAH. After a time, however, we come to express ourselves here, and the majority determines the matter. I have wondered if there has been any action upon the part of these organizations one way or the other upon this question. It is a matter about which I should like to know.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator means a plebiscite, a questionnaire among all the membership of these organizations, I do not know that any such thing has taken place. I only know that those whom I have been accustomed to regard as the mouthpieces of great organizations have expressed to me their opinion as I now express it to the Senate.

Since the matter involves merely a question of policy, far-reaching in its effect-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MOSES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator what will be the amount of the reductions under his proposed sub-

Mr. MOSES. Upon the theory of the best computation which I have been able to make—and I do not claim to be an actuary-I would set the saving to be made under the furlough plan at approximately $90,000,000. It might run a little above that. I have not been able, under any set of computations which I could make, to bring it more than $2,000,000 below.

I recognize that there is a difference of a considerable sum of money between this amount and the estimated economies to be had under the measure provided by the committee; but when we have before us the general question of taking action of this sort, so widely effective upon so many people, it does not seem to me that we are warranted in making mere arithmetical computations to determine whether one set of proposals or another shall produce the greater saving.

My desire is to bring about action along the lines of my earnest belief, namely, that every Federal employee should make some contribution in this crisis. My chief desire is to have that contribution made in such wise that it will bear with least difficulty upon those who have to take on the burden, will leave them in the best situation at the end of the period for the economy which we are now instituting, and will free the Congress from those widespread and complicated endeavors which we certainly will have to take up if we are forced, a year from now, to undertake a general revision of the Federal pay roll.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to explain as briefly as I can the differences between the two plans now presented to the Senate.

The plan represented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], according to his statement, would save approximately $90,000,000. That is a higher estimate than has ever been made by any advocate of the plan. The highest estimate heretofore made by any advocate of the plan has been $83,000,000. It is divided in this way:

It is claimed that in the Post Office Department, after allowing for substitutes, there would be a saving of $24,000,-000. It is claimed further that there would be a saving in the allowance to rural carriers of $10,312,000.

Manifestly the rural carriers can not be furloughed; and when it was found by those advocating the plan that the rural carriers could not be furloughed they provided that the rural carriers should be taken care of by providing that they should receive only three-eighths of the amount now allowed to them on account of equipment allowance. That means that by reason of the provisions of this furlough amendment the rural carrier will sustain a reduction of the amount allowed to him equal to a fraction between 13 and 14 per cent. Under the committee plan the rural carrier, like all other employees of the Government, is asked to sustain a reduction of 10 per cent. By the provisions of this furlough plan he is made to suffer a greater reduction than any other employee of the Government of the United States. The average equipment allowance is $383. Under this amendment they would be allowed three-eighths, or $144, making a loss to the carrier of $239, when the average pay of the carrier is only $2,017.

In addition to that it is said that on account of the employees outside of the Post Office Department there will be a saving of $46,000,000. While it is claimed that the furlough plan would save $46,000,000, we are told that it would offer an opportunity to employ substitutes. If substitutes are employed, it will never save any $46,000,000, and the advocates of the plan have never deducted a single dollar from the $46,000,000 to account for the money that is to be paid to substitutes. But if we take every dollar that is claimed, the saving under the furlough plan would amount to $81,713,000.

The saving provided for in the committee bill is approximately $120,000,000. The Senator from New Hampshire has spoken of his great friendship for the President, which he says is well known to the Members of this body, and I really am surprised at his offering this amendment. I am also surprised that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson], the Republican leader, should be in favor of it. In fact, I was surprised on Saturday afternoon, when after we had perfected this amendment both the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New Hampshire voted against the adoption of this amendment, which meant a saving of $120,000,000, because the President of the United States on Tuesday last made this statement to the Senate:

I do know that the committee has made honest and earnest effort to reach a just reduction in expenditures, and I trust, therefore, that despite any of our individual views or the sacrifice of any group that we can unite in support and expeditious adoption of the committee's conclusions.

That was an appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire and an appeal to the Senator from Indiana that notwith-standing any personal view held by them they might sacrifice that individual view in order to promote a reduction in expenditures. Had the Senate followed the course of these two leaders, there would be no saving in the bill to-day on account of salaries.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Brat-TON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], and myself entered upon the consideration of these measures. never once having the question of partisanship raised, solely in the hope of accomplishing a reduction of expenditures. We each made sacrifices daily of our views. I do not hesitate to say that before I entered into an investigation of it I thought well of the furlough plan. I know that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] sacrificed his view time and again, and during the last few days has cast votes not in accordance with his view as originally entertained-votes that might affect him politically—but because of his courage he hesitated not, knowing it was in the interest of an agreement by the Members of this body. I do not think that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson], occupying the position he does, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] should fail to accord to their President the support that he plead for last Monday when he begged that they sacrifice their personal views and expeditiously adopt the recommendations of this committee.

Mr. President, after carefully considering the furlough plan I deemed it impracticable and unfair; and I submit that no matter what the Senator from New Hampshire may say as to his plan being in accord with the views of those who will be charged with administering it, I think it would be exceedingly unwise. What is the difference? In the amendment of the bill sponsored by the Senator from Washington it is provided that there shall be a 10 per cent cut. The plan sponsored by the Senator from New Hampshire provides for an 8½ per cent cut.

Under the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the committee bill no person receiving compensation of less than a thousand dollars would suffer any reduction. Under the plan of the Senator from New Hampshire it is \$1,200 instead of \$1,000. The difference in percentage is $8\frac{1}{2}$ on the man with a salary of \$1,200 under the plan of the Senator from New Hampshire, and 10 per cent under the committee plan.

Under the plan of the Senator from New Hampshire it is $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on the man receiving seven or eight thousand dollars. It is a horizontal cut, but there is this fundamental difference, that in the plan of the Senator from New Hampshire it is provided that the President shall have power to exempt an employee from the provisions of the furlough plan.

The committee knew that that power would have to be exercised by the heads of the various departments, and that inevitably it would result in favoritism being shown to certain employees. When the head of a department would say, "Mr. Jones, you are indispensable; therefore I recommend that you be exempted from the provisions of the furlough plan." Mr. Smith, in the same office, would say, "Because Jones stands in with the boss of this department, he is exempted; he gets no deduction. I have to suffer a furlough and be sent out for 30 days without any pay at all."

I believe it would result throughout the service of the Government in the exercise of discretion on the part of bureau chiefs and of heads of departments which would cause more dissatisfaction throughout the service than any one thing I know of. It would give to the heads of the departments the right to say that one man should suffer a loss of a month's pay but that another should not suffer the loss of a dollar's pay. The committee took that into consideration. The Senator from New Hampshire just said that District policemen and District firemen ought to be exempted. Under the committee plan they are not exempted. What are we going to do about the men on guard on the border in the Immigration Service and similar employees in other services throughout the country? Who is going to take their places? Can they be furloughed for 30 days? If they are turned loose for 30 days, will it not be necessary to put on substitutes; and if we employ substitutes, will there be any saving? The more carefully we analyzed it the more certain we became that no man could figure what it would cost without knowing what the number of exemptions would be.

Then we came back to the recommendation made to the committee of the cut of 10 per cent. That applies, as I said the other day, from President to porter, and from judge to janitor, with the exception of the enlisted men of the Army and Navy and Coast Guard. A man in the service will say, "However much I dislike it, all are treated alike. I am satisfied, since every man is to be made to make the same sacrifice at this time. I will be dissatisfied only if favoritism is shown."

This furlough plan would open the door for favoritism.

The President, speaking to the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Indiana, in this Senate a week ago said:

In addition to the economies which may be brought about through the economy bill, the direct reductions of the appropriations committee should increase this figure to at least $400,-900,000, not including certain postponements to later deficiency bills.

That includes $250,000,000 savings proposed by the committee in this bill, and an anticipated $150,000,000 additional savings from appropriation bills.

The President said further:

As this sum forms the basis of calculations as to increased taxes necessary, it is essential that, no matter what the details may be, that amount of reduction must be obtained or taxes must be increased to compensate.

This bipartisan committee and nonpartisan committee has brought in a bill which provides a reduction of approximately $250,000,000, including a reduction in salaries of $120,000,000. The plan of the Senator from New Hampshire, according to its most enthusiastic advocates, would save $83,000,000, a difference of $40,000,000.

The Senator from New Hampshire says the saving would be $90,000,000, and I accept the amendment. I referred to the most enthusiastic advocate, and I meant the most enthusiastic advocate up to the time the eminent Senator from New Hampshire adopted it as his plan. Heretofore it has been claimed that it would save $83,000,000. Now the Senator from New Hampshire says $90,000,000, which would mean a loss of $30,000,000 in savings. It could mean there would be favoritism shown to some employees, discrimination in favor of some employees, while under the other plan there would be an equal deduction of 10 per cent to all employees of the Government whose compensation is in excess of a thousand dollars.

I hope the proposed plan will not be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, with the greatest respect and deference for my able friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes]. I rise to differ from him in his viewpoint respecting the furlough amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from South Carolina is entitled to more consideration so far as the Senate is concerned, in view of his long study of the subject and his unselfish and courageous service on the Economy Committee. But I am moved to wonder whether the Senator is not constrained to support the committee program because it is the committee program. I wonder whether he is now able to consider open-mindedly the present merit of the alternative furlough proposition, and particularly the alternative furlough proposition as I shall ask the Senate to amend it.

It seems to me that the furlough plan, for one year only, has credentials which entitle it to emphatic preference over the straight horizontal pay cut which was voted on Saturday by the Senate. In the first place, it avoids any disturbance of actual wage rates. We have heard a great deal about psychology, and its effect upon our economic situation in the present unhappy condition in which the country finds itself. I know of no more useful contribution to helpful psychology than not to disturb existing wage rates, if we can accomplish our unavoidable economy purpose by another method, and I think the distinction is a difference which is something more than a mere distinction.

Furthermore, if we are thinking in terms of this popular psychology which we are asked so often to consult, it seems to me that it is particularly useful to embrace the furlough plan. The furlough plan is a trend in the direction of experiment with the 5-day week. The 5-day week and the shorter work day in the 5-day week are calculated, in my judgment, to be the ultimate, inevitable economic reliance of the country in finally liquidating our economic difficulties in this mechanical age with its heavy and permanent technological unemployment. Here, in a sense, is a laboratory test in the shorter work week and the shorter work day. Thus, the trends involved in the furlough plan, it seems to me, have infinitely much to commend them in preference to the horizontal wage reduction which now stands in the committee bill. The latter trend is reactionary. The former is progressive. If we can save the public money sufficiently by either method, I am persuaded that it is highly preferable to do it in a forward-looking way.

Moreover, of course, it is less burdensome on the Federal personnel. It contemplates an average reduction of 8.3 per cent in compensation instead of an average of 10 per cent in the committee bill. I mean that this is the mathematical equivalent of the furlough plan as compared with the horizontal pay cut. Therefore it would seem to me quite obvious, as the Senator from New Hampshire has indicated, that the furlough plan would be preferred by the Federal personnel itself.

Now, the objections to the plan: It is urged, in the first instance, by my able friend from South Carolina that the furlough plan would be subject to favoritism in its administration. It seems to me this is shadow boxing. It seems to me that is fighting ghosts. I can not believe that for a period of one year, during this next emergency 12 months for which we are providing in this legislation, that there is any serious threat of favoritism either through the application for or the issuance of an Executive order by the President of the United States, which is the necessary routine in order to create any exemption under the mandatory rule as laid down in the legislation itself. Executive | lent of a reduction of 8.3 per cent.

exemption orders, if and when necessary, are not likely to be issued except for sound cause, and I do not believe any Senator seriously thinks otherwise.

The second objection is that there is administrative difficulty in respect to the operation of the plan. Yet surely the Senator from New Hampshire is justified in stating that the administrators of the Government, including the President, have asked for the furlough plan in preference to the straight wage-cut plan as an expression of their belief for the best method of proceeding. If the administrators, those upon whom the responsibility for the administration will fall, take such an attitude, I think the legislative branch of the Government is entitled to dismiss the question of administrative difficulty in deciding the alternative choice between these two plans.

The third objection is that the furlough substitute would not raise the same total sum as would the original committee bill. That is certainly true; it can not be gainsaid. But the differential is not serious in view of our alternative economy opportunities. Indeed, it may develop that the differential is of no major consequence at all.

The committee bill as finally amended by the Senate's action in respect to the amendment submitted on Saturday by the Senator from Maryland probably puts the salary reduction at a total of $114,000,000. I would say that the saving is in the neighborhood of $114,000,000 as represented by the bill as now pending.

If the Senator from New Hampshire is correct in his estimate respecting the furlough plan, there is a saving of $95,000,000 involved in its operation, and I may say to him that my own inconclusive calculations on that subject bring the saving to between ninety and ninety-five million dollars, although it is exceedingly difficult to calculate. I propose by amendment to increase this sum.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I have just seen a telegram from the head of one of the largest and most important of the federated Federal services, which indicates that the total saving to be made under the furlough bill will be approximately $110,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Mary-

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not out of sympathy with the furlough plan, but I want to express this thought. Assuming, first, that the furlough plan would save $90,-000,000 in lieu of $115,000,000, that would mean a difference of $25,000,000, which the 10 per cent cut would save over the furlough plan. If that $25,000,0000 were used in the lower wage brackets in the way of exemptions, it would be possible to exempt all salaries of $1,800 and less from any cut whatsoever, and get the same amount of savings. I know there has been a great deal of sentiment to exempt the salaries in the lower brackets, so that if we are going to adopt the furlough plan, which means a saving of twentyfive or thirty million dollars less than under the 10 per cent cut, by adopting the cut plan and saving only $90,000,000 we could exempt every salary of $1,800 or less from any cut whatsoever for the same amount of money.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I believe there will be no such differential between the furlough plan and the straight cut as previously ordered. Now, let me come to the last and final objection, which I think is the one valid objection against the furlough plan. I have felt-and many others in this Chamber have the same feeling—that there is no equity and no justification in a universal horizontal reduction in all wage brackets at the same rate, applying the same economy ratio to high and low alike. The Senator from New Hampshire reminds me that he said precisely the same thing.

That criticism can still apply to the furlough plan, because in effect mathematically it applies a common rule to the entire list, representative in dollars and cents of the equivaMr. President, it is at that point that I want to submit an amendment, an amendment for the purpose, first, of restoring the idea of a sliding scale of reduction in the upper brackets; an amendment, second, which obviously will, therefore, increase the total revenue to be secured and thus in turn will further meet the objection raised to the furlough plan upon this latter score.

I am going to propose an amendment to section 101, on page 2, after line 23, inserting a new subsection to read in part as follows:

Upon the compensation in excess of $3,000 per annum the furlough provision heretofore defined shall apply after and in addition to the following reductions in rates of compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933.

to the following reductions in rivear ending June 30, 1933.
$3,000 to $4,000, 1 per cent.
$4,000 to $5,000, 2 per cent.
$5,000 to $6,000, 3 per cent.
$6,000 to $7,000, 4 per cent.
$7,000 to $8,000, 5 per cent.
$8,000 to $9,000, 6 per cent.
$9,000 to $10,000, 7 per cent.
Over $10,000, 8 per cent.

Then follows the necessary clause to eliminate the hump between brackets.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. BRATTON. If that amendment should be adopted, what would be the saving?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The additional saving as the result of this amendment would probably be between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. Therefore the total saving, even under the figures as originally submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire, would be in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 and on the basis of the estimate which he most recently gave the Senate would almost approximate the net saving available under the committee bill as it now stands.

Let me indicate precisely how this amendment would work. The net result of the amendment would be to create a set-up as follows: No salary under $1,200 would be touched at all. The furlough plan, representing the equivalent of an ultimate mathematical deduction of 8.3 per cent in annual pay, would apply up to $3,000 on the furlough basis. Above $3,000 the furlough and the new percentage reduction would apply. Bear in mind the fact that the furlough reduction represents 8.3 per cent. Then we can reach the total reduction of pay in the higher brackets by adding the proposed specific reduction in each bracket to 8.3 per cent, which is the rate represented by the furlough. This, then, is the final net result. Let me recall that on $1,200 to $3,000 the reduction is 8.3 per cent.

From $3,000 to $4,000 the reduction is a total of 9.3 per cent.

From $4,000 to $5,000 a total of 10.3 per cent. From $5,000 to $6,000 a total of 11.3 per cent. From $6,000 to $7,000 a total of 12.3 per cent. From $7,000 to $8,000 a total of 13.3 per cent. From $8,000 to $9,000 a total of 14.3 per cent. From $9,000 to $10,000 a total of 15.3 per cent. Over $10,000 a total of 16.3 per cent.

Manifestly if the amendment were adopted a subsequent amendment would have to be offered at the point where the compensation of the Speaker, the Vice President, the Members of the House and Senate are covered, by increasing that figure from 10 per cent in the pending amendment to 16.3 per cent, which is the total reduction in the top brackets under the sliding scale.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if the value of the sliding-scale reduction in the upper brackets—which I may say parenthetically is a simple application of the standard income-tax theory and plan of American operation—be included in the furlough plan, the only substantial objection to the furlough plan is eliminated and there is left all of these utterly sound and persuasive reasons for taking this alternative method instead of the horizontal proposal which has come from the committee and which thus far has been approved by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. There is another thing that troubles me, which the Senator has not mentioned, and that is the question of substitutes. It is quite apparent that a good many places where it would be impractical to reduce salaries by a month's vacation without pay could not be taken care of without putting in the place of the furloughed employee a substitute whom we would have to pay.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What happens to-day under similar circumstances? I assume the Federal employee to-day has his 30 days' vacation with pay, and if he is indispensable and a substitute were necessary, the substitute also is paid and there is that additional burden upon the pay roll. Under the furlough plan he takes the 30 days' without pay, and if a substitute is hired as heretofore, the Government would still have the advantage of that month's pay, which otherwise has been given to the employee.

Mr. NORRIS. Are there no provisions where the month's pay under existing salaries is not allowed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can not answer the Senator's question.

Mr. NORRIS. I was impressed with what the Senator from South Carolina said when he referred to the Immigration Service.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am not able to answer the Senator's question. I assume, from the fact that I have been told all along that the administrative officers and departments of the Government preferred this method of operation, that so far as its practical effects are concerned it must be sound.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not sure that it would be objectionable. I was wondering how it could be done without putting some one in the place of some of the furloughed employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Some one may be put in their place precisely as has happened heretofore.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the substitute specifically take away the vacation allowance?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is my understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be absolutely necessary so they would not have any vacation without pay.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the net fact.

Mr. NORRIS. So the Government employee would take a month's vacation without pay?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct as I understand the

Mr. NORRIS. Who would say when the furlough should be taken under the proposed amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I assume that it is at the primary discretion of the administrator in each department, but may I anticipate the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] to the extent of saying that I cordially agree with the proposal which he intends to submit that brings that matter back somewhat within the control of the employee himself.

Mr. NORRIS. Who, for instance, would designate when the Senator's month shall be when he must be taken off the pay roll? Who would tell him when that should be?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If anybody can find a furlough for me for even a few minutes, he will be doing better than I have been able to do for the last 12 uninterrupted months. Senators, under my amendment, will take the highest reduction, which will be 16.3 per cent, instead of 8.3 per cent in the committee bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that it is contemplated under this plan that the great majority of employees would take their furloughs distributed over a long period of time by having a virtual reduction of the working time in each week or in each month, but that the draft provides in the alternative that they may require the furlough to be taken in consecutive days not to exceed 24 working days, which the amendment declares to be one calendar month. I intend at the proper time to offer an amendment to the pending amendment on page 2, line 19, after the word "subsection," to insert a colon and the fol-

Provided further, That no officer or employee shall without his consent be furloughed under this subsection for more than four days in any one calendar month.

That would permit the employee in his discretion to insist that his furlough should be distributed over a long period of time, thus preventing him from being thrown out of work without any pay for practically a month. On the other hand, if he preferred that plan and the administrative officer felt that it was better for the service that he should take it, he could take it in 24 consecutive working days.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Do I understand that those receiving salaries of $1,200 or less are exempted from the provisions of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct.
Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Further, do I understand that the police and firemen of the District of Columbia are

Mr. VANDENBERG. They are exempted by the language of the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It does exempt them from the operations of the reduction?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Neither the Senator from Michigan nor the Senator from New Hampshire has discussed an amendment of the committee found on page 59, section 214, with respect to furloughs of Government employees. Will it interrupt the Senator if he is asked at this time to explain the relation of his amendment to that amendment?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator's question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very glad if the Senator will do so.

Mr. MOSES. May I say to the Senator from Colorado that there are three further amendments which I intend to offer in the event my pending amendment is accepted. On page 59 the further amendment provides for striking out all of section 213.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the amendment I have suggested raises the general question of whether or not we shall superimpose upon the furlough plan in the higher brackets the graduated-scale theory of reduction. It will suffice to take the judgment of the Senate upon this one amendment. If it should be carried, subsequent amendments will be necessary to bring the balance of the furlough proposal into line. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan will be read for the information of the Senate

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Amend section 101 by adding a new subsection reading as follows:

(d) Upon all compensations in excess of $3,000 per annum the furlough provisions heretofore defined shall apply after and in addition to the following reductions in rates of compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933:

Per ce	nt
$3,000 to $4,000	1
84,000 to $5,000	2
$5,000 to $6,000	3
$6,000 to $7,000	4
$7,000 to $8,000	5
$8,000 to $9,000	6
$9,000 to $10,000	7
Over $10,000	8

Provided, That the application of these reductions shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation below that of the next lower rate in the same service to which a lower percentage of reduction applies.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, as the author of the amendment, I am inclined to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan for a perfectly practical reason. If anyone would take the trouble to study the text of the bill, it will be noted that the text perfected by the House is changed very little, whereas the amendment which I have offered covers not only the entire text of the title, which involves only 8 sections, but involves 12 sections and covers the entire subject.

If my amendment shall be agreed to, the whole question as proposed by the House of Representatives and every question involved in the discussion here will go to conference, and, under the action already taken by the Senate to-day, we know the full powers of conferees with reference to matters of this sort, and because of the practical question thus involved, I will accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] to my amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire modifies his amendment.

Mr. MOSES. I will modify my amendment to that extent. I do that without concurring in the entire argument advanced by the Senator from Michigan, much of which, I recognize, has force, but I accept it in order that I may get a vote upon the entire subject, for, as I have said, if my amendment shall be agreed to, the whole proposition will be then in the hands of the conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, then there are three points where the text will have to be subsequently brought in line purely in relationship to the suggestions already accepted.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; Mr. President, I find upon studying these proposals that they affect the section numbering as proposed in my amendment, and also I modify my amendment to that extent.

The amendments of Mr. VANDENBERG to the amendment of Mr. Moses are as follows:

Amend section 105, subsection (a): Change 10 per cent to 16.3 per cent.

Also amend sestion 105, subsection (b): Change 8.3 per cent to 10 per cent.

Also amend section 105, subsection (c): After the words "8.3 per cent" add the following: "Provided, That subsection (d) in ection 101 shall also apply in this category.'

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2 of the amendment, in line 19, after the word "subsection," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no officer or employee shall, without his consent, be furloughed under this subsection for more than four days in any one calendar month.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin would change the numeral "4" to the numeral "5." I should be very glad to modify my amendment accordingly; but I make that suggestion because it is the principle of the 5-day week, which is set up in my amendment, and I think it would be much more reasonable to make the limitation five days instead of four days.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, what I seek to accomplish by this amendment is to prevent employees, without their consent, being required to take their furloughs all in one month's time. Senators are no doubt aware that many Government employees find it impossible to set aside any savings, and that therefore they are dependent upon the payments which come either monthly or bimonthly in order to meet their current expenses. Therefore it seems to me that one serious criticism of this furlough plan would be the hardship which would be occasioned by employees being required without their consent to go for a whole month without any income whatsoever. Under the terms of this amendment, however, it will be possible for those who prefer to take their furlough all in one month, and who receive the consent of the administrative officer to do so, to make such an arrangement.

I may say further to the Senator from New Hampshire that my theory in suggesting four days was that in the average month a 4-day furlough, taken weekly during a given month, would result in the reduction of the average working time by four or four and one-half days.

However, I am willing to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire and I modify the amendment by striking out "4" and inserting "5."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is so modified.

Mr. MOSES. To that extent I modify my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire further modifies his amendment. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire it is proposed to insert in the proper place the following proviso:

Provided further, That the rate of compensation of any employee furloughed under the provisions of this bill shall not be reduced by reason of the action of any wage board during the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, on page 2 of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire the following proviso

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as modifying the method of fixing the daily rate of compensation of per diem officers or employees as now authorized by law:

Mr. President, in the Navy and also in the Army the wages of many of the civilian employees are determined by wage boards. Those wage boards sit from time to time and determine what the proper scale of wages should be. I understand, however, that the wage boards have not been in session for a considerable time. Should those wage boards meet and decide upon a reduction in wages the cut might be 10 per cent or 15 per cent or 20 per cent. Obviously it would not be fair that these employees should be subject not only to that cut but also to the furlough provisions of the bill. They would be doubly penalized were that done. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will not accept the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I have in my hand a telegram that I think should be read from the desk, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 6, 1932.

Hon. James E. Watson, United States Senate:

This organization, composed of 78,000 members, with sub-ordinate unions in 750 cities and towns in United States, strongly ordinate unions in 750 cities and towns in United States, strongly commends your position in opposition to direct salary cuts of employees of Federal Government as against the furlough plan. We sincerely hope proposal for 5-day week for all per diem employees will be adopted by Senate in lieu of wage reductions. Employers in private industry strongly inclined to follow lead of Government. Wage cutting will not provide way out of present deplorable condition, but will accentuate rather than relieve crisis confronting our country. Five-day week will spread employment among larger number workers, thus providing relief for many now suffering from enforced idleness. By thus diverting larger portion aggregates pay roll of Nation's industries into channels which provide substantial necessities of life, purchasing power will be increased and business turned to upward trend. Industries operating six days by staggering employment upon 5-day basis is constructive step to cure depression and return prosperity. Saving of four hours' pay on each employee each week will reduce Government pay roll 9 1/11 per cent without reducing wage rate. Increased efficiency and flexibility of forces to meet variable requirements in governmental activities operated upon per diem basis through establishment of 5-day week will provide greater saving than 10 per cent reduction in wage rates. Those who have strongly supported best traditions of our country have right to expect our Government will take lead in providing only effective solutions, for aggravated condition of unemployment is our greatest and most dangerous problem. If 5-day week with compensation at ten-elevenths of present weekly wage is adopted, many private industries will follow lead of Government and release from unemployment will be quick and certain. Favorable action upon this alternative in preference to wage reductions most important to millions of workers in private employment as well as those in Government service. Government service.

CHAS. P. HOWARD, President International Typographical Union.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the percentage stated in the telegram which has just been read means, as anyone can determine by a slight computation, something like $110,-000,000 of savings under the proposal now before the Senate.

Mr. President, inasmuch as my single purpose is to establish a statement of policy on the part of the Senate and to get into conference the conflicting views with reference to the question of policy, I want to modify my amendment in every feasible way without destroying its integrity, and I am glad to modify it to the effect proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be further modified.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator must be certain as to who the conferees are going to be.

Mr. MOSES. No, Mr. President; but the Senator from Idaho has been here longer than I and is more practical than I, in spite of his well-advertised idealism, and he knows what happens when a Senator in charge of a measure accepts an amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I present an amendment which I ask to have printed in the usual form, printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed in the usual form, printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Walsh of Massachusetts is as follows:

Insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

"Provided, That any law, rule, or statute that requires a reduc-tion of salary additional to the reduction herein provided shall be inoperative during the fiscal year 1933."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire as modified.

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask if it is the purpose of those in charge of the bill to have a vote on this subject to-night? The Senator from New Mexico is just about to start a discussion of it.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I was wondering in that connection if we could not have a recess and let the amendments be printed which have been proposed.

Mr. JONES. I was going to suggest that, although most of the amendments have been accepted.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask, if that is going to be done, that my amendment may be reprinted, with the amendments which I have accepted printed in italics, so that the difference between my original amendment and the amendment as modified may be readily seen?

Mr. JONES. That is what I was going to suggest, so that we may see just exactly what the proposal is.

Mr. BORAH. And what the conferees will have to settle. The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that the Senate take a recess now until to-morrow morning and resume the consideration of the pending question at that time.

Mr. MOSES. In the meantime the Senator from New Mexico holds the floor.

Mr. BRATTON. I hope so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire to print his amendment as modified in the form suggested by him? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to put two letters in the RECORD?

Mr. JONES. I expect to make a motion in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, but I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have in my hand a letter from Mr. C. G. Bond, of Jackson, Tenn., to which I invite the particular attention of the Senator from Idaho. It is a splendid letter in reference to the recognition of Russia and gives reasons why there should be such recognition accorded. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JACKSON, TENN., June 1, 1932.

Hon. K. D. McKellar,

Senator from Tennessee, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR SENATOR: You perhaps may recall a conversation you had some time ago with some of us in our court house here when had some time ago with some of us in our court house here when I asked why had not the United States resumed diplomatic and friendly relations with Russia. You replied that the State Department gave as an excuse that Russia owed us and would not pay. We both remarked that that was a poor way to settle debts, by one party having nothing to do with the other, and especially while other nations, notably England and France, were virtually repudiating their obligations to us.

virtually repudiating their obligations to us.

I am not a diplomat or politician and not up on statecraft, but in view of the growing attitude of Japan, encouraged by Great Britain and France, it seems to behoove us to, as soon as possible, resume friendly relations with Russia. Russia has been traditionally friendly to the United States and if our attitude of unfriendliness continues, then in case of war with Japan our Alaskan possessions would be in very great danger. The attitude of France and England reminds me of school-boy days when a number of boys would egg on two other boys to fight, by putting chips on their shoulders and daring the other to knock them off. England and France, in all of their transactions, seem to try to put the United States forward. They flatter our diplomats and make them believe we are the greatest and richest people in the world and should, therefore, take the lead while they sit back and make us draw the chestnuts out of the fire for them.

I hope that somebody will take the initiative and compel our State Department to recognize Russia, at least for our own safety in the future.

in the future

I hope you have entirely recovered from your illness. With very best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,

C. G. BOND.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES BY INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a letter from Dr. H. H. Shoulders, of Nashville, Tenn., in reference to the foreclosure of mortgages by insurance companies.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 3, 1932.

Senator K. D. McKellar,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator McKellar: I hesitate to encroach upon the time of a man as busy as you. I do so because I believe an opportunity crists for real service for a large number of your constituents. The thing that has happened is this:

Insurance companies, particularly the New York Life, are pursuing a policy toward some of their debtors which, to my way of thinking, is very destructive and entirely out of line with the thinking, is very destructive and entirely out of line with the generous attitude taken by life-insurance commissioners and the Federal Government toward the companies.

As you probably know, land values have sunk so low that they ofttimes do not bring the amount of the mortgage held by these insurance companies, and these mortgages were conservative mortgages as recently as five years ago, after land values had been shrunk from war-time prices.

The New York Life is proceeding to foreclose notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government has taken steps to aid railroads in such a way as to enhance the value of the railroad bonds these insurance companies hold.

Not only is this true but my information is that the insurance commissioners of the various States appraised the collateral of the insurance companies held in the various States as of the date of July last year. But for this action their reserves would not have July last year. But for this action their reserves would not have been sufficient to enable them to continue in business in a number of States.

For the life of me I can not see how it is to the public interest or to the interest of landowners or to the interest of the insurance companies to foreclose and further depress values and throw families out of house and home, especially when this is being done in face of the fact that these insurance companies have enjoyed the indirect and direct benefits of Federal and State aids.

There are many business concerns which if valued on the basis of their dividend production for the calendar year would not be worth a single dollar.

I write this in belief that this subject is big enough to warrant an investigation on the part of the Senate as to the conduct of these beneficiaries of public favor.

If these insurance companies can buy large lands at values of to-day and at the same time enjoy normal dividends on their railroad bonds, which dividends are made possible by Federal ioans, then we had all better live off of Federal subsidy.

I believe that a committee of the Senate sitting in the interim after adjournment might look into these matters with great benefit to a majority of landowners and without injury to the companies or policyholders.

to a majority of landowners and without injury to the companies or policyholders.

Most respectfully yours,

H. H. SHOULDERS, M. D.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE-ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 6. An act for the relief of the Union Ferry Co., owners of the ferryboat Montauk;

S. 326. An act for the relief of Abram G. O'Bleness;

S. 2436. An act for the relief of Alfred G. Simmons, jr.;

H.R. 10236. An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

HAROLD I. JUNE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 432) granting permission to Harold I. June to transfer to the Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy, which was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "years," to insert "and one day."

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL BRIDGE, PORT HURON, MICH., TO SARNIA, ONTARIO

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. A brief time ago the House and Senate both passed a bridge bill permitting the construction of an international bridge from Port Huron, Mich., to Sarnia, Ontario. Since then it has become desirable that the approaches to this bridge—it being a bridge owned, built, and operated by an instrumentality of the State-should become eligible within the Federal-aid road system. The Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture entirely concurs in the suggestion. If the thing is to be completed at the present session of Congress, and the assent of the House also is to be secured, I must ask the Senate for present consideration of the measure.

I am wondering if there would be any objection to the. present consideration of Order of Business No. 742, Senate bill 4667, which I am sure will involve no discussion whatever.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was there any objection in the committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. None whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The bill (S. 4667) to amend the act approved March 3. 1927, entitled "An act to permit the granting of Federal aid in respect of certain roads and bridges," was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved March 3, 1927, entitled "An act to permit the granting of Federal aid in respect of certain roads and bridges," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That notwithstanding any provision of the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, or of the Federal highway act, as amended or supplemented by the act of May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 683), or by any other act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts in the construction by any State or States, or by any commission, subdivision or agency thereof, including a commission acts in the construction by any State or States, or by any commission, subdivision, or agency thereof, including a commission created by the Congress, each thereof being herein sometimes termed a public authority, of any toll bridge and approaches thereto, or in the construction of highways leading to any such bridge, within such State or across a boundary thereof into any other State, nation, municipality, or subdivision, upon the condition that such bridge is owned and operated by such State or States, or by such public authority or authorities, and that all tolls received from the operation thereof, less the actual cost of operation and maintenance, are applied to the repayment to such State or States, or to such public authority or authorities, of its or their part of the cost of construction or acquisition of such bridge, or to the amortization of such cost, with reasonable interest and financing costs, and upon the further condition that when the amount contributed by such State or States, or by such public authority or authorities, with reasonable interest and financing costs, in the construction or acquisition of such bridge shall have been repaid from the tolls, the collection of tolls for the use of such bridge shall thereafter cease and the same shall be maintained and operated as a free bridge."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from New SPEECH OF MEXICAN AMBASSADOR AT MARSHALL COLLEGE.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Dr. Jose M. Puig Casaurane, ambassador of Mexico, to the student body of Marshall College, at Huntington, W. Va., a few days ago.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I want to believe that I have been called upon to speak at these commencement exercises when you will be officially dubbed in the "knighthood of culture" and from which many of you who to-day won your diplomas will start to-morrow to begin the struggle for life, not because you wanted an ambassador to speak here but because you wished to have among you a Mexican university graduate who had in his own country an official contact with the students, both children and young men and grant a contact.

uate who had in his own country an official contact with the students, both children and young men, and even a certain responsibility in the orientation of the Mexican youth.

Maybe it is the most interesting thing in the commencement exercises to ponder about the real life that begins upon leaving the school, college, or university, and to analyze something of what we lose and what we gain at the end of our studies, when school life is over, that school life which perhaps is the only stage of our personal existences that all of us would like to live again, even in the extraordinary case that we may have only found suceven in the extraordinary case that all of us would like to live again, even in the extraordinary case that we may have only found success and happiness thereafter, and even in the assumption that during our school life we may have only known toil, fatigue, and poverty.

Even then the reminiscence of our life in school, college, and university continues to be our refuge in the time of discouragement and trial; the eyes of our spirit turn to it when we wish to ment and trial; the eyes of our spirit turn to it when we wish to see ourselves once more purer and more sincere. He who found treachery where he expected friendship envisions that life with regret, and he who was fortunate enough to find brothers among his friends feels happy to see that outside school he found also types and characters similar to those of yesterday. Success in our careers and accounts in our banks, when we achieve the one and accumulate the others, are hardly as satisfying as the popularity and success attained in school, and the most beautiful eyes of women that we may see afterwards seldom glitter with the sincerity or the mute eloquence of those eyes—blue, brown, or gray—for whom we were heroes, champions, or guides in our school days.

Life in its infinite panorama will show us outside of school men that are masters in all fields of endeavor, men who are full of wisdom and inspiration in every branch of science and art; but even the most respectable among them will seem to us as lacking that generosity and disinterestedness of those teachers whose hair grew white while they molded our spirits.

Out of school, in which we generally were, at best, second-rate making around a center, we become automatically a center,

Out of school, in which we generally were, at best, second-rate units moving around a center, we become automatically a center, brilliant or modest, but nevertheless the center of a small world, the world of the professional or artistic sphere in which we are called to exert our influence through our families, our clients, our pupils, or our employees; but the moment we leave school we become as well, automatically, complex units, with a certain social value and a certain definite responsibility and subject to the most dissimilar forces of attraction and direction.

Industry, commerce, science, politics, public service, will reach for the young man who until yesterday had nothing but a charming irresponsibility, and influences of all kinds will, nearly always, try to make out of the human product fresh from school an instrument of concurrent and a light in a charment. ment of conquest and a link in a chain.

Somebody may have been a leader in school. Out of school all of us must, almost fatally, be at first the tools of many leaders.

Flags of all shapes and colors will wave before the astonished eyes of youth emerging from school, and all kinds of formulas, hindrances, protocols, attitudes, and preestablished standards of behavior will tend to moderate its generous impulses; defeats, dis-illusionments, and falls will try to cool youthful warmth; and platitudes and coined phrases will strive to limit its freedom of platitudes and coined phrases will strive to limit its freedom of thought and expression.

Confronted by so many and different stimuli, being the converging point of conflicting influences, deceived by the mirage of non-existing cases, lost in the tangle of the thousands of theories and painful realities of the present moment, intellectual youth is subject to the phenomenon, common to the point of fatality, of "mental confusion"; a period of confusion preceding the finding of the sense of true proportion and useful behavior, a period in which youth floats like a log in the sea before it finds in success or disaster or in scientific conviction or in a selfish adjustment to social conventions the anchor that may provide a certain calm to social conventions the anchor that may provide a certain calm o social conventions the anchor that may provide a certain caim and a durable position.

When this stage has been attained it is very difficult to change, in any fundamental way, the trend of thought and the attitude toward the problems of life. This is why this period of fierce trouble, of transition, uneasiness, and mental confusion between leaving school and the final fixing of the trail in life is particularly dangerous. This is the period which many of you will begin to-morrow, in which your love and reverential service will be demanded for all that is noble and also for all that is low in life; a period in which everything that was learned in school will seem falling when tested in life; when the lawyer sees that it is not his science that wins 90 out of 100 cases; when the young technician in anatomy and surgery lacks the opportunity to apply his knowledge for want of clients, the clients that may flow to another fellow on account, perhaps, of an outward appearance of religiousness or an advantageous marriage; when the architect finds that it may not be necessary to make accurate calculations of the resistance of materials if he has good political connections; when the school-teacher realizes that pedagogy and the noble vocation to teach are not enough to achieve success. This is the time when in a conscious or an unconscious way, and even being physitates. period in which everything that was learned in school will seem tion to teach are not enough to achieve success. This is the time when in a conscious or an unconscious way, and even being physically very young, the men who come out of school lose sometimes the true characteristics of youth—vigor, tenacity in effort, faith in themselves, and the assurance of triumph in the straight road. It is then also that youth just out of school is in danger of falling under the influence of the false leaders—those who proffer then their protection to make available an easy victory.

This is why, if I dared to offer you my advice, I would tell you that in the period of life that will begin for you to-morrow, or when you reach that period, in order to be true knights and crusaders of culture, you ought to respect nothing more than culture and talent; that you should only bow before beauty, either physical beauty or that which is expressed through any artistic or spiritual manifestation; that your reverence ought to be given only to sacrifice; that being young and therefore the artistic or spiritual manifestation; that your reverence ought to be given only to sacrifice; that being young and therefore the masters of a great power, there is only one thing that ought to be envied by you and that is virtue; and finally bear in mind that, although tolerance is the most exquisite flower of culture, tolerance becomes criminal complicity when, through culture and a tolerant spirit, youth accepts or backs up social injustice. And I would tell you also that if you must have or accept leaders, see that they are young, with the full physical and mental youth which is yours, or with the spiritual youth that characterizes and distinguishes the true masters—those who through their uninterrupted contact with youth and in spite of their daily exand distinguishes the true masters—those who through their uninterrupted contact with youth and in spite of their daily experience with the miseries of life have been able to preserve their love and admiration for youth, their respect for its might, their hope in its strength, and humbly, notwithstanding their learning, confide in the real learning that is the intuition of youth when it is not lost or concealed under the sediments of distillusion and weary struggle.

Do not forget that youth is and will always be the favorite target of all mediocrities and all ambitions; that the selfish spirit of society turns always to it to transform its myths in truths and dogmas and to inject a semblance of new life in the oldest forms of the social, political, economic, scientific, and artistic statics or dynamics.

statics or dynamics.

Remember that in those cases, when young blood is needed and young, sound muscles are required to move the millstones of the oldest ideas, youth becomes again and again the center of attraction and the object of the lures, flatterings, and promises of the old.

This is the song of the sirens, the eternal deception to turn one's weakness into strength through another's youthful power, the ever-repeating story of false generosity, counterfeited altruthe ever-repeating story of false generosity, counterfeited altruism, and feigned humanitarian sense, when selfish captains of all industries—material as well as spiritual—knock at the doors of those who look weak but are really strong. This is the case, often repeated, when "women are preferred," not by equalitarian ideas but only because the work of women is less expensive; this is the case when in tropical lands, in colonies and frontiers, some men talk of "helping the native" only because they find the native's work cheaper; this is the case, finally, when the love for youth is displayed as a banner for any material or spiritual enterprise only because it is known that youth has generally less ambitions of money and less exigencies and more candor in its spirit, free as yet of the fetters of family, position or great responsibility.

Take, therefore, your true place; be young, strong, masters of yourselves in the field of life. Strive to keep a clear conscience that may lead you to a brotherly attitude toward your elders and your younger brothers, without arrogance on account of your youth but without any inferiority sense or complex derived from it. Know that it is true or that it may be true that you know less than we who have lived longer, but that fundamentally you know less only because you have not suffered so much. Keep in your minds that in the field of experience and real knowledge learning less only because you have not suffered so much. Keep in your minds that in the field of experience and real knowledge learning many times does not compensate nor balance the treasure possessed by him who is brave, sincere, self-sacrificing, and flexible in spirit like youth is.

And resolve, finally, in order to be loyal to your school, that in the task that life may have reserved for you, the best spur to action and the best guide for thought will be the remembrance of what you left here, the pure and generous school life, rather than all the experience and the vain science, the false respectability, and the deceiving preachments that many of you will begin to learn, to feel, and to hear to-morrow.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, FLORENCE, NEBR.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska. Mr. HOWELL. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce Senate bill 4759, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Nebr.; and I submit a report (No. 772) thereon.

I also request unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Let the bill be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third · reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. JONES. Pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, took a recess until to-morrow. Tuesday, June 7, 1932, at 10 o'clock a. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 6. An act for the relief of the Union Ferry Co., owners of the ferryboat Montauk; and

S. 2436. An act for the relief of Alfred G. Simmons, jr.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2437) entitled "An act for the relief of the estate of Annie Lee Edgecumbe, deceased," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Howell, Mr. Capper, and Mr. Trammell to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address an inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There has been inquiry on both sides as to what suspensions the Speaker would recognize this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that he expects to recognize three suspensions.

In the first place the Chair would like to recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Gasque], who will not take more than five minutes to pass a pension bill.

The Chair understands there are about 100 bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the Chair would like to dispose of as many of them as possible.

The three suspensions the Chair will recognize will be the Dies bill, providing for the deportation of criminal aliens; the bill known as the Hill bill, reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; and the third is a bill known as the Swing bill, which provides for the granting of certain lands in California to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, which is important and which must be completed before work can be proceeded with on a public improvement project.

The Chair consulted the minority leader, and his information is that the minority leader is not opposed to the Hill bill, the Dies bill, or the Swing bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair in mind the fact we should like to use the Chamber at 4 o'clock this afternoon if possible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not forgotten that. The Chair would like to accommodate the gentleman, of course.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to have the Chair start the suspensions early in the day so that we may have the room at 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Goldsborough].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have been very anxious to discuss at some time the Glass substitute for the Goldsborough bill. I have just taken up the matter with the Speaker who calls my attention to the fact that to-day we will be very busy. I would like to be recognized to-morrow morning for 30 minutes to discuss the Glass substitute for the Goldsborough stabilization bill, and I hope there will be no objection.

PENSIONS

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12124) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and so forth, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the general pension bill?

Mr. GASQUE. This is the omnibus pension bill.

Mr. SNELL, .Is this the one that was vetoed by the President?

jr.

MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee, we praise Thee that the sweetest word that ever sprang out of heaven is love. When the old earth is moved and the heavens tremble; when the sun and the moon are darkened and the stars withdraw their radiance, love shall live, for Thou art love. Behind every floating cloud it abides. We are grateful that there is no dislocation in Thy sovereignty and no interruption in the divine order. Inspire us this day with enlarged opportunities, with expanding powers that we may understand completely our whole duty to our country. Bless us with the fullness of that life that gets its inspiration from a living, loving, saving, and infinitely holy Father. Amen.

Mr. GASQUE. It is part of it and an additional one. In | other words, we have the same bill with amendments in addition to the omnibus pension bill; and I would say to the gentleman from New York that every item in the bill has been gone over and is approved by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, there will be more or less discussion of the bill, and we want to get along with the Consent Calendar, inasmuch as there are to be three sus-

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood it was to be passed as pension bills usually are passed. If there is objection, let it be stated now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, because I am going to insist on these bills being considered in the Committee of the Whole.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF STAMPED ENVELOPES

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill, H. R. 8576, to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAMNECK, Mr. FIESINGER, and Mr. WEST objected.

FARMERS' IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEBRASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10748, for liquidating bonded and other outstanding indebtedness of the Farmers' Irrigation District, Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

TRANSPORTATION OF CERTAIN JUVENILE OFFENDERS TO STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10598, to provide for the transportation of certain juvenile offenders to States under the law of which they have committed offenses or are delinquent, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make a statement. It was upon my objection that this bill was passed over on May 16 (see p. 10351). Subsequent thereto the Attorney General and the Director of Prisons discussed the matter with me; it appears that their intention is that this bill shall be made to apply to juvenile offenders only; that it is not intended that this bill should be made to apply to that class of prisoners which might otherwise be sent to reformatories. That being the understanding, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of cooperating with States (and for the purposes of this act the words "State" and "States" shall include the District of Columbia) in the care and "States" shall include the District of Columbia) in the care and treatment of juvenile offenders, whenever any person under 21 years of age shall have been arrested, charged with the commission of any crime punishable in any court of the United States or of the District of Columbia, and, after investigation by the Department of Justice, it shall appear that such person has committed a criminal offense or is a delinquent under the laws of any State that can and will assume jurisdiction over such juvenile and will take him into custody and deal with him according to the laws of such States, and that it will be to the best interest of the United States and of the juvenile offender to surrender the offender to the authorities of such State, the United States attorney of the district in which such person has been arrested is authorized to forego the prosecution of such person and surrender him as herein provided.

It shall be the duty of the United States marshal of such dis-herein provided.

It shall be the duty of the United States marshal of such district upon written order of the United States attorney to convey such person to such State or, if already therein, to any other part thereof and deliver him into the custody of the proper authority or authorities thereof: Provided, That before any person is conveyed from one State to another under the authority herein given, such person to such State or, if already therein, to any other part there shall be presented to the United States attorney a demand from the executive authority of the State to which the prisoner is to be returned, supported by indictment or affidavit as prescribed by section 5278, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 662), in cases of demand on State authorities. The expense incident to the transportation, as herein authorized, of any such person shall be paid from the appropriation "Salaries, fees, and expenses, United States marshals."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GENERAL RELIEF BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 251

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-tion of H. R. 12445, a bill to relieve destitution, to broaden the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the lending powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and to create employment by authorizing and expediting a public-works program and providing a method of financing such program, and any points of order against said bill are hereby walved. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the rule may be read for the information of the House. I understand this is a liberal rule, and I would like to have it read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair objects. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT OF THE CRIMINAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11084, to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States, as amended (U.S. C., title 18, secs. 80, 82, 83, 84, 85, and 86), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 35. Whoever shall make or cause to be made, or present or cause to be presented, for payment or approval, to or by any person or officer in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, any claim upon or against the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, knowing such claim to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent; or whoever, for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of such claim, or for the purpose and with the intent of cheating and swindling or defrauding the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, shall knowingly and willfully falsify or conceal or cover up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact, or make or cause to be made any false or fraudulent statements or representations, or make or use or cause to be made or used any false bill, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, certificate, affidavit, or deposition, knowing the same to contain any fraudulent or fictitious statement or entry; or whoever shall take and carry away, or take for his own use or for the use of another, with intent to steal or purloin, or shall willfully injure or commit any depredation against, any property of the United States, or any branch or department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, or any property which has been or is being made, manufactured, or constructed under contract for the United States, or any branch or department thereof, or any corporation in which thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder; or whoever shall enter into any agreement, combination, or conspiracy to defraud the Government of the United States, or any department or officer thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, by obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or allowance of any false or fraudulent claim; and whoever, having charge, possession, custody, or control of any money or other public property used or to be used in the military or naval service, with intent to defraud the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, or willfully to conceal such money or other property, shall deliver or cause to be delivered to any person having authority to receive the same any amount of such money or other property less than that for which he received a certificate or took a receipt; or whoever, being authorized to make or deliver any certificate, voucher, receipt, or other paper certifying the receipt of arms, ammunition, provisions, clothing, or other property so used or to be used, shall make or deliver the same to any other person without a full knowledge of the truth of the facts stated therein and with intent to defraud the United States or any descriptory thereof or convergence of the co the truth of the facts stated therein and with intent to defraud the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States of America is a stockholder, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both. And whoever shall purchase, or receive in pledge, from any person any arms, equipment, ammunition, clothing, military stores, or other property furnished by the United States, under a clothing allowance or otherwise, to any soldier, sailor, officer, cadet, or midshipman in the military or naval service of the United States or of the National Guard or Naval Militia, or to any person accompanying, serving, or retained with the land or naval forces and subject to military or naval law, having knowledge or reason to believe that the property has been taken from the possession of the United States or furnished by the United States under such allowance, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 1025 OF THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10593, to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. STAFFORD objected.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 193, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. DYER, and Mr. JENKINS objected.

•Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up a similar Senate bill, strike out the appropriation, and pass the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The bill has already been killed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The Senate bill is worse than the House

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in order to explain the resolution. This is an important matter. We will strike out the appropriation and pass the bill without it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hate to do it; but in the interest of the House, I object.

SERVICE ON AMERICAN VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6710, to repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purposes of service and protection on American vessels.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I want to point out that unless we pass this bill, it will be possible for every shipping company receiving subsidies from the Government to employ aliens instead of citizens.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; it will allow those who are declarants for citizenship to be employed and bar those who can qualify as American citizens.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. No; it is just the other way round. Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I think while the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is usually right in his interpretation of these bills, he is entirely wrong with respect to this bill. The bill will work entirely opposite the way the gentleman thinks it

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, for one I shall object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman allow me to tell just what this bill provides?

Mr. BLANTON. If they will give us a chance to let the chairman of the committee state the object of the bill, I shall reserve my objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good bill. This will simply give the American citizen the proper ratio on these ships with respect to positions that have been held by foreigners. It will give the American ships 66% per

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is an important bill, and I think it ought to pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How many people know that if we employ as a sailor a man from any other country who has his first papers and he goes broke in England, we put up the money to repatriate him to the United States on his first papers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And will the gentleman also point out the fact that at this very time when we are spending millions of dollars to build up a merchant marine we ought to give the American citizens the preference?

Mr. STAFFORD. And will the gentleman point out that many of his own nationality will not be able to qualify as American citizens under this bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The bill will build up a strong merchant marine and give employment to citizens of the United

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision 8 of section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," as amended by section 1 of the act entitled "An act to amend the naturalization laws and to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and other laws relating to naturalization, and for other purposes," approved May 9, 1918 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 376), is hereby repealed. SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 60 days after its enactment.

With the following committee amendment: Page 2, line 3, strike out "60" and insert "90."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ARCHITECTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9892, to provide that the United States extend to foreign governments invitations to participate in the International Congress of Architects to be held in the United States during the calendar year 1933, and to authorize an appropriation to assist in meeting the expenses of the session.

Mr. LAMNECK, Mr. PETTENGILL, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. DYER objected.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Consent Calendar should be first called.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be amended by striking out the appropriation and passing it without any appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. That will not help, and I object.

FLATHEAD, KOOTENAI, AND UPPER PEND D'OREILLE TRIBES OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2986, to amend the act of March 13, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 21), so as to permit the Flathead, Kootenai, and Upper Pend d'Oreille Tribes or Nations of Indians to file suit thereunder.

Mr. UNDERHILL, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. STAFFORD objected.

CONSERVATION OF WILD LIFE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 263, to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill involves an entirely new policy, that of cooperation between the Federal Government and the States on game conservation. It is very important. I am not ready to pass upon it. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, and may we have it go over without prejudice?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman insists, we shall have to

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I make that request, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

BOWDOIN WELL, MONTANA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9369, to set aside certain lands around the abandoned Bowdoin well, Montana.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, unless the bill is amended we certainly can not allow anything like this to go through. The gentleman has suggested an amendment striking out everything after the enacting clause and inserting certain new matter. May we hear the amendment read and have it explained?

Mr. LEAVITT. This amendment is in accordance with the favorable report by the Senate committee, to issue a quit-claim deed of all interest of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I have given this bill considerable thought, and I have prepared an amendment that I would like to read to the gentleman from Montana, and ask him if he will approve of it. It is to strike out sections 2, 3, and 4, and substitute the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease said tract of land to the Phillips County Post, No. 57, of the American Legion, department of Montana, for a term of 25 years, subject to the express condition that said post shall use said premises as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that all rates for the use of said premises shall be fair and reasonable and approved by him.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. LaGUARDIA. The whole purpose of this bill is to permit a lease to a private individual, and the American Legion is simply a cover for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not willing to lease any property of the United States for a nominal amount, and have the lessee mulct the public.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is the gentleman willing to give an outright title to the American Legion post?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Committee on Military Affairs has adopted the policy of leasing for 25 years, and I am in favor of that policy here, subject to regulation by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LEAVITT. The form I have here is preferred by the department, and was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. It is a quit-claim deed, with the reservation of the oil.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. DYER. Is not this a new policy? Have we ever done anything of this kind before?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; we have done this sort of thing several times before on different occasions. This American Legion post has a permit now that will continue, but what they want now is to so protect and develop it that they can permit the public its best use for recreation.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin willing that they should sublease it?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; my proposed amendment provides that it shall be under such regulations as are prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will not the gentleman add after the word "use" "not subject to lease"?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman would suggest "without the privilege of underleasing or subleasing "?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that is acceptable to the gentleman from Montana, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. I will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I withdraw the reservation, Mr.

Mr. BLANTON. It is understood that the proposal for the lease retains the hold of the Government on the property, and that that is going to be accepted by the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the understanding. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the southwest quarter southeast quarter and east half southeast quarter southwest quarter of section 35, township 32 north, range 32 east, Montana principal meridian, comprising 60 acres, are hereby withdrawn from all forms of entry and dedicated to the purpose of securing the proper use of the warm waters flowing from the abandoned Bowdoin well, and to other properly related recreational uses.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue to Phillips County Post, No. 57, of the American Legion, Department of Montana, a permit to occupy and use this area for any and all purposes consistent with the general purpose of this act. Such permit shall be terminable only if the area is of this act. Such permit shall be terminable only if the area is used for purposes contrary to the intention of this act or if the said Legion post ceases to occupy and use it.

SEC. 3. Within the purposes of this act the said Legion post may erect within this tract any buildings, structures, or improvements and may allow their erection under such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. The said Legion post may charge and collect such fees and rentals as are approved by the Secretary of the Interior for the enjoyment of the privileges of this area. Of such fees collected 5 per cent shall be paid to the United States as reimbursement for the expense incurred in controlling the Bowdoin well.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 2, and offer the following as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease said tract of land to the Phillips County Post, No. 57, American Legion, Department of Montana, for a term of 25 years, subsequent to the express condition that said post shall use without the privilege of subleasing or underleasing such premises under such terms as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and all rates for use of said premises shall be fair and reasonable and approved by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out sections 3 and 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAMING OF SUBCONTRACTORS

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9921) to require contractors on public-building projects to name their subcontractors, material men, and supply men, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. TABER. I object.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I object.

PENALTY FOR CERTAIN ALIENS ENTERING UNITED STATES

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10521) to amend an act entitled "An act making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law," approved March 4, 1929.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it should be laid on the table, the purport of the bill now having been enacted into law.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN NATIVES OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11363) relating to the immigration and naturalization of certain natives of the Virgin Islands.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CERTIFICATES OF ARRIVAL AND RECORDS OF REGISTRY

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10274) to amend the act approved March 2, 1929, entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. CLAIR RIVER, PORT HURON, MICH.

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10795) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4581) will be substituted.

There was no objection; and the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., authorized to be built by the Great Lakes Bridge Commission by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1930, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 28, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from June 25, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, OWENSBORO, KY.

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10982) authorizing the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, and permitting the Commonwealth of Kentucky to act jointly with the State of Indiana in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4635) will be substituted.

There was no objection; and the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and more adequately provide for military and other purposes the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, Ky., and the approaches thereto, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER NEAR CAIRO, ILL.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11417) authorizing the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill., and permitting the Commonwealth of Kentucky to act jointly with the State of Illinois in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 4636) will be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and more adequately provide for military and other purposes, the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, be, and it hereby is, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill., and the approaches thereto, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, and/or operation of such bridge and the approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, hereby is authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. If tolls are charged for the use of the bridge, the rates of toll to be charged shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed an amount sufficient to pay the reasonable costs of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and not to exceed an amount, in addition to the foregoing, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the aggregate cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interests and financing costs, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding 20 years from the date of approval of this act. In not exceeding 20 years from the date of approval of this act. In any event, tolls shall be charged on the basis aforesaid for transit over the bridge if revenue bonds of the Commonwealth of Kentucky are issued, to provide money to pay all or any part of the cost thereof, and such tolls shall be continued and adjusted at such rates as may be necessary to pay such bonds with interest thereon and any lawful premium for the retirement thereof before maturity, subject only to the power of the Secretary of War or other authorized Federal authority to regulate such rates.

other authorized Federal authority to regulate such rates.

After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and approaches shall have been provided to the extent hereinabove required, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. Tolls shall be uniform as between individuals and as between vehicles of the same class using the bridge.

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring tolls

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring tolls to be charged for the use of such bridge, except as hereinabove provided, and nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the Commonwealth of Kentucky, acting by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or its successors, from paying all or any part of the cost of such bridge and its approaches from the State read fund or from paying all or any part of the cost of the State road fund, or from paying all or any part of the cost of maintenance, repair, or operation of such bridge from the State road fund of the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

sec. 6. At any time before or after the completion of such bridge the Commonwealth of Kentucky, acting by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, and the State of Illinois, acting by and through the Illinois State Highway Commission, may enter into such cooperative agreement as may be agreed upon between said States relating to the construction, financing, maintenance, and/or operation of such bridge, and the State of Illinois may acquire such interest in the bridge as may be agreed upon between said States and upon such terms as may be agreed upon between said States, and upon such terms as may be agreed upon. All, however, subject to the limitations in this act expressly provided or necessarily implied.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR FARNAM STREET, OMAHA, NEBR. The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill

(S. 4401) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and com-pleting the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at pleting the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1932.

AMENDING AN ACT AUTHORIZING COOS BAY INDIANS TO PRESENT CLAIMS TO COURT OF CLAIMS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11120) to amend an act (ch. 300) entitled "An act authorizing the Coos (Kowes) Bay, Lower Umpqua (Kalawatset), and Siuslaw Tribes of Indians of the State of Oregon to present their claims to the Court of Claims," approved February 23, 1929 (45 Stat. 1256).

OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3085) relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report does not comply with the Ramseyer rule under the rules of the House.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects. Mr. BLANTON. I would ask the Chair to rule upon my point of order, because if we are going to require bills to comply with the Ramseyer rule we ought to make them all comply.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman give the Chair an opportunity to look up the report?

PURCHASE OF DOMESTIC SUPPLIES FOR PUBLIC USE, ETC.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10743) to require the purchase of domestic supplies for public use and the use of domestic materials in public buildings and works.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I suggest that the author of the bill consent to an amendment upon page 2, in line 12, striking out all of the line after the word "States." The words stricken are "or to be used for experimental or scientific purposes."

By striking these words from the second sentence of section 2, that section would read as follows:

Sec. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and unless inconsistent with the public interest, or unless the cost is unreasonable, only such unmanufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been mined or produced in the United States, and only such manufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been manufactured in the United States wholly of articles, materials, or supplies mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States, shall be acquired for public use. This section shall not apply with respect to articles, materials, or supplies for use outside the United States, or if articles, materials, or supplies of the class or kind to be used are not mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States.

Mr. GRANFIELD, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. BEAM objected. MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF INDUSTRIAL AND BEVERAGE ALCOHOL IN OSAGE COUNTY, OKLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7123) to provide for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes in Osage County, Okla.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OSAGE INDIANS, OKLAHOMA

COOPERATION OF STATES IN PREVENTION OF CRIME

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10243, granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other pur-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what the difference is between this bill and the one we passed some time ago?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the difference between this bill and the bill which the House has approved is this: The other bill gave permission to States to enter into compacts with reference to service on witnesses beyond the State where their testimony is desired. This bill has the same plan as that bill. This bill goes farther. Its purpose is to relieve the States of the restraint imposed by Article I, section 10, of the Constitution. This article pro-

No State shall, without the consent of Congress . . enter into an agreement or compact with another State.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been evolved by the Committee on the Judiciary with the hope that it may relieve the pressure upon the Federal Government to extend its criminal jurisdiction. The bill carries the recognition that the general use of automobiles and airplanes and other means of rapid transportation has made the difficulty of each State enforcing its criminal laws and policies very great indeed. It is hoped that with this consent, and it is merely a provision of consent-it does not at all modify any law except it removes a restraint imposed by the Constitution upon States entering into mutual compacts and agreements-it is hoped that Congress will give its consent so that States may enter into agreements with each other, if they want to do it, under which they will permit officers with process to cross State lines in pursuing the criminal into another consenting State. It makes it possible for States to make agreements as their circumstances may require and as they may see fit to join forces in suppressing crime.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from New York, a member of the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As I understand the bill will permit abutting and neighboring States to agree among themselves to handle the criminal situation which has developed through new means of communication and transportation instead of calling upon the Federal Government to intervene where there is this crossing of State lines in the commission of crime.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Exactly. My colleague the gentleman from New York has stated the purpose exactlyto permit States to enter into agreements among themselves for that purpose. It is the judgment, I think, of every member of the Committee on the Judiciary that unless we do give this permission and the States avail themselves of it and let down bars at State lines that are only thrown up in the case of pursuit of criminals and States work out as they see fit some policy under which they can cooperate more effectively in the suppression of crime, we are going to have a tremendous increase in Federal cases.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman if under the terms of the bill the sheriff from A State could be called upon by B State to transport the prisoner to B State? Would that be permissible?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Only if the States agree. This is purely permissive. This provision in the Constitution, as is well known to those familiar with the history of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, was intended as a safeguard to the Union against dangerous alliances. It was never intended to hamper the States in working out their own domestic problems.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Let me ask the question in this way: Would this permit the sheriffs of State A and State B to cooperate with each other and act interchangeably with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object purely for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, an opportunity to explain this bill, because some weeks ago we passed a similar bill and I wanted him to explain the necessity for this legislation. It is a good bill and should be passed. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am very much obliged to my colleague. The other bill merely deals with service of witnesses and procuring their attendance. This bill deals with the whole problem of criminal procedure.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does not the bill delegate the power of Congress to two States?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It takes the bridle off and lets them do as they please in working out their problems with regard to crime.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. If this bill is passed will it not do away with the necessity of such bills as our good friend from Missouri had passed some time ago?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think I betray no confidence when I say that my good friend from Missouri thinks it will do that thing.

Mr. TILSON. The bill known as the Dyer bill certainly was a mistake, and this, it seems to me, would remove the necessity of passing such bills.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think so. I think the particular Dyer bill referred to by the gentleman was a good bill and is doing good work.

Mr. DYER. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I want to ask a question about something that has bothered me, and I am sure it has come up in the committee's discussion of this bill. The Constitution provides that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State. Does not the gentleman think that language so broad as to hold that Congress can not pass a general law for the States, but would have to pass a law for each individual State or two States when they want to enter into a compact or agree-

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to my friend that there are a number of grants of power on the part of Congress to States to do various things prior to their specific agreement as to what they are going to do, and I think we can delegate this power prior to their agreement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And it has been so held.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

sider laid on the table.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and in the enforcement of their respective criminal laws and policies, and to establish such agencies, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements and compacts.

MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF INDUSTRIAL AND BEVERAGE ALCOHOL FOR LAWFUL PURPOSES IN OSAGE COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to H. R. 7123, a bill to provide for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes in Osage County, Okla. The gentleman from Texas objected to the consideration of this bill, but he now advises me that he will withdraw his objection if the title is amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to H. R. 7123. Is there ob-

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what bill is this?

Mr. BLANTON. This is the bill to which I objected, but the gentleman has promised to amend it properly.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill provides for the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes on the Osage Indian Reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it merely puts this county in Oklahoma under the same law that prevails everywhere else.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to permit the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer?

Mr. BLANTON. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is for an intoxicating beverage, while 2.75 per cent beer is not intoxicating.

Mr. BLANTON. No; this bill will not permit any violation of the prohibition laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill refers only to industrial alcohol, does it not? Mr. DISNEY. In one county.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Why should one county have this privilege and not all other counties?

Mr. DISNEY. Because of the restriction that exists with reference to this particular county. The Indian law prevents it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The Indian law alone prevents it?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, until we can have the whole system changed and rights restored to the American people. I do not think we should give this consent. Therefore I

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. DYER. Certainly I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me supplement what my colleague has already said. They have some big oil refineries in this Osage country, and because of the peculiar Indian law that applies to this Osage country they can not use industrial alcohol while other refineries throughout the country are permitted to do so. This bill is for the purpose of giving that right in this county, and that is all the bill intends to | do. It is to put them all on a par.

Mr. DYER If the gentleman will permit, the bill provides for beverage alcohol as well as for industrial alcohol. If the gentleman will strike out beverage alcohol, I will withdraw my objection

Mr. BLANTON. That language is in the title by mistake. The gentleman has promised to properly amend the title, and it was on his promise to properly amend the title that I withdrew my objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of March 2, 1917, declaring all of Osage County, Okla., to be Indian country within the meaning of the acts of Congress making it unlawful to introduce intoxicating liquors in the Indian country, shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following thereto: "Except that the manufacture and sale of industrial and beverage alcohol for lawful purposes shall be permitted in said Osage County, in accordance with the laws of the United States pertaining to the regulation of such industry."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, in line 3, after the figures "1917," insert "(39 Stat. 983; U. S. C., title 25, sec. 242).'

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the title.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

Mr. BLANTON. That was the "gentlemen's agreement" we had-that if I withdrew my objection the title would be amended. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which it was understood would be accepted by the author and by the House before I withdrew my objection. Strike out the present title and insert in lieu thereof "A bill to amend the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 983; U. S. C., title 25, sec. 242).

The SPEAKER. That amendment should be offered after the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Blanton to the title: Strike out the title and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"A bill to amend the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 983; U. S. C., title 25, sec. 242)."

The amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN COMMUNISTS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 12044) to provide for the exclusion and expulsion of alien communists.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12044, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (U. S. C., tttle 8, sec. 137), is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Aliens who are anarchists or communists."

SEC. 2. Section 1 of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof as a new paragraph the following definitions at the end thereof as a new paragraph the following definitions and clarifications, to wit:

"A 'communist' within the meaning of this act shall mean any alien who is a member of or affiliated with any organization which, or any alien who, believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches (1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or (4) sabotage, or (5) a doctrine which advocates the overthrow by force or violence of governments, constituted authority, or social order, existing in countries not under the control of communists and the establishment in place thereof of (a) a régime termed 'proletarian dictatorships' and/or (b) a system based upon common ownership of property and abolition of private property, provided that the platform, program, and/or objectives of the third international or communist international shall be held to embrace the said doctrine. No alien shall be held to be a communist under the provisions of this act if he shall prove that he became a member of such organization on account of fear, duress, compulsion, misrepresentation, or fraud."

The SPEAKER. Is a second dcmanded?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington and Mr. LAGUARDIA demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson | opposed to the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to see a stronger bill considered.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill, and I am going to vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized to demand a second.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN].

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill. In effect it follows the recommendation made by the committee appointed to investigate communist activities in the United States, of which I was a member and Mr. Fish, of New York, was chairman.

I introduced a similar bill in the last Congress and again in this Congress. The only difference between this bill and my bill is that the bill under consideration seeks to define the word "communist."

The purpose of the bill is to put the communist on the same basis as an anarchist. Under our present immigration law a communist may be deported, but it must be proven in each individual case that he is a member of or affiliated with an organization which has for its purpose the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. In other words, it is necessary for the Government to prove in each case the purpose and manifesto of the communist organization.

Should the bill under consideration become law, a communist may be deported on his admission or on proof that he is a communist or affiliated with the communist organization. Therefore it will materially aid in the speedy deportation of all alien communists.

There is no question but that legislation of this kind is urgently needed. The very fact that an alien is an anarchist subjects him to deportation. There is no reason why the same should not apply to communists. The communist is a thousand times worse than an anarchist. He has an organization behind him which is world-wide in its scope, while an anarchist usually functions as an individual. An anarchist believes in no form of organized government, while a communist believes only in the soviet form of government as it exists in Russia.

The communist movement in this country is controlled by aliens. It was estimated before our communist investigating committee that 90 per cent of those connected with the communist movement in this country are aliens and naturalized citizens. Very few native Americans are connected with the movement. If this bill is passed it will assist the Immigration Bureau in deporting these alien communists to the country whence they came.

I have always maintained, and maintain now, that if these aliens whom we permit to come to this country and to live here under the protection of the American flag, can not obey our laws and live in accordance with our form of government, let them go back to the country of their birth. [Applause.] They must understand that if they advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence they will be deported. We are not seeking to control the form of government they have in Russia, and therefore we should not permit these aliens to adopt and plan to bring into existence a soviet form of government in the United States.

Communism is an organized effort to overthrow organized governments. Its objectives are the abolition of government, ownership of private property, religion, and family relations. The Communist Party in this country is an organization whose avowed belief and aim is the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

Those aliens who believe in communism or who are affiliated with the Communist Party must sooner or later learn that while they are living here the Government of the United States will not permit or tolerate their insidious activities. No alien or naturalized citizen can be a communist and at the same time be loyal to the Government of the United States and its flag.

We have in Washington to-day a number of ex-service men who have come here for the purpose of advocating the payment of their adjusted-service certificates. I want to give them this warning. Be careful of this radical group who have injected themselves into your ranks; most of whom are aliens and many of whom never served a day in the United States Army. This communist group is here for the purpose of instigating trouble.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the proponents of this bill will be fair enough to point out what there is in this bill that is not in existing law.

You now provide in existing law that any alien who believes in the overthrow of government by force or violence is not admissible and, if admitted, is deportable. So this bill does not add anything.

You also provide in existing law that anyone who seeks to assassinate officials is deportable, and that therefore is fully covered by law.

The only change I can find is the expansion of the word "sabotage," and this, no doubt, has been suggested by the open-shop people of the country who would use this as a means of preventing workers from asserting their rights, and the right to deport a man for mere thinking. This bill is not intended to cover the dangerous radical using bombs and advocating violence; it is intended to give any bigot, or any employer, or any minor official the power to brand anyone a communist, make his own definition and hookup, and then deport the victim.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This bill does two things; first, it adds to the act of 1918, as amended, the word "communist," and then ties subdivision (c) of the same act in with the definition, the definition being almost in the same words as section (c); so there is one definition altogether for the purpose of making sure that the communist is included in the act of 1918, for the purposes of exclusion and for expulsion.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The definition in the old law, the existing law, is that any person who is a member or affiliated with any organization who believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or all forms of law, and so forth, is not admissible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, this describes the same thing and adds the clause which I read:

(b) A system based upon common ownership of property and the abolition of private property, provided that the platform, program, and all objectives of the Third Internationale, or Communist Internationale, shall be held to embrace the said doctrine.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. How can that in any way be put into a written law, how can you put an interpretation of any school of economics, how can you tie in belief of public ownership with a class of people who believe in the assassination or the overthrow of government by force?

There are many on the floor of this House who have advoerated public ownership of water power, Members who have advocated the public ownership of means of transportation. The gentleman from Washington is always fair, but he is now defending a bill which makes the definition so broad as to make it possible to take anyone you do not like, anyone whose color of hair you do not like, and bring him in for deportation as a communist.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have written it so that we think there is an exemption for free speech—

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Where is there such an exemption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. By not touching it. This applies only to those aliens here who will not interfere with the conduct of the United States Government by its own citizens.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That indeed is a new theory of law, protecting free speech by not touching it. Is the gentleman from Washington familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court as to what the term "communist" means?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and another one has been handed down but recently.

Mr. Laguardia. I feel that this bill is not necessary, that existing law is sufficiently broad, and this is only a justification to give the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish], who has lectured all over the country on communism, the opportunity to say that he got some bill through for the thousands of dollars of public money spent on his silly investigation.

Mr. BLANTON. I am relying on the gentleman from New York to give me some time.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, under the privilege accorded to me to revise and extend my remarks, I shall discuss this subject at length, because I believe that the importance of the matter and the necessity for information on the subject justify me in doing so.

I do not agree with the statements made by Congressman LaGuardia in opposition to this bill. As the author of the bill, I can say it does not seek to accomplish the purpose which the gentleman believes it does. Under the present law alien communists are not excludable or deportable as such. They may be excluded or deported upon some other ground but not simply because they are communists. The present law reads, in effect: "That the following aliens shall be excluded from the United States: (a) Aliens who are anarchists." This bill adds after the word "anarchists" the words: "or communists."

WHAT SECTION 2 ADDS TO LAW

Section 2 of this bill adds an entirely new subdivision at the end of section 1 of existing law and this new matter is added to define and clarify what classes of aliens may be considered as communists, and, as such, subject to exclusion and expulsion. Section 2 of this bill also defines a communist as—any alien who is a member of or affiliated with any organization which, or any alien who, believes in, advocates, or teaches (1) the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property, or (4) sabotage, or (5) a doctrine which advocates the overthrow by force or violence of governments, constituted authority, or social order, existing in countries not under the control of communists and the establishment in place thereof of (a) a régime termed "proletarian dictatorship" and/or (b) a system based upon common ownership of property and abolition of private property, provided that the platform, program, and/or objectives of the Third International or Communist International shall be held to embrace the said doctrine.

BILL WILL NOT AFFECT VICTIMS OF FORCE OR FRAUD

It is plain that the proposed bill will not affect any alien who merely subscribes to a doctrine which advocates a system based upon common ownership of property and such abolition of private property, or the common ownership of the means of production, unless such alien believes in, advises, or advocates the establishment of this system by force or violence. This definition will there fore exempt any organization or alien who, although subscribing to the doctrine of a system of common ownership of property and the abolition of private property, or the common ownership of the means of production, does not believe in, advise, or advocate the establishment of this system by force or violence.

NECESSITY FOR DEFINITION OF "COMMUNISTS"

Many of the bills before our committee, such as the Bachmann bill, simply propose to accomplish what section 1 of this bill does. They fail to contain any definition of "a communist." Our committee was convinced, after extended hearings, that some adequate definition of a communist should be placed in a bill of this character, and the definition incorporated in this bill is a correct and accurate definition of the revolutionary and radical type of communists that we are seeking to exclude and expel from this country.

BILL DOES NOT APPLY TO SOCIALISM

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not apply to socialism, which advocates common ownership of property to be achieved through lawful and peaceable means. Socialism and communism are derived from the same source—Karl Marx. They differ only in the means by which they endeavor to destroy property and individualism. The communist advocates violence and revolution, whereas the socialist advocates change through election. One advocates the bullet, the other the ballot. The foundation stone of modern communism, the communistic manifesto of Marx and Engles declares:

The theory of the communist may be summed up in the single sentence: Abolition of private property.

The writings of communism—especially of its founders—advocate scientific communism, a communism based on the materialistic conception of history. The principle of historic materialism in which Marxian or scientific communism is founded is opposed to religion because it denies the existence of a Supreme Being. Karl Marx, the founder of modern socialism, states:

Religion is a fantastic degradation of human nature.

All the great leaders of communism have uttered similar declarations and characterize and denounce Christianity and any belief in or hope of a hereafter as an opiate and an illusion.

BILL APPROVED BY DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND LABOR

Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval and endorsement of the Department of State and the Department of Labor. The fact that the law does not now make an alien communist, as such, subject to exclusion and expulsion, renders it very difficult for the Government to reach that type of alien communist that it is highly important to exclude or deport.

WHAT THIS BILL WILL DO

The enactment of this proposed bill into law will not only render the direct actionist and violence-advocating alien communist, as such, subject to exclusion and expulsion, but it will relieve the Government of much difficult proof that it is now required to make. When this proposed bill becomes a law, it is believed that the courts will take cognizance of the fact, and relieve the Government of proof, that the communist party, and its affiliated or subsidiary organizations, and others of a similar nature, in their various programs or platforms, believe in, advise, advocate or teach the various things specified in section 2 of this act, and as a matter of administration, the Secretary of Labor could hold that certain organizations were communist organizations within the meaning of this act, with the necessary conclusion that members of such organizations come within the meaning of this act, and as such, are excludable or

In reference to other organizations teaching, advising, or advocating the same thing, and yet whose programs or platforms are not generally known or published, it is believed that the Government will only have to make proof that such organization or organizations come within the meaning of this act, and that thereafter such organization or organizations will be included within the number of communist organizations within the meaning of this act, concerning whose teachings or advocacy the courts will take judicial cognizance, and it is apparent that this will greatly simplify the administration of the law and facilitate the exclusion and deportation of such alien communists as come within the meaning of this act.

DEFINITION OF "A COMMUNIST"

This proposed legislation for the first time specifies and defines clearly "a communist." There is nothing in the law at the present time that specifies and defines a communist, and it is believed that this definition is not only highly important in the administration of this proposed law, but will be of far-reaching consequences in future legislation dealing with communists. It is manifest that in the absence of such a definition, the administration of the law would be so uncertain, difficult, and expensive, and would involve such hardship, as to make it practically of no value. In the absence of such a definition, the courts might define "communist" in the classical or dictionary manner to mean one who subscribes to a doctrine that advocates a system of common ownership of property and the abolition of private property, or common ownership of the means of production.

Such a judicial interpretation of the word "communist," would omit the all-important elements of force and violence in the establishment of such a system, and would do great violence to the eternal principles of American liberty. But with the definition in this bill it can be clearly ascertained by the Secretary of Labor, or by any court having jurisdiction thereof, that an alien or organization either does or does not come within the meaning of this act.

SAFEGUARDS FOR FRAUD VICTIMS

Section 2 of this bill safeguards any alien who shall prove that he became a member of such organization on account of fear, duress, compulsion, misrepresentation, or fraud. There was evidence submitted to our committee which held protracted hearings day after day that communist organizations in some sections of the country had compelled or coerced the employees of certain factories to become members of their organization. Therefore, the committee deemed it advisable and just to permit the alien to prove as a defense (the burden of proof being upon him) that he became a member of such organization on account of fear, duress, compulsion, misrepresentation, or fraud. In the absence of this provision, such alien would probably have the right to make such proof, but the committee considered it advisable to affirmatively give such alien such right in order that no injustice might be done in the enforcement of this

Mr. Speaker, some of the statements that I have made in reference to communism, and some that I am about to make, are not original with me, but have been gleaned from various authentic writings from time to time and jotted down for future use.

MOSCOW CONTROLS AMERICAN COMMUNISTS

From my investigation and the investigation conducted by others, I am convinced that the American communist movement is directed and controlled by Moscow. The communists in this country are organized in what is known as the Communist Party of the United States of America, section of the Communist International, which is subordinate to the Communist International, whose headquarters are in Moscow. Evidence is convincing that the leaders of the American Communist Party proceed to Russia from time to time for instructions and orders and to report upon conditions relating to the communist movement in this country. A representative of the American Communist Party is usually stationed in Moscow for the purpose of advising the executive committee of the Communist International or Third International with regard to conditions in the United States and in the American Communist Party. American communists are sent from time to time to Moscow to undergo training for subsequent work in this country.

Delegates are sent by the American Communist Party to Moscow to attend the world congresses of the Communist International and the meetings of the enlarged executive committee of the Communist International, as well as congresses and meetings of the various international revolutionary organizations controlled by the Communist International. From time to time delegates are sent by Moscow to the United States to enforce decisions reached at Moscow with regard to policies to be carried out in this country.

Moscow enunciates the program to be followed here, at times against the advice of American communist leaders. For years a constant stream of instructions and orders, giving in the greatest detail the activities to be engaged in here, has been sent from Moscow to American communists. Even the dates on which important meetings of the central committee or conventions of the American party are to be held are set by Moscow

EXTENT OF MOSCOW'S CONTROL

The extent of Moscow's direction and control of the activities of the American communist leaders is further indicated by the fact that, on two different occasions, the leaders of the American Communist Party, elected by the party, have been thrown out of office and other leaders put in office on Moscow's orders.

The American communist movement has for years been characterized by factionalism among its leaders, and several groups, including usually a so-called majority and so-called minority, have been fighting for control of the party organization. In the two instances cited, one of which occurred in 1925, the other in 1929, it was the majority group which was displaced and the minority group which was placed in power. Many of the important Moscow leaders have actively participated in the direction of the American movement. They include Lenin, Trotsky, Zinoviev, Lozovsky, and Stalin. None of them, in fact, has been more active than Stalin, for it was he who was the leading member of the American commission of the executive committee of the Communist International which sat in Moscow in May, 1929, and directed the action of the commission which resulted in the replacement of the majority leadership in the American party by the minority group.

REASON FOR MOSCOW'S INTEREST

A reason for Moscow's great interest in the communist movement in this country is given by Stalin as follows:

The American Communist Party is one of those few communist parties in the world upon which history has conferred tasks of a decisive character from the viewpoint of the world revolutionary movement.

It is of interest in this connection to note that American communists who have declined to obey instructions issued by Moscow have been expelled from the Communist International and from the American Communist Party. Many of them now form the so-called opposition groups referred to above.

COMMUNISTS IN EVERY COUNTRY UNDER MOSCOW'S CONTROL

There is, of course, nothing peculiar in the relationship existing between the American leaders of the American communist movement and the Russian directors of that movement. Communists in other countries occupy a similar position of subservience to the Moscow will. In France, in Germany, and in other countries, members of the communist parties who have refused to obey Moscow's direction have been expelled from the Communist International and from the communist parties to which they belonged.

ULTIMATE OBJECTIVE

The ultimate objective of the communist movement in this country (as also of the international communist movement elsewhere, directed from Moscow) is the seizure of governmental power by an armed uprising led by the Communist Party and the establishment, under a régime termed "the dictatorship of the proletariat," of a soviet republic which shall be a member of a world union of soviet republics.

Communist efforts at the present time are directed toward the creation in this country of a highly disciplined, organized group—the Communist Party—capable of leading such an uprising and toward the development of a situation favorable to the ultimate attempt to seize power. The communists do not expect to be able to create such a group or bring about the development of such a situation within a stated period of time.

They realize that a long time is likely to be required to create a party membership sufficiently trained, experienced, enthusiastic, self-sacrificing, and determined to be able to lead an uprising to seize power.

"CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS"-FIRST STEP

Also they recognize that before a situation propitious for such a venture can exist, it will be necessary for them to develop what they term "class consciousness" in the laboring classes of this country. This "class conscious" element, it is anticipated, will support the communist movement and from it will be recruited a larger communist party and "red" trade union membership. This "class conscious" element, led by the communists, will constitute a "mass movement" against the present form of government, against the present economic and social order and against the "capitalist oppressors" of the working class.

MEANS OF CREATING "CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS"

The means by which it is sought to create this "class consciousness" are, at the present time, in part as follows:

First. Promotion of general discontent and hatred for the existing order in the United States, and of a corresponding admiration of the present régime in Russia and all of its policies and activities.

Second. Promotion of strikes and of unrest among the unemployed, and the organization of communist labor unions.

Third. Promotion of unrest and disloyalty in the armed forces of the United States.

Fourth. Promotion of discontent among the negroes.

Fifth. Promotion of discontent among alien elements in the United States.

Sixth. Promotion of discontent and disregard for authority among the children.

Seventh. Promotion among the intelligentsia of discontent with the existing order in the United States.

Eighth. Promotion of discontent among the farmers.

Ninth. Promotion of contempt for religion, especially among the children.

Tenth. Opposition to the deportation of aliens.

Eleventh. Opposition to the restriction of immigration.

Twelfth. Demonstrations and resolutions protesting against governmental action, Federal and State, against individuals. (The so-called Scottsboro case is the best current instance of this. The Sacco-Vanzetti case is the most celebrated one that has been so used in the past.)

Thirteenth. Opposition to American "imperialistic domination" of China and Latin America.

Fourteenth. Opposition to and ridicule of the policies of the United States Government toward the present régime in Russia.

PUBLICITY SOUGHT BY ELECTIONS

As a means for bringing to the attention of a large number of our people the various aims of the party the party has had recourse to extensive publicity in the course of election campaigns. Communists are nominated for public office, local, State, and Federal, not with any expectation that they will be elected but merely with a view to propagating communist principles. It should be borne in mind in this connection that the party does not contemplate that it will come into power by constitutional methods through the election of communists to executive or legislative positions. On the contrary, as pointed out above, it advocates the seizure of power by an armed uprising when a favorable situation shall have been created.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN STRIKES CONDUCTED BY FEDERATION OF LABOR AND COMMUNISTS

It is to be noted that communist-conducted strikes differ fundamentally in character from strikes brought about by the American Federation of Labor and similar organizations in what they conceive to be the material interests of the workers whom they represent. Communist-conducted strikes are only incidentally concerned with the material interests of the workers involved; their principal aim is avowedly the promotion of revolution and the overthrow of the capitalist system. To a communist labor leader, victory in a strike does not mean its settlement on a basis of higher wages, shorter hours, and so forth, but its prolongation until the strikers are desperate and ready for political revolution; settlement is defeat.

OBJECT OF COMMUNIST STRIKES

Every more or less important strike-according to the Theses of the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International (1928)— drives the workers into a clash with the trustified capitalistic giants which have amalgamated with the imperialistic authority of the State. Consequently every strike acquires a political, i. e., general class, character. The development of every such strike should, consequently, result in its acquiring an anti-State character.

A. Lozovsky, head of the Red International of Labor Unions, speaking at the final session of the fifth congress of that organization in September, 1930, thus summarized the attitude taken by the congress with reference to strikes:

* * All the essence of the line of policy of the Red International of Labor Unions is to stand at the head of the growing discontent * * * in the masses, to rally the huge masses * * * to raise every strike to a higher level, to direct every strike in such a way that it be turned against the entire capitalist system, to organize the masses on the basis of their every-day struggle in such a way as to prepare them for the overthrow of capitalism and for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Mr. William F. Dunne, an organizer for the Communist National Miners' Union of the Trade Union Unity League, writes in Moscow in 1930:

The fundamental task of the American section of the Red International of Labor Unions is to crystallize the discontent, the embitterment, and the hatred of the proletariat for capitalism and for the bourgeois state into mass strikes and manifestations, and to manage these latter.

COMMUNIST PARTY OF UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The Communist Party of the United States of America is the only organization in this country all of whose members are communists. There are two closely allied organizations whose members are being trained for party membership, namely, the Young Communist League of America and the Young Pioneers of America. The two junior communist organizations, the Young Communist League of America and the Young Pioneers of America, are, respectively, the American branches of the Communist International of Youth and the children's movement under its control.

SUBSIDIARY COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS

In addition to these organizations, there have been created under communist inspiration a large number of so-called "united front" organizations, the purpose of which is to carry on, under the direction of the party leaders, various activities to further the communist movement in this country. "United front" organizations may be defined as bodies organized, controlled, and directed by communists along communistic lines, but to which noncommunists may and do belong. The purpose of communist parties in forming such organizations is to cause other liberal or radical groups or individuals to unite with communists in the pursuit of limited objectives upon which noncommunists are, even though temporarily, agreed.

Many of these communist subsidiaries, "frontal" or "united-front" organizations are, in turn, branches of world organizations formed and controlled by the Communist International at Moscow. For example, the Trade Union Unity League, which is the communist labor organization in this country, is the American section of the Red International of Labor Unions; the International Labor Defense is the American section of the International Red Aid, whose Russian title, "International Organization for Aid to Fighters of the Revolution," is perhaps more descriptiove of its real purpose; the Workers International Relief is the American section of the International Workers Relief.

STRENGTH OF COMMUNISM IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

The strength of the communist movement in this country is not definitely known. Statements made by leaders of the Communist Party and statements appearing in communist publications indicate that, up to 1931, the total membership of the party did not exceed 10,000. Mr. William F. Dunne, a leading member of the central committee of the partly, recently testified before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization that the membership was then (on March 15, 1932) between 25,000 and 30,000. That was probably a somewhat exaggerated claim, but doubtless indicates that there has been some increase during the past year. Membership figures do not, however, represent the voting strength of the communist movement.

In the 1924 presidential election, the communist candidate for the Presidency, William Z. Foster, polled 36,386 votes in 15 States; in the 1928 presidential election, he polled 48,511 votes in 34 States. In the 1930 elections, 82,651 communist votes were cast in 16 States. The Special Committee to Investigate Communist Activities in the United States, headed by the Hon. Hamilton Fish, estimated the voting strength of the communists at 100,000 in January, 1931, and the total number of communists or active communist sympathizers at between 500,000 and 600,000 at that time. The latter figure was reached on the basis of an estimate that about 70 per cent of the communists in this country are aliens and therefore not entitled to vote.

Ninety-five per cent of the members of the Communist Party are said to be workers. The party policy is very liberal in the matter of accepting new members from the working class, and any worker may join who is in sympathy with communist principles. Persons who are not members of the working class must first convince the party of their loyalty to that class and are admitted under somewhat more stringent regulations. New members are accepted by units (so-called "cells") of the party, are taken in personal charge by individual leading members of the unit, and are formally and publicly accepted in open meetings. The party is very strict, however, in the matter of party discipline, and there are many expulsions from the party, which quickly takes such action for disloyalty to the party or for refusal to obey the orders of party leaders.

STALIN IS DICTATOR OF WORLD COMMUNISTS

The fact that Stalin is to-day supreme dictator of the Soviet State is too well established to require proof. There is agreement on this point on the part of both proponents and opponents of the Soviet Government. For a considerable period after his accession to power, Stalin did not occupy any important governmental position in Russia, but since 1930 he has been a member of the Soviet of Labor and Defense, one of the most important governmental bodies. Actually, of course, his power is derived from the fact of his supremacy in the position of "general secretary of the central committee of the All-Union Communist Party (of Bolsheviks)," over the party organization. From this position he is able to direct the party machinery and, through it, the governmental apparatus and the international revolutionary movement centering around the Communist International and its subsidiary organizations. In this connection, the statement of a prominent Russian communist in December, 1929, on the occasion of Stalin's fiftieth birthday, is of interest. He said that-

None of the more important documents of great historical significance has left the Communist International without Stalin's taking the most active part in its drafting.

MOSCOW DIRECTS WORLD COMMUNIST MOVEMENT

It is an essential part of Moscow policy that the Communist Party in Russia must supply direction and motive power for the operation of both the Soviet Government and the Communist International. With respect to the operation of the Soviet Government, the party relies on the services of party members who are soviet citizens; with respect to the operation of the Communist International, the services of foreign communists, acting under orders, inspiration, and support from Russian communists, are utilized.

The situation described is not new. It has existed since the communists seized power in Russia in 1917. Originally the apparatus of the Soviet Government was itself used to carry on the international revolutionary activities directed from Russia. One of the earliest acts of the Soviet Government was to place 2,000,000 rubles at the disposal of the foreign representatives of the Commissariat for Foreign movement." Later, in 1919, the Communist International was formed as the organization through which such activities were to be conducted, in order that it might be said that the Soviet Government did not participate in such work

While the Soviet Government no longer openly participates in the international communist revolutionary movement, it still remains in fact, as once described by Radek, "a detachment of the international"; and that its official agencies abroad are used as a channel for the communication of information, instructions, and funds, in the furthering of the international communist movement, has come to the knowledge of many foreign governments which have established relations with the Soviet Government.

Finally, it is to be remembered that not only Stalin, but Lenin, Trotsky, Rykov, Molotov, and other leading members of the Communist Party in Russia have held simultaneously important positions in the Communist International and in the Soviet Government.

CONSTITUTION AND BULES OF COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

By the terms of the constitution and rules of the Communist International, adopted in 1928, the central committee of each national section is required to send to the executive committee of the Communist International the minutes of its meetings and reports concerning its work. The leading posts in each party are considered to belong to the Communist International as a whole, not to the occupant of the post.

Elected members of the leading party organizations may resign before their term of office expires only with the consent of the executive committee of the Communist International. Each section of the Communist International must regularly pay affiliation dues to the executive committee of the Communist International, the amount of which is determined by the executive committee of the Communist International. Congresses of the national sections may be convened only with the consent of the executive committee of the Communist International. Communists changing their domicile must join the communist party in the country of their new domicile. The leading body of the Communist International in the period between the world congresses of the Communist International is the executive committee of the Communist International, which gives instructions to all the sections of the Communist International and controls their activity. The decisions of the executive committee of the Communist International are obligatory for all sections of the Communist International and must be promptly carried out. 'The executive committee of the Communist International and its presidium have the right to send their representatives to the various sections of the Communist International, such representatives receiving their instructions from and being responsible for their activities to the executive committee of the Communist International or its presidium.

Such representatives have the right to participate in meetings of the central party bodies, as well as the local organizations, of the sections to which they are sent. They are authorized to speak in opposition to the central committee of the section to which they are sent, if the line of the central committee in question diverges from the instructions of the executive committee of the Communist International. Such representatives are especially obliged to supervise the carrying out of the decisions of the world congresses and of the executive committee.

According to the constitution and rules, the supreme body of the Communist International is the world congresses of representatives of all member parties and organizations. Such congresses are required to be held every two years, the date thereof and the number of representatives attending

Affairs, "for the needs of the revolutionary internationalist | from capitalism to socialism and the dictatorship of the proletariat." from which the following extracts are quoted:

> Between the capitalist society and communist society a period Between the capitalist society and communist society a period of revolutionary transformation intervenes, during which the one changes into the other. Correspondingly, there is also an intervening period of political transition, in which the essential State form is the revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat. The transition from the world dictatorship of imperialism to the world dictatorship of the proletariat extends over a long period of proletarian struggles with defeats as well as victories; a period of continuous general crises in capitalist relationships and growths of social revolutions is a forestarian civil wars against the continuous general crises in capitalist relationships and growths of social revolutions, i. e., of proletarian civil wars against the bourgeoisle; a period of national wars and colonial rebellions which, although not in themselves revolutionary proletarian socialist movements, are nevertheless objectively, in so far as they undermine the domination of imperialism, constituent parts of the world proletarian revolution; a period in which capitalist and socialist economic and social systems exist side by side in peaceful relationships as well as in armed conflict; a period of formation of a union of soviet republics; a period of wars of imperialist States against soviet States; a period in which the ties between the soviet States and colonial peoples become more and more closely soviet States and colonial peoples become more and more closely established, etc.

> Uneven economic and political development is an absolute law of capitalism. This unevenness is still more pronounced and acute in the epoch of imperialism. Hence, it follows that the international proletarian revolution can not be conceived as a single event occurring simultaneously all over the world; at first socialism may be victorious in a few, or even in one single capitalist country. Every such proletarian victory, however, broadens the basis of the world revolution and, consequently, still further intensifies the general crisis of capitalism. Thus the capitalist system as a whole reaches the point of its final collapse; the dictatorship of finance capital perishes and gives place to the dictatorship of the pro-

> Bourgeois revolutions brought about the political liberation of system of productive relationships that had already established a system of productive relationships that had already established itself and become economically dominant and transferred political power from the hands of one class of exploiters to the hands of another. Proletarian revolution, however, signifies the forcible invasion of the proletariat into the domain of property relationships of bourgeois society, the expropriation of the expropriating classes, and the transference of power to a class that aims at the radical reconstruction of the economic foundations of society and the shelltion of all exploitations of society and radical reconstruction of the economic foundations of society and the abolition of all exploitation of man by man. The political domination of the feudal barons all over the world was broken in a series of separate bourgeois revolutions that extended over a period of centuries. The international proletarian revolution, however, although it will not be a single simultaneous act but one extending over a whole epoch, nevertheless, thanks to the closer ties that now exist between the countries of the world, will accomplish its mission in a much shorter period of time. Only after the proletariat has achieved victory and consolidated its power all over the world will a prolonged period of intensive construction over the world will a prolonged period of intensive construction of world socialist economy set in.

> The conquest of power by the proletariat is a necessary condi-tion precedent to the growth of socialist forms of economy and to the cultural growth of the proletariat, which changes its own nature, perfects itself for the leadership of society in all spheres of life, draws into this process of transformation all other classes and thus prepares the ground for the abolition of classes alto-

In the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat, and later for the transformation of the social system, as against the alliance of capitalists and landlords an alliance of workers and peasants is formed, under the intellectual and political hegemony of the former, an alliance which serves as the basis for the dictatorship of the proletariat.

the proletariat.

The characteristic feature of the transition period as a whole is the ruthless suppression of the resistance of the exploiters, the organization of socialist construction, the mass training of men and women in the spirit of socialism and the gradual disappearance of classes. Only to the extent that these great historical tasks are fulfilled will society of the transition period become transformed into communist society.

Thus, the dictatorship of the world proletariat is an essential and vital condition precedent to the transition of world capitalist economy to socialist economy. This world dictatorship can be established only when the victory of socialism has been achieved in certain countries or groups of countries, when the newly established proletarian republics enter into a federal union with the already existing proletarian republics, when the number of such federations has grown and extended also to the colonies which have emancipated themselves from the yoke of imperialism; when these federations of republics have finally grown into a world these federations of republics have finally grown into a world union of soviet socialist republics uniting the whole of mankind under the hegemony of the international proletariat organized as a state.

from each section being determined by the executive committee of the Communist International, which is elected by the world congress.

ULITIMATE AIM OF COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL, Following the section describing the ultimate aim of the communist is a section devoted to "the period of transition" a state.

The conquest of power by the proletariat does not mean peacefully "capturing" the ready-made bourgeois state machinery by means of a parliamentary majority. The bourgeoisie resorts to every means of violence and terror to safeguard and strengthen its predatory property and its political domination. Like the feudal nobility of the past, the bourgeoisie can not abandon its historical position to the new class without a desperate and frantic struggle. Hence the violence of the bourgeoisie can be suppressed only by the stern violence of the proletariat. The conquest of power by the proletariat is the violent overthrow of bourgeois power, the destruction of the capitalist state apparatus (bourgeois armies, police, bureaucratic hierarchy, the judiciary, parliaments, etc.), and substituting in its place new organs of proletarian power, to serve primarily as instruments for the suppression of the exploiters. * * *

As has been shown by the experience of the October revolution of 1917 and by the Hungarian revolution, which immeasurably enlarged the experience of the Paris commune of 1871, the most suitable form of proletarian state is the soviet state—a new type of state which differs in principle from the bourgeois state, not only in its class content but also in its internal structure. This is precisely the type of state which, emerging as it does directly out of the broadest possible mass movement of the toilers, secures the maximum of mass activity and is consequently the surest. the maximum of mass activity and is consequently the surest guaranty of final victory.

The soviet form of state, being the highest form of democracy, The soviet form of state, being the highest form of democracy, namely, proletarian democracy, is the very opposite of bourgeois democracy, which is bourgeois dictatorship in a masked form. The soviet state is the dictatorship of the proletariat, the rule of a single class—the proletariat. Unlike bourgeois democracy, proletarian democracy openly admits its class character and aims avowedly at the suppression of the exploiters in the interests of the overwhelming majority of the population. It deprives its class enemies of political rights and, under special historical conditions, may grant the proletariat a number of temporary advantages over the diffused petty-bourgeois peasantry in order to strengthen its rôle of leader. While disarming and suppressing its class enemies, the proletarian state at the same time regards this deprivation of political rights and partial restriction regards this deprivation of political rights and partial restriction of liberty as temporary measures in the struggle against the attempts on the part of the exploiters to defend or restore their privileges. It inscribes on its banner the motto: The proletariat holds power not for the purpose of perpetuating it, not for the purpose of protecting narrow craft and professional interests, but for the purpose of uniting the backward and scattered rural proletariat, the semiproletariat, and the toiling peasants still more closely with the more progressive strata of the workers, for the purpose of gradually and systematically overcoming class divisions altogether. Being an all-embracing form of the unity and organization of the masses under the leadership of the proletariat, the peasants, and all toilers into the struggle for socialism, into the work of building up socialism and into the practical administration of the state; in the whole of their work they rely upon the working-class organizations and practice the principles of broad democracy among the toilers to a far greater extent and immeasurably closer to the masses than any other form of government. regards this deprivation of political rights and partial restriction ernment.

The right of electing and recalling delegates, the combination of the executive with the legislative power, the electoral system, based on a production and not on a residential qualification (election by workshops, factories, etc.)—all this secures for the working class and for the broad masses of the toilers who march under its hegemony, systematic, continuous, and active participation in all public affairs—economic, social, political, military, and cultural—and marks the sharp difference that exists between the bourgeois-parliamentary republic and the soviet dictatorship of the proletariat.

the proletariat

Bourgeois democracy, with its formal equality of all citizens before the law, is in reality based on a glaring material and eco-nomic inequality of classes. By leaving inviolable, defending and strengthening the monopoly of the capitalist and landlord cla strengthening the monopoly of the capitalist and landlord classes in the vital means of production, bourgeois democracy, as far as the exploited classes and especially the proletariat is concerned, converts this formal equality before the law and these democratic rights and liberties, which in practice are systematically curtailed, into a juridical fiction and, consequently, into a means for deceiving and enslaving the masses. Being the expression of the political domination of the bourgeoisie, so-called democracy is therefore capitalist democracy. By depriving the exploiting classes of the means of production, by placing the monopoly of these means of production in the hands of the proletariat as the dominant class in society, the soviet state, first and foremost. dominant class in society, the soviet state, first and foremost, guarantees to the working class and to the toilers generally the material conditions for the exercise of their rights by providing them with premises, public buildings, printing plants, traveling facilities, etc.

In the domain of general political rights the soviet state, while depriving the exploiters and the enemies of the people of political rights, completely abolishes for the first time all inequality of citizenship, which under systems of exploitation is based on distinctions of sex, religion, and nationality; in this sphere it establishes an equality that is not to be found in any bourgeois country. In this respect also, the dictatorship of the proletariat steadily lays down the material basis upon which this equality may be truly exercised by introducing measures for the emancipation of women, the industrialization of former colonies, etc.

Soviet democracy, therefore, is proletarian democracy, democracy soviet democracy, therefore, is proletarian democracy, democracy of the toiling masses, democracy directed against the exploiters.

The soviet state completely disarms the bourgeoisic and concentrates all arms in the hands of the proletariat; it is the armed proletarian state. The armed forces under the soviet state are organized on a class basis, which corresponds to the general structure of the proletarian dictatorship, and guarantees the rôle of leadership to the industrial proletariat. This organization, while maintaining revolutionary discipline, ensures to the warriors of the red army and navy close and constant contacts with the masses of the tollers, participation in the administration of the country and in the work of building up socialism. * * *

The victorious proletariat utilizes the conquest of power as a lever of economic revolution, i. e., the revolutionary transformation of the property relations of capitalism into relationships of the socialist mode of production. The starting point of this great economic revolution is the expropriation of the landlords and capitalists, i. e., the conversion of the monopolistic property of the bourgeoisie into the property of the proletarian state. * *

The dictatorship of the proletariat is a continuation of the class struggle under new conditions. The dictatorship of the proletariat is a stubborn fight—bloody and bloodless, violent and peaceful, military and economic, pedagogical and administrative—against the forces and traditions of the old society, against external capitalist enemies, against the remnants of the exploiting classes within the country, against the upshoots of the new bourgeoisie that spring up on the basis of still prevailing commodity production.

After the civil was here because the administrative and the stubborn duction.

After the civil war has been brought to an end the stubborn class struggle continues in new forms, primarily in the form of a struggle between the survivals of previous economic systems and fresh upshoots of them on the one hand, and socialist forms of economy on the other. The forms of the struggle undergo a change at various stages of socialist development, and in the first stages the struggle, under certain conditions, may be extremely savers

STRATEGY AND TACTICS OF COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

The concluding section of the program entitled "The Strategy and Tactics of the Communist International in the Struggle for the Dictatorship of the Proletariat" ends as follows:

In order that revolutionary work and revolutionary action may be coordinated and in order that these activities may be guided must successfully, the international proletariat must be bound by international class discipline, for which first of all it is most important to have the strictest international discipline in the com-important to have the strictest international discipline in the communist ranks.

This international communist discipline must find expression in the subordination of the partial and local interests of the movement to its general and lasting interests and in the strict fulfillment, by all members, of the decisions passed by the leading bodies of the Communist International.

Unlike the Social Democratic, Second International, each section of which submits to the discipline of "its own" national bourgeoise and of its own "fatherland," the sections of the Communist International submit to only one discipline, viz, international proletarian discipline, which guarantees victory in the struggle of the world's workers for world proletarian dictatorship. Unlike the Second International, which splits the trade-unions, fights against colonial peoples, and practices unity with the bourgeoise, the Communist International is an organization that guards proletarian unity in all countries and the unity of the toilers of all races and all peoples in their struggle against the yoke of imperialism.

Despite the bloody terror of the bourgeoisie, the communists fight with courage and devotion on all sectors of the international class front, in the firm conviction that the victory of the proletariat is inevitable and can not be averted.

The communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their aims can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all the existing social conditions. Let the ruling class tremble at a communistic revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win.

Workers of all countries, unite.

LAWS OF OTHER COUNTRIES IN REFERENCE TO COMMUNISM

In some countries laws forbid the existence of communist parties. In them, as a rule, illegal communist parties are organized with aims similar to those held by the legal parties. At times the illegal communist organization directs, controls, and inspires the actions of a so-called workers' or labor party which is legally permitted. In each country the communist party, whether underground or legal, comprises the "Section of the Communist International" of that country. In any given country there can be only one communist party affiliated with the Communist International and contributing its "Section" in that country.

NO DISCONTINUATION OF COMMUNIST PROPAGANDA FROM MOSCOW

The statement is frequently seen that communist propaganda in foreign countries, directed from Moscow, has been or is about to be discontinued. Such a statement is not in accord with the facts. While it is probably true that in connection with the efforts to reconstruct the national economic life of Russia under the ægis of the 5-year plan, there has been a shift in emphasis to the Russian internal, from the international, arena, there is no evidence that Moscow has abandoned, or intends to abandon, its policy of interference in the internal affairs of foreign countries, including the United States. This interference does not consist of merely circulating propaganda literature but of | forming, subsidizing, and directing the activities in foreign countries of organizations whose ultimate object is the overthrow of the governments of such countries. The national sections of the Communist International are no bit less under Moscow's control to-day than they were five years ago. In fact, the numerous expulsions on Moscow's orders of dissenting communists from the parties of which they were members would indicate a tightening, rather than a lessening, of Moscow's control. No one who has studied the international communist movement and become aware of the conviction among the Bolshevik leaders of the necessity for an international communist revolution will believe that the present world situation will not be utilized by them, in so far as possible, for the furtherance of the movement which they direct.

SIMILARITY BETWEEN ECONOMIC FEUDALISM, COMMUNISM, AND SOCIALISM

Mr. Speaker, industrial and financial feudalism produced by the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few is similar to communism or socialism only in the matter of ownership. In an economic feudalism the ownership would be concentrated in the hands of a few individuals or groups, whereas in the case of communism the ownership would vest in the hands of a proletariat, consisting, as in the case of Russia, of several million trained communists at whose head would be a despot like Stalin. An economic feudalism might be more efficient than government ownership and control, but in common with socialism and communism, it would completely stifle the private initiative and the individualism of our citizenship, and just as completely unleash poternalism. Those who advocate the concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a few may not perceive it, but they are advocating the same thing in effect as do the socialists or communists, namely, the destruction of individualism.

SIMILARITY BETWEEN ECONOMIC FEUDALISM AND FASCISM

Not only do industrial and financial feudalism and socialism destroy private initiative and individualism, but fascism as preached by Mussolini and now practiced by Italy also has the same effect. Mussolini's formula is, "Everything for the state, nothing outside the state, and nothing against the state." Under socialism, communism, or fascism the individual exists for the state. Under our theory of government the state exists for the individual. Fascism, communism, and socialism have this in common: They destroy freedom of speech, freedom of thought, and the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience. None of these systems rest on the active growth and moral value of the individuals, without whom the state is a fiction or a monster.

TITANIC STRUGGLE BETWEEN INDIVIDUALISM AND COLLECTIVISM

And so the titantic struggle, not only in the United States but in the world at large, is between individualism on the one hand and collectivism on the other. The question is, Shall a few, whether that few be feudal lords under a system of concentrated ownership and control, or a dictatorship under systems such as prevail in Russia and Italy, govern the masses or shall individual and political freedom be preserved? Shall individualism, as proclaimed by Thomas Jefferson, applied by Andrew Jackson, and interpreted by Woodrow Wilson, be retained as the basis of our political, religious, and economic life, or shall we relapse into the tyranny of an enthroned and governing minority, whether that minority be the communist of Russia, the Fascist of Italy, or the great industrial and financial lords who would seek the control of the wealth, the natural resources, and the industrial power of the country?

THE REMEDY

Fortunately, under our system of government, there is no need to resort to any of these alternatives. Extreme measures of all kinds are equally bad. The only wise and happy course to pursue is the one that lies in the middle of all these extremes. Let us keep constantly in mind that our sacred duty to our Nation and our children's children yet unborn is to preserve individualism in our economic and political life. We can shape our economic and political policies and laws to achieve this end. We can do so without destroying or impairing the efficiency of legitimate industry and business. In some fields of human activity large-scale operations are necessary, but even in these classes of industry individualism can be preserved by distributing a fair share of the economies of large-scale operations to the laborers who are employed and by voluntary effort on the part of capital to give to labor some protection during periods of unemployment.

BEST WAY TO COMBAT COMMUNISM

I think this bill will enable us to protect our shores from an undesirable class of aliens. The most effective way to combat communism and to preserve individualism is to evolve and put in practice humane policies in industrial enterprises, give remunerative employment to the largest possible number of people under working conditions which give full opportunity to ability and likewise satisfy the requirements of human dignity and self-respect, eliminate or reduce to a minimum that insecurity of employment which is the haunting spectre in the workingman's vision of the future, offset the displacing power of the machine by shortening the hours and days of work so as to give to labor the benefit of improved technique and machinery, and emancipating agriculture from the octopus of taxation and tariff which is sucking its life blood and bringing about wholesale bankruptcy and ruin. By concentrating the genius of American inventive mind and capacity to the accomplishment of these noble ends, we can erect the surest bulwark against the waves of collectivism that is sweeping down upon the civilized world. But in the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we are certainly justified and obligated to protect American ideals, traditions, and institutions by providing, as this bill does, for some effective machinery whereby those aliens who come to our shores as guests shall not be allowed to bite the hand that is feeding them.

The communist organizations are bitterly opposing this measure because they know that it will enable the Government to deal effectively and speedily with a group of alien enemies who are actively engaged in America in carrying out the directions of Moscow to produce discord, disruptional and revolution. There can be no true liberty without order, and it is the paramount duty of Congress to preserve order.

BILL INDORSED BY PATRIOTIC ORGANIZATIONS

Although this bill is opposed by the communist organizations, which are sending telegrams in opposition to it, I am glad to say that it has the support of hundreds of patriotic, civic, and fraternal organizations throughout the United States. I wish that I had the space to incorporate these indorsements in this extension of my remarks, but I wish briefly to refer to the splendid resolution adopted by the executive board representing the State Council (Inc.), Junior Order United American Mechanics of New Jersey, New York, Virginia, and in other States, which on the 21st day of May, 1932, adopted resolutions "that we enthusiastically indorse H. R. 12044, introduced in Congress by Hon. Martin Dies, and recently reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and we most respectfully petition Congress its enactment into law." Many patriotic organizations, such as Better American Federation, Legion posts, Lions Clubs, Kiwanis, and the Commondery General of the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, are supporting this bill, and I feel confident that it has the indorsement of the great majority of American citizens, and it ought to be passed as speedily as possible.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] can explain this matter to us.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I shall explain it. Affiliating with communists means when they meet with communists, when they encourage communists, when they speak communistic language to communists from their communists' platforms at communists' meetings. They are affiliated with them when they do that. Now, I can not yield farther.

I am in favor of keeping communists out of the United States; and I want to say to the soldier boys now congregating in Washington that I am one of their loyal friends. I am one of those who have fought to pay them their adjusted-compensation certificates. I was in favor of paying them in cash at the time the certificates were issued. I believe that this is an honest debt that is due them by the United States. It is a debt of honor. We have been making an uncompromising fight for them. We forced the Government in the last Congress to loan them half of these certificates. I am in favor of forcing the Government to pay them the balance in cash at this Congress.

I was the third man who signed the petition to discharge the committee and to bring that matter to a vote before this Congress on next Monday; but I want to say, as coming from one of the best friends to the ex-service men, if they ever attempt, here in Washington or anywhere else, to browbeat Congress with any threats of violence, then I am done with their bill. [Applause.] I am not for their bill when they demand it with threats of violence. [Applause.] The right sort of ex-service men who wore the uniform and upheld that flag in France are not going to make any threats or any attempt to sandbag the Congress of their Nation, and we need not fear from them any threats of violence. If there are such threats coming from these organizations it is not from the soldiery but it is from communists, who are trying to pervade every meeting of every kind in the United States. [Applause.]

I say to-day that I commend their organization here in Washington, and I commend their members now attending their meeting here for discarding the communistic element from their camps and for not allowing any affiliation with them whatever.

I happen to know that during the past few years, when he was the chairman of this committee, the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson] was heartily in favor of just such a bill as we now have before us. He did what he could to get such a measure favorably reported. He has been in favor of restricting immigration and stopping the army of foreigners from invading our country each year. And I desire to commend him for the hard work he has done along that line. He has rendered some valuable service to the country. And the country owes him a debt of gratitude.

I want to commend my colleague from Texas [Mr. Dies] for introducing this bill and getting it favorably reported by the committee. He is doing some valuable work, and I want to hand him a bouquet of flowers for it.

I am sorry that the committee could not see its way clear to reporting out my bill to suspend all immigration for five years. We should stop it all for at least five years. Then we would have an opportunity to assimilate the ones we have here and for Americans to find employment again, for positions now are gobbled up by many foreigners who have come here.

Now the time has come when we ought to stop putting on our ballots any communist ticket in decent American elections. It is an outrage on common decency for a communist ticket to appear on an American ballot. Why do not our parties stop it? Why do not the powers that be rise up in their might, in the interest of the good people of the United States, and take the communist ticket off of the ballot? I hope that the election authorities in my State will never put another communist ticket on any ballot in the State of Texas. [Applause.]

When a man comes to ask the electorate to elect him to office, he knows that when he takes that office he must take an oath to uphold and support the Constitution of the United States. He has not any right to have in his mind a secret thought and intention that if he is put into office he will perform every effort he can to tear down the Government of the United States by force and violence. I hope it will stop. I want to commend the committee for bringing in this bill, and I want to commend the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bachmann], who has done much on the Fish committee in bringing this about.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman insert as a part of his remarks the fact that the communist candidate for President, Mr. Foster, in the last election received over 48,000 votes on the communist ticket?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, in a Nation of 120,000,000 people, when annually foreigners have been unloaded by law, and in spite of the law, on all the various coasts of our country by hundreds of thousands, is it any wonder that we have 48,000 people voting the communist ticket for President? We ought to stop the horde that is coming in here continually from Europe; and if this committee had done what I would have liked to have it do, they would have brought in my bill that would have stopped all foreigners from coming into the United States for the next five years. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and his committee for bringing in legislation of this kind. If these alien communists, who come here of their own free will and accord, do not like our laws, our country, our free institutions, and our republican form of government, all they have to do is to go back home; but if those alien communists insist on remaining here and spreading their doctrine of poison and hatred against our ideals, our traditions, and our principles of government and the American flag, then it is manifestly the duty of the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to deport alien communists. [Applause.] That is exactly what we propose to do now. It should have been done before. These alien communists do not fear our police, our courts, or our jails. The only thing they fear is to be deported back home, where there is no freedom of speech or civil, economic, or political liberty.

I hope the Members of this House will be afforded a chance to go on record in favor of this legislation, so that they can go back home and tell the people in their districts that they took the first opportunity to vote to get rid of the alien communists in the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are a number of aliens who are not really alien communists, in the true sense of the word, except that they mingle with real alien communists who seek to overthrow the Government. I call the gentleman's attention to page 2 of the bill, that we protect persons who innocently are coerced or forced into any communistic organization.

Mr. FISH. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I have given some study to that problem along with the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Bachmann] and members of the House committee to investigate communist propaganda and activities in the United States. Our committee recommended legislation along similar lines, and I am convinced that you have worked out a fair and honest bill and have endeavored to protect the interests and welfare of those aliens who are entitled to protection. This legislation is primarily aimed to facilitate the deportation of aliens who are active members of the Communist Party and all alien communists who seek the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence, and I hope it will pass by a unanimous vote.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not do that which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] says it does, and the gentleman should know that it does not. I invite a comparison of existing law with this bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] knows that existing law is sufficient to deport any communist who believes in overthrowing by violence any form of government. I want that made clear. I invite a comparison. I will read the existing law on this very subject—the act approved! October 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 1012), as amended by an act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 1008):

EXCLUSION AND EXPULSION OF ANARCHISTS AND SIMILAR CLASSES [Act approved October 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 1012), as amended by the act approved June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 1008]

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, is amended to read as follows:

"That the following aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States;

"(a) Aliens who are anarchists;
"(b) Aliens who advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group, that advises, advocates, or teaches opposition to all organized government;

"(c) Aliens who believe in, advise, advocate, or teach, or who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that believes in, advises, advocates, or teaches: (1) The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government because of his or their official character; or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property; or (4) sabotage

"(d) Aliens who write, publish, or cause to be written or published, or who knowingly circulate, distribute, print, or display, or knowingly cause to be circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed, or who knowingly have in their possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, or display, any purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, or display, any written or printed matter advising, advocating, or teaching opposition to all organized government, or advising, advocating, or teaching: (1) The overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States or of all forms of law; or (2) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers (either of specific individuals or of officers generally) of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government; or (3) the unlawful damage, injury, or destruction of property; or (4) sabotage.

government; or (3) the uniawful damage, injury, or destruction of property; or (4) sabotage.

"(e) Aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization, association, society, or group that writes, circulates, distributes, prints, publishes, or displays, or causes to be written, circulated, distributed, printed, published, or displayed, or that has in its possession for the purpose of circulation, distribution, publication, issue, or display, any written or printed matter of the character described in subdivision (d).

"For the purpose of this section: (1) The giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to be used for the advising, advocacy, or teaching of any doctrine above enumerated shall constitute the advising, advocacy, or teaching of such doctrine; and (2) the giving, loaning, or promising of money or anything of value to any organization, association, society, or group of the character above described shall constitute affiliation therewith; but nothing in this paragraph shall be taken as an exclusive definition of advising, advocacy, teaching, or affiliation."

SEC. 2. That any alien who, at any time after entering the United States, is found to have been at the time of entry, or to have become thereafter, a member of any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this act, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported in the manner provided in the immigration act of February 5, 1917.

Why, the identical language as in this bill, Mr. Speaker. So all this grand-stand play of saying this is the first bill introduced into Congress to take care of the communists is not in accordance with the facts. What this bill does, Mr. Speaker, is to amplify the definition of the word "sabotage" in order to make it easier to deport some poor unfortunate fellow who may be working under a "yellow-dog" contract and happens to go on strike.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman say that is not the law at the present time?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes. Let the gentleman show the

Mr. DIES. Look at the report.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Among the definitions in the bill is belief in a doctrine which advocates the overthrow by force or violence. That is the existing law, which I have just read. But in addition to that and apart from the belief in or the advocacy of the use of force and violence is the consideration of any system based upon common ownership of property, one can readily see how far that goes in opening a man's mind and looking into it and saying because he believes, because he studies, some scheme of economics which believes in the common ownership of property he is to be classed as a communist and is to be deported. There are many schools of thought which consider the common ownership of property, who do not advocate the overthrow of government by force or violence.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman is mistaken. The bill specifically provides that only those who advocate the accomplishment of that system by force and violence are included in the bill; and if the gentleman will look at page 5 of the report, he will find the word "sabotage" in the old law, and if he will compare the laws, he will find under the old law it was directed against those who advocated the overthrow of all forms of government.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That is in the law now, I agree,

Mr. DIES. The communists do not advocate the overthrow of all forms of government.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman bears out exactly what am saving.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I can not yield. I am not going to vote in these days, when the whole economic system is undergoing a change and we do not know what change we will be confronted with right here in this Congress before long. to suppress the right of workers to protect themselves in accordance with the law. I say it is going too far. I am going to record myself as being opposed to any such bill as we have before us because existing law is sufficiently broad, and has been so held by the Supreme Court of the United States, to permit the deportation of any communist who advocates the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The law does not tie the thing together.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. What the sponsors of this bill seek to tie is the unfortunate worker who may seek to go out on strike or anyone who is even studying a change in our present economic system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It only affects the alien.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I suppose the next thing the Fishes, the Bachmanns, and the Johnsons will resort to will be a bill to authorize witch burning.

I ask you to compare existing law with this bill and what has been publicly expressed here. Of course, the gentlemen are on safe grounds when they say that what they are going to do is to provide for the deportation of communists who believe in the use of force and violence for the overthrow of government, but that is in the existing law to-day; this bill permits anyone with a personal grievance to accuse an alien of being a communist, and that is all that is necessary to deport him. He may be the most harmless creature in the

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LaGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had some question as to what is purposed in the phrase which would permit the deportation of aliens who believe in the principles of the Third Internationale, or the Communist International?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I do not know. I repeat, it is not the violent advocate of force and violence that would be deported under this bill, as the sponsors would make it appear. The present law does that. This bill, as the gentleman from Washington and others point out, furnishes the "tie in "sorts of "ties"-so that a mere study or a discussion of an economic problem would be sufficient to "tie" the alien with the definition of a communist. It is simply absurd and surely will never pass the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Socialist Party, in their national convention held recently in my home city, while not declaring in favor of the principles of the Third Internationale, yet they did in a way subscribe to some of those principles. I should not like to see a law passed that would give the right to immigration officials to deport socialists. They have rights, even if they are aliens, and if they hold different principles of government and do not seek the overthrow of our Government, why should we deport them?

Wisconsin I agree with him; I agree with the doctrine laid socialists protected. down by Voltaire:

I can not agree with everything you say, but I will defend with my life your right to say it.

That is my position to-day in opposing this intolerant bill. No one has more opposition than I have from communists right in my own district. I do not agree with their doctrine. I do not think it is practicable, but in this day and age of 1932 I am not going to resort to witch burning or resort to the suppression of free speech or suppression of the right to study economic principles or new theories of government. This bill is intended for just that purpose.

I repeat, at the risk of being tiresome, that we have everything you need to accomplish the deportation of communists who advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence in the existing law to-day. This is an open-shop bill, by which any exploiter of labor can take any man who is seeking to protect his rights as a worker and brand him a communist and have him deported.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I just want to get the gentleman's opinion, if it is not a fact that there are many working men who are aliens—not communists, but honest aliens—who are by physical force made to join the communist union.

Now, immediately they become victimized, from the fact that if they are charged with being members of that unionand were made to join it by force—they must prove they are not there of their own will, and the only way they can prove that is by the communists themselves. An alien must prove that he is not a communist by the communists themselves, and that alien will become victimized the same as the alien who is a communist. If an employer wants to victimize him or if the communists themselves want to victimize him they can do so, and there is no recourse for him to prove his innocence.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let me say to the Committee on Immigration that there is something the Committee on Immigration can do to stop the unlawful importation of criminal aliens, and that is to pass proper laws, with teeth in them, against the steamship companies which bring in these men. Nothing is ever done to the steamship companies. They have powerful influence and powerful lobbies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We are going to do that to-morrow.

· Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will vote for that, but I doubt that the gentleman can do it. Why, the alien seaman bill has never been brought up for consideration because the steamship companies opposed it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not the chairman, but the committee meets to-morrow on that proposition.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am not the chairman, either.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to an important provision of this bill as found in section 2 (5) (b). It makes an alien deportable when he belongs to or is "affiliated with" an organization which "believes in " or " teaches " the propriety of a system based on the "common ownership of property."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I pointed that out.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. So that a member of the Shaker religious community or of the Oneida Society or a member of the Brook Farm of Emerson, Thoreau, and Hawthorne, if an alien, would have been subject to deportation?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. That seems to be the very purpose of the bill. Gentlemen, this bill should not be enacted into

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York advises us that he is for the Voltaire system of government.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Let me say to the gentleman from | The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] wants the

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not?

Mr. GREEN. The one thing which I am interested in protecting is the American form of government, the American citizen, and law and order. I am not interested in protecting communists as such, who are undertaking to destroy the home, who are undertaking to destroy the American flag and who are undertaking to destroy all of the cherished American institutions. He is not the man we are desirous of protecting. Recently I read where members of the American Legion took communists to the border of their city and sent them away because they were making their usual un-American disturbances.

The American Legion members are standing boldly against them and for organized authority and obedience to law. Did you read recently where the ex-service men now in Washington in the interest of bonus payment ran the communist from their midst? Yes; the newspaper said the communists were given 10 licks and sent away. These worthy veterans are standing by their Government in its efforts to put down communism. They protected the flag in time of war and are now protecting it against its present great enemy, communism.

The bill should pass. It has indorsement of the House Immigration Committee, the State Department, and the Department of Labor. These departments feel the need of additional legislation on the subject, and while the bill is not drastic enough to suit me, I am supporting it as the best bill we can get passed at this time. If you are against communists who are trying to overthrow our Government by force, then vote for this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes from the Immigration Committee in the regular way. We had before our committee last year a bill introduced by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN], who sought to do one thing, which was to add one word-"communists"-to the law. The law as it now reads, in subsection (a), provides that those aliens who are anarchists shall be deported, and the gentleman sought by his bill to add the word "communist," so that it would read, "anarchists and communists." At that time I advanced some of the same arguments that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has made, claiming that the addition of this word would not add anything to the law, because the present law is sufficient if that is the only word we were going to add. I maintained there should be something else added to the law and that the word "communist" should be defined carefully and clearly so that whenever those who sought to enforce the law were called upon to enforce it they would have a definition in the law itself. I maintained that deportation was a quasi criminal proceeding and that in order to prove a case it was almost necessary to prove an overt act. Simply espousing or believing in a doctrine would hardly be sufficient. It would be difficult to fathom correctly one's thoughts. One might be a communist in thought and belief, but that would not be sufficient ground for deportation. I maintained that the word "communist" should have a definite legal meaning. This was difficult to work out.

When the committee met this year we called together the experts from the various departments that must enforce this law, and they advised us that we should put into this law such language as would make it clear.

Whether it is clear or not will be determined, no doubt, by some court decision. These most dangerous communists are militant international communists; many of them are native born and can not be reached by this deportation law, for we can not deport a native-born citizen. I hope the time will come, however, when we can deal effectively with those who openly advocate the overthrow of our Government, whether they be native born or alien. Any man who incites destruction of the Republic is a worse criminal than a man who incites one to rob or to kill. We need not quibble as to the rights of an alien communist. We owe him the duty to protect him and to treat him civilly, but he has no rights that extend beyond a privilege. He must fit into our order of things or depart. Any Member of this House who really wants to restrict the activities of communists should vote for this bill, because this is the last word in the effort of those who are honest in curbing communistic activities.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. If this bill passes, admission by a man that he is affiliated with a communistic organization will be sufficient for the department to deport him?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes; if such affiliation is shown.

Mr. BACHMANN. Or if this bill passes, if the Department of Labor can go into court and prove he is a member of such organization, he can be deported?

Mr. JENKINS. That is right. The bill should pass, for it is demanded by a patriotic public. This is no time to parley with those who would destroy us. Those who, like a Mr. Dunn who testified before the committee, say that they would adhere to Russia rather than to America in case of war, should not complain at our seeking to protect ourselves from their doctrines.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

CONFEDERATE MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD an address delivered on Sunday by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ELLZEY] at the Confederate memorial exercises in Arlington Cemetery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered on last Monday by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ELLZEY] at the Confederate memorial exercises in Arlington Cemetery:

ADDRESS OF HON. L. RUSSELL ELLZEY, OF MISSISSIPPI

Ladies and gentlemen, surely I do not merit this distinct honor of paying tribute to our heroes of the Confederacy, yet I do esteem

Unfold the pages of southern history and in 1860 you will find in the beautiful Southland a contented and happy people. Heirs of a treasured past, they were loyal, brave hearted, and devoted to certain lofty ideals. They were thoroughly in sympathy with that beautiful spirit the psalm of life—so well expressed by Kipling in these lines: these lines:

"When earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried

When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died.

We shall rest, and, faith, we shall need it-lie down for an eon or two,

Till the Master of all good workmen shall set us to work anew!
And those that were good shall be happy; they shall sit in a

They shall splash at a 10-league canvas with brushes of comet's hair: They shall find real saints to draw from-Magdalene, Peter, and

Paul; They shall work for an age at a sitting, and never grow tired at all! And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame; And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame:

But each for the joy of working, and each, in his separate star Shall draw the things as he sees it for the God of things as they are!"

Then came the great conflict between the States. were committed to certain ideals, and rather than sacrifice these principles, they came forth in defense of a worthy cause. Believing whole-heartedly in this great cause, the sons of the Southland donned their uniforms of gray, and with the tune of Dixie ringing in their ears, marched forth to the battlefields. During the dark days that followed, the Southland passed through the most trying ordeal in her history. To-day we have assembled to pay our respects to the gallant heroes of that period. Brevity, will not permit a detailed account of the activities of that memorable struggle—one that not only wrecked many homes of the Southland, but claimed as a heavy toll the strength and pride of her youth. Yes, property was destroyed, and lives by the thousands were the victims. As a result, the land was left desolate and the spirit of her people discouraged.

We have met in Arlington this beautiful afternoon on Virginia soll—in the silent city of the dead—to pay a loving tribute to that gallant band of southern heroes, who fought and died for a lost cause. In loving memory of their valiant deeds, to-day we are placing wreaths of flowers on their graves—the final resting places of these heroes of Dixle land.

Forever enshrined in the hearts of all Virginians will be the Forever enshrined in the hearts of all Virginians will be the beautiful memory of Robert E. Lee, the outstanding general of the Civil War. On the pages of history we find these words, "He was superb, stately, magnificent, great-hearted, and a devoted leader. No fatherland ever produced a nobler soldier, gentleman, and Christian." Christian.'

"His life was gentle; and the elements So mixed in him that nature might stand up And say to all the world, This was a man.

Loyal Mississippians will ever cherish fond memories of the gallant and heroic leadership of that distinguished gentleman, Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederacy. This worthy leader will forever live in the hearts of a grateful people. A critic made the following comment: "He was true to his country, God, and truth—a soldier, statesman, orator, patriot, Christian gentleman, and martyr."

"Our mighty chieftain breathes no more, His noble form now cold and still, Has fallen at last, life's conflict o'er; Obedient to his Maker's will, As die the brave and true, he dies; He rests upon a stainless shield, The great commander of the skies Alone could call him from the field."

Kentucky gave her Albert Sidney Johnston, who blazed his way to glory at the Battle of Shiloh. In memory of him and the other heroes of this great cause all Kentuckians will ever treasure these words:

"All we know is that they gave
A fame to those ohivairous days,
For they were loyal, and they were brave,
And we can now but speak their praise."

Ladies and gentlemen, I might recite the daring deeds of Stone-wall Jackson, whose courage won the warmest admiration of the entire Nation, and other heroes too numerous to mention, but I must pause to pay respect to the private soldier of the Southland. Unlike the Unknown Soldier of the World War, no marble shaft marks his last resting place; but, my friends, his courage was just as great, his purpose just as noble. His name was forgotten, yet his heroic deeds will forever claim a bright spot in the garden of our memories. With an innumerable host of comrades, his spirit has wafted its way back to the God of peace, whence it came. Lest we forget I call to your mind these beautiful words— Ladies and gentlemen, I might recite the daring deeds of Stone-

"Leader of the men in gray! Chieftain—truest of the true— Write our story as you may,
And you did; but even you
With your pen could never write
Half the story of our land,
Yours the heart and yours the hand,
Sentinels of southern right;
Yours the brave strong eloquence Yours the brave, strong eloquence Your true words our last defense; Warrior words—but even they Failed as failed our men in gray; Fail to tell the story grand Of our cause and of our land."

I should be unworthy of the honor bestowed on me should I fail to commemorate the genuine heroism of the South's womanhood during the trying days of this memorable conflict. The mothers suffered untold heartaches as they bade farewell to loved ones entering the conflict. There they stood helpless as they watched the invader devastate the property. Through her tears she saw the sons of Dixie conquered by a foe superior in numbers, Courageously did these mothers bear these ordeals, and then during the reconstruction days these brave souls bowed in humble submission to the victors. Through all these trying years their courage never wavered. So, my friends, I'd love to place a beautiful wreath of white roses on the graves of these mothers, who so modestly gave to the world a splendid example of genuine heroism. heroism.

"The noblest thoughts my soul can claim,
The holiest words my tongue can frame,
Unworthy are to praise the name
More sacred than all other;
An infant when her love first came— A man, I find it just the same; Reverently I breathe her name— The blessed name of mother."

These heroes and heroines of this lost cause are not dead. Long since have their frail bodies been assigned to mother earth—whence they came—but their brave spirits will live on down through the fields of time. The fruitage of their training is harvested in the virtues of the sons and daughters of the Confederacy. The beautiful traits of southern hospitality are well known in every land. Southern chivalry and courtesy can easily be observed throughout this Nation. Long may the ideals of southern womanhood live within the hearts of our fellow countrymen!

The spirit of their patriotism manifested itself during the Spanish-American War, when the sons of Confederate soldiers responded to the Nation's call. Again in 1917, when our Nation sponded to the Nation's call. Again in 1917, when our Nation appealed to the youth of America to defend this country, the boys of the Southland volunteered their services and responded to the call of duty. Investigate the records of the World War and there you will find a distinct service rendered by the sons of Confederate soldiers. None were more daring—none braver than these lads. The Rainbow Division, and others, made history on the battlefields of France. Ladies and gentlemen, in honor of these—the recent dead—may we pay a tribute of respect. These sons of Dixie to-day sleep beneath the sod in Arlington and in the cities of the dead throughout France. In loving memory of these recent heroes, may I recall to your minds the splendid tribute paid these youths by Lieut. Col. John McCrae:

"In Flanders fields the poppies blow Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly,
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

"We are the dead. Short days ago We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow.
Loved and were loved, and now we lie In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe; To you from failing hands we throw The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields."

RETIRED PAY FOR OFFICERS OF THE ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 12448) to amend the laws providing retired pay for certain officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 12448, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in all cases of persons holding a civil office or position, appointive or elective, under the Federal Government or under the municipal government of the District of Columbia, or under any corporation, a majority of the capital stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, of Columbia, or under any corporation, a majority of the capital stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, or under any State government or any political subdivision thereof, the retired pay of such person from the United States as a commissioned officer or former commissioned officer in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, for the period of his incumbency in such civil office or position, shall be limited to an amount which, added to the annual compensation from such civil office or position, makes a total amount from both sources of $3,000 per annum: Provided, That when the annual compensation for such civil office or position equals or exceeds $3,000 per annum, and such compensation also exceeds the amount of retired pay to which such officer would be otherwise entitled, then for the period of his incumbency in office such person shall receive no retired pay: Provided further, That when the retired pay to which such officer would be otherwise entitled equals or exceeds $3,000 per annum, and such amount is more than the annual compensation for such civil office or position, then in such case for the period of his incumbency in such office such person shall receive such retired pay only in an amount which equals the difference between the amount of such compensation and the amount of retired pay to which he would be otherwise entitled: Provided further, That the term "retired pay" shall be construed to include credits for all military or naval service as may enter into the computation thereof.

SEC. 2. That in the administration of the act of May 24, 1928.

Sec. 2. That in the administration of the act of May 24, 1928, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War," no person shall receive retired pay thereunder unless he served as a member of the Military or Naval Establishment between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive, and it be affirmatively shown that during such period he actually contracted a disease originating in the line of duty or suffered an injury in the line of duty as the result of and directly attributable to the performance of active military or naval service, or unless he served a period of 90 days or more between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and it be affirmatively shown that between November 12, 1918, and july 2, 1921, inclusive, he actually contracted a disease originating in the line of duty or suffered an injury in the line of duty as the result of and directly attributable to the performance of active military or naval service, and unless he is found by the Veterans' Administration to be not less than 30 per cent permanently disabled as a result of such disease or injury at the time of the enactment of this amendatory act under the rating schedule and amendments promulgated pursuant to subdivision (4) of section 202 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 477), in force at the time of the enactment of this amendatory act.

SEC. 3. The Veterans' Administration is hereby authorized and directed, from time to time and at intervals not exceeding five years, to review the case of every emergency officer in receipt of retired pay and, whenever deemed advisable, to reexamine such officer. In the event it is found that such officr is no longer 30 per cent permanently disabled under the provisions of the rating schedule and amendments promulgated pursuant to subdivision

SEC. 4. (a) The Veterans' Administration is hereby authorized and directed to review all claims heretofore allowed with pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, and to remove from the rolls of emergency officers retired with pay the names of such officers as are not found to be entitled to such retirement under the provisions of this amendatory act. Payment of emergency officers' retirement pay in the case of any officer whose name is removed from the rolls by reason of the provisions of this section shall cease on the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which such removal is made. of this section shall cease on the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which such removal is made. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs are also authorized and directed to transfer the name of each officer removed from the rolls of those entitled to emergency officers' retirement pay to the lists of emergency officers retired without pay, and, if such officer is found entitled thereto, to pay, commencing with the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which the name of the officer is removed from the rolls as herein provided, compensation in accordance with the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, notwithstanding that no previous application for compensation has been made.

(b) The review of claims under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section shall be final, except that the claimant shall be given a period of 60 days following notice of disallowance under this mandatory act in which to appear and submit additional evidence or file a brief, after which final decision shall be rendered. No further review after such final disallowance shall be made in

No further review after such final disallowance shall be made in any case.

(c) For the purpose of the review of claims under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section there is hereby created in the Veterans' Administration a board to be known as the emergency officers' retirement board and to be composed of two medical officers of the Army not below the rank of lieutenant colonel, two medical officers of the Navy not below the rank of commander, two legal members from the Veterans' Administration, and one legal member from the Department of Justice. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall appoint the chairman from among the members. None of said board shall be on the rolls of retired emergency officers. The emergency officers' retirement board shall have sole and exclusive jurisdiction in the review of claims under this section. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Attorney General, and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs are hereby authorized and directed to detail, for membership on the emergency officers' retirement board, officers or employees qualified in accordance with the terms of this paragraph. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is further authorized to provide space, equipment, and supplies and to detail such additional personnel as the board may determine to be necessary to their proper function, and the appropriations of the Veterans' Administration are hereby made available for such purpose. The board shall issue such regulations as may be necessary governing the procedure in connection with reviews under this section. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum and decide all cases reviewed under this section, but the board may designate individual members to hold hearings.

SEC. 5. After the date of enactment of this amendatory act no review shall be made of any claim under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, which has heretofore been or shall hereafter be disallowed by the highest appellate agency of the Veterans' Administration at the time of disallowance.

SEC. 6. Every person applying for or in receipt of emergency officers' retirement pay shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. He may have a duly qualified person designated and paid by him present to participate in such examination. If he shall neglect or refuse to submit to such examination or shall in any way obstruct the same his right to claim emergency officers' retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, as amended by this amendatory act, shall be suspended until such neglect, by this amendatory act, shall be suspended until such neglect, refusal, or obstruction ceases. No emergency officers' retirement pay shall be payable while such neglect, refusal, or obstruction continues, and no emergency officers' retirement pay shall be payable for the intervening period.

SEC. 7. All provisions of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby modified and amended to the extent herein specifically provided and stated as of the date of enactment, May 24, 1928.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Woodrum). Is a second demanded?

Mr. KVALE and Mr. BLANTON demanded a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of the committee, opposed to the bill?

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized to demand a second.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes. and I desire to say that in my humble judgment this bill ought to command the support of 90 per cent of the membership of this House, because it is so manifestly in the interest of justice and, principally, because it will put us as nearly as possible where we thought we were when we passed the emergency officers' retirement act on May 24,

I voted for that act and I am still for it as we thought it would be when the question of retiring the emergency officers first came up. The very first bill introduced in this House in 1919, was introduced by my colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

When the question was first mooted, the Veterans' Bureau certified that there would be 895 officers to come within the provisions of the law. During the agitation, up until 1928, the number slowly increased, and when the matter came up for action, a printed list was furnished by the Veterans' Bureau containing 3,250 names. I read over that list. Every man from the State of South Carolina that was on that list I knew personally and I knew that each one of them had sustained serious physical injury as a direct result of his

I am satisfied that every Member of the House at that time who looked at the names on the list so understood. But after the act was passed, the question arose as to whether or not emergency officers should be entitled to what was called the benefits of the "presumptive clauses" in the general compensation law. The attorney for the Veterans' Bureau held that they were not so entitled. However, the matter was referred to the Attorney General, and it was there mulled over, until finally the Attorney General held that the emergency officers were entitled to the benefits of the "presumptive clauses." The result was that about 2,000 officers were retired on the presumption of injury in the service, and the most of these presumptive injuries are of a very speculative nature.

Gentlemen, I was amazed and shocked to find that one officer had been retired on the ground of so-called "social

Mr. BLANTON. Commonly speaking, that means that he claimed he could not carry on the kind of a high-brow conversation that some others could.

Mr. McSWAIN. Exactly. Furthermore, they held that, although he was understood to be suffering from "social inaptitude," yet by the exercise of will power he had overcome that disability, but that he ought not to be penalized for exercising his will power, and so they retired him. [Laughter]

Furthermore, let me call attention to this fact: That whenever a person applies for a job in the Veterans' Administration he has to take an oath that he is in sound physical

There are in the Veterans' Administration 329 doctors. Of the 329 doctors, 225 are retired under this law. Every one of them took an oath when he went in that he was in sound physical condition. Some applied for commissions as reserve officers. When you get a commission as a reserve officer you have to show that you are in sound physical condition. Some applied for reinstatement in life insurance, and they had to be in good health.

As soon as this law was passed a sort of an epidemic of disability arose, and when the applications were pending some of them went to the training camps in the summer and drew pay as reserve officers and also drew pay as retired officers for the same period.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am for the bill; but I am wondering whether section 1 of the bill applies to emergency offi-

Mr. McSWAIN. I am so informed, for since the question was asked me, I inquired of the attorneys of the Veterans' Administration, and they informed me that it applies to the emergency officers, and that is my opinion also. We held extensive hearings. This bundle of papers here constitutes exhibits. There is a collection of typewritten hearings which have not yet been printed which is as high as this bundle of exhibits.

Mr. Speaker, my father was a doctor. It is very sad for me to say that the showing made here compels the conclusion that 68 per cent of all of the doctors in the Veterans' Administration have been retired, and convinces my mind that there was a gigantic game of back scratching. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three minutes. At this time I pay my respects to the chairman of my committee, with whom I differ. I cordially dislike to be put in the position of differing with him or with members of the committee who have to-day reported this bill and seek to pass it under suspension of the rules.

Had the bill been brought in under a special rule or under the rules of the House, so that we might have discussed some of the unwise provisions it contains and might have amended it in important regards, I perhaps would not to-day be opposing the passage of the bill.

I was absent Saturday morning at the brief session of the committee, consuming but a few minutes, at which the bill was reported to the full committee and reported out by the committee before the House met at 10 o'clock. Had I been there, I might have requested the privilege of filing minority views, yet that would not have helped things, for the reason that until a few moments ago the report was not available to the Members of the House, and I honestly doubt that more than 10 now present have as much as seen it.

I have not demanded a second in order to consume the full 20 minutes, for debate is evidently useless. At this point I am going to yield 10 minutes of my time to one who favors not only this bill but a much broader and more comprehensive measure. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time. I commend every member of the Committee on Military Affairs for the earnest and patient hearing they have given this piece of legislation. It does not go as far as I would have it go; but as far as it does go, it is in the right direction.

For instance, I have in mind now a prominent major general who is retired and who has been retired for several years on a major general's retired pay of $6,000 a year, which he is drawing for life from the Government, with all the other perquisites that go to a retired major general, who for several years in addition to that has been able to draw $50,000 a year from a corporation. Why does not this bill stop him from drawing his major general's retired pay? I have in mind two admirals who for several years have been retired as admirals, with all of the perquisites of an admiral, one of them getting $35,000 a year from a corporation and the other who had been getting up to the time he died a short time ago $50,000 a year from a corporation. If they were able to draw those tremendous salaries from a corporation, they were able to give their talents and qualifications to the Government that had educated them scientifically through a number of years at great expense.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. These officers to whom the gentleman makes reference were retired on account of age and not on account of disability.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but we ought to put that age up. They have the retirement age down as low as 45 years in certain cases; and if we had stopped my friend from Idaho at that age, we would have deprived the Government of a tremendous amount of good service, and the same concerning my friend from the Northwest here, Doctor Summers; if we had deprived the Government of his services at the age of 45 years, we would have lost much. We need men of experience in charge of affairs, and if they are worth that much to private corporations, the Government ought to get the benefit of their services, because their qualifications are based on the intensive education that this Government has given them at the people's expense.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. If this bill is properly administered, it will do some good. If General Hines will appoint the proper kind of men on this board to review these cases, men who have not been given big retired pay because of social ineptitude; if he will put the proper kind of men there to review those cases, they will hold, as many boards have held, that many are not entitled to a cent of retired pay, and the bill will do some good; but if he lets men like Watson B. Miller, the great highbrowed chieftain here in charge of affairs in Washington for certain high officers of the American Legion, name that reviewing board, you will find every single man continued on it and you will get some more put on.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Watson B. Miller is not properly representing the American Legion, or the splendid men who belong to it, when he causes parasites like William Wolff Smith to be retired at $187.50 per month and draw an additional salary of $9,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Georgia? Mr. PARKER of Georgia. For a correction.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. I always yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. The bill provides who shall name the members of this board.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not name the two board members whom General Hines shall appoint. It provides that General Hines will appoint two members of this board. Of course, my friends are depending upon General Hines to appoint the proper kind of men, but I say to General Hines now publicly, that if he does not appoint the proper kind of men, we are going to hold him responsible for it when the time comes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Should not that naughty little word be stricken out?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I will take that out when the time comes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is offensive to the delicate sensibilities of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall take that out when I come to revise my remarks; but I say that this Watson B. Miller is not representing the American Legion when he puts on the pay roll, for instance, such leeches as this William Wolff Smith that this committee has helped to put off.

Now, I know that there are Members here who will arise and defend Watson B. Miller. None of them can deny that Watson B. Miller entered the service in Florida as a second lieutenant on April 18, 1918, over a year after the war started, that he saw no foreign service whatever, that he is drawing a salary of $10,000 and traveling expenses from the American Legion; and, according to his own testimony, he has spent much of his time on the golf links all over the United States with said William Wolff Smith and he knew all about William Wolff Smith, yet he helped William Wolff Smith override the law and draw outrageous salaries and retirement pay he did not deserve. He knew that William Wolff Smith did not enter the service until October 29, 1918, just 13 days before the armistice, and that Smith then was declared to be physically defective in several particulars and was turned down, but he finally succeeded in getting such defects waived, and got himself a swivel-chair job in Washington.

He knew that just before entering such service William Wolff Smith was employed as a clerk at $125 per month. He knew that Smith had sued Collier and that Collier had proved that he was unreliable and dishonest, and that no reputable publication of any standing would print anything from William Wolff Smith. He knew that when Smith entered the bureau on January 17, 1923, at a salary of $4,-000, he was appointed there by former Director Charles R. Forbes, who was afterwards sent to the penitentiary, and within 13 days thereafter Forbes raised his salary to $7,500 and made Smith general counsel of the bureau, when Smith had never conducted a case in court in his whole life. He knew that under the Welch Act Smith got his salary raised to $10,000 per year. He knew that when the emergency officers' retirement act was passed on May 24, 1928, that Smith immediately, the next day, filed an application to be retired on pay, and that after careful hearing a board composed of Dr. A. B. Cockrell, Dr. J. C. Harris, Judge D. E. Smith, George B. Kolk, and Chairman J. D. Hayes on May 23, 1929, turned Smith down and held that he was not disabled and was not entitled to any retirement pay. He knew that Smith succeeded in getting another board to pass on his case, being section A of the central board of appeals, composed of Chairman Charles O. Shaw, Dr. Garrett V. Johnson, Dr. E. L. Robertson, Dr. J. M. Ladd, Dr. F. Manning, Judge W. L. Piper, and Jesse L. Hall, and this board again turned him down and held that he was not entitled to retirement pay, rendering its decision on April 22, 1930, with Hall only dissenting. Yet, knowing all of the above, Watson B. Miller gave the following testimony for William Wolff Smith and helped him to get $187.50 per month retired pay,

Said Captain Miller testifying that since 1923 (when Smith became general counsel) he and Smith "have traveled extensively together from one end of the country to another, many times sleeping in the same room in hotels and on trains; scores of times during that period we have played golf together; frequently when playing golf together, I have noticed that he held his hand in this position. I have also seen him walk a long distance over the holes with golf club in one hand and his other hand pressed on his lower left side; * * * Major Smith and I are about the same age and weight; on 25 or 30 occasions, when we have been doing similar things, he has had to quit before I did; on one occasion, when we were playing golf, he got as far as the seventh hole of a certain course we were on and quit, and didn't say why he quit, but he had some reason for doing it; it may have been associated with his service-connected disability."

And Capt. Watson B. Miller thus helped William Wolff Smith to be retired and to draw a back check of $5,843.75 on December 31, 1930, and $187.50 every month since then, and also his salary of $9,000 per annum. I submit this to the members of the American Legion all over the United States, that if he had been doing his duty by them and by the United States, Watson B. Miller would not have let Smith perpetrate this outrage. But we have at last gotten William Wolff Smith off the pay roll of the Government.

It was Watson B. Miller who let him do all this. It was Watson B. Miller who played golf with him all over the country from one side of the United States to the other, and let him draw $1,000 traveling expenses a year and helped him get $187.50 a month retired pay and helped him draw $9,000 more; helped him to appoint 876 high-salaried law-yerettes down there in the bureau who have not been performing their duties but have been violating the law, most of them, every day they have been in office.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. William Wolff Smith is out of the service. I want to say if it had not been for the tireless efforts of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] and his persistent drive on conditions in the Veterans' Bureau, it would not have been cleaned out. We owe the gentleman from Texas a distinct vote of thanks for his service. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my friend, but I am not going to take from this committee the credit that is due to them. I take my hat off to the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwarn]. Sick though he has been, he has worked tirelessly every day on these tedious hearings. And I want to thank my friend from Alabama [Mr. Hill], who brought this bill before us to correct this evil. I want to thank each and every member of that committee, even including the generals. They put some obstacles in the way at first, but the evidence was so astounding that it even convinced my friend from Connecticut, General Goss, and he finally was with us, and I thank him. It shows that even he can be convinced with enough evidence.

I want to say in conclusion that much will be accomplished by this bill if General Hines does his duty and if these officers from the Army and Navy do their duty when they are appointed, and I want them to know that every step they take they are going to be watched, as I am going to watch them closely, and there will be other Members of this Congress watching them, and we will see that they do their duty or we will run them out of office.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I want to make it plain that the reviewing board is composed of 7 members, and that General Hines has appointive power of only 2 of the 7. The Secretary of War appoints the others.

Mr. BLANTON. But it all depends on who those two

Mr. PETTENGILL. But provision is made for the purpose of getting a board that is free from too much influence in the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. BLANTON. If he would appoint a board like that brave, honest doctor, Doctor Smith, for instance, brave as a lion, not afraid of the devil, who stood up there, although he was admonished by his superior and lectured, and told us the truth; if they would appoint men like Doctor Barron, brave as he can be, not afraid of anything, who stood there before that committee and gave us the truth when he knew it might ostracize him with that bunch down there in the Veterans' Bureau, if he will appoint men like that, we could get some proper action. I will say to my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzpatrick], who, after all, was instrumental in helping to bring this bill out, although we first had to convince him that it was right and proper, that if such men as these are appointed, we will get the right and proper action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, two outstanding abuses are sought to be corrected in the administration of retired officers' pay under this bill. First, the abuse of retirement pay to officers, which has grown to such monumental proportions, where retired officers hold public positions and still cling to the bounty of the Government; and, second, the greater abuse, which has already been called to your attention by the chairman of the committee, of the privileges of the emergency officers' retirement act, receiving full retirement pay in cases of presumptive injury and not directly the result of combat service, which were not intended to be covered by the law at the time of its enactment. This bill, if enacted, will remove from the permanent roll of the emergency officers' retirement act approximately 1,900 persons who are not entitled to that extravagant pay for presumptive disabilities, and they will be placed back on the same plane with enlisted men to receive compensation under the general law.

We protect all in their pay as emergency officers where they incurred disabilities in combat service prior to the armistice, and even after the armistice, up until the treaty of peace, provided they had seen 90 days' prior service in the war. Every legitimate claim of the emergency officers is protected; but where they have received this pay under presumptive proof, they are eliminated.

The claim made by the gentleman from Texas that this administration may be abused by General Hines is unthinkable, because a board of 7, comprised of 2 medical officers from the Navy, 2 from the Army, and 1 from the Department of Justice, and 2 from the Veterans' Administration, shows that there is no possibility of General Hines controlling the administration of this board.

The country is crying aloud for some correction of these abuses in the Veterans' Bureau. The Committee on Military Affairs felt it incumbent upon them to bring in some legislation. This legislation, in a way, was substantially incorporated in the report of the Committee on Economy; but our committee has been more cautious in safeguarding the rights of those who are entitled to retirement pay where their combined pay from the position they occupy and retired pay is greater than $3,000, and emergency officers' retirement pay who received their injuries in virtually active-combat service, so that those who are legitimately entitled to it can have no complaint whatsoever.

I hope this bill will be passed 100 per cent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I fought the emergency officers' bill when it passed the House. Congress ought to have the courage to repeal that bill now instead of admitting its mistakes piecemeal. But that is not why I am speaking. A question has been raised about the service of Watson Miller. There is not a service man in the United States who has given as much necessary, valuable, loyal, effective service to the veterans as has Watson Miller. [Applause.] No one ought to question his service on the floor of Congress.

May I also say that General Hines, who seems to have been brought adversely into this discussion, never has been in sympathy with the emergency officers' bill, and no one ought to assume on the floor of the House or elsewhere that the things that have been done under it, which the House is now in part correcting, are in any part done by connivance on his part. He has done everything a man can do to prevent the things that are sought to be corrected by this bill. The fault lies not with General Hines, nor Watson Miller, nor anyone else in the Veterans' Bureau. The blame for the abuses that have been experienced lies with the Congress that passed this bill, and nowhere else.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me I can not thoroughly discuss this legislation, but I want to support the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons]. A very unfair attack was made on a fine soldier and gentleman, Watson B. Miller. As chairman of the Veterans' Committee for seven years, I learned to know and trust him. I know he would not be a party to proceedings of any kind that would in any way cause injury to the United States Government. That being the case, and knowing it to be a fact, I think I should join with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Simmons] in making a public declaration concerning him.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. James].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. James].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain] talked about this officer who was drawing pension for "social inadaptability," but he forgot | to mention that this gentleman at the time he got his pension, and now, holds a very responsible position in the Veterans' Bureau.

This bill, in my opinion, does not go far enough. I was against the bill when it was considered by Congress before, made a speech against it, and voted against it.

That was the first time in the history of the United States that a volunteer officer received more compensation for an injury than an enlisted man. An enlisted man who suffers the loss of an arm or a leg is entitled to just as much compensation as a man who happens to be an officer. However, all legislation is a matter of compromise; and when the bill was in committee, I tried to get certain things repealed, but I was outvoted. Now, there are other things that ought to be put in the bill, things like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] talked about, that some of us would like to have had, but it was a case of reporting out something the committee could bring up here unanimously, and this was the best we could get out of the committee at this time. I sincerely hope the House will pass it by a practically unani-

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House the statement of Lieut. Maurice S. Stevenson, president of the Disabled Emergency Officers Association, made before the Committee on Military Affairs May 25, 1932, with reference to a correction and revision of the emergency officers' list. Lieutenant Stevenson made this significant statement:

As the head of the organization of emergency officers, I want As the head of the organization of emergency officers, I want to emphasize as strongly as I can that we—those of us who are on that list—honestly and legitimately consider it an honor roll, and we do not want anybody on that list who does not belong on it. I can not state that too strongly, personally, but I know that I speak for every single member of the organization of which I happen to be the head, by saying that if there are men on that list through fraud, maladministration, or anything that is not covered by the basic legislation, they do not belong on the list I am on. Either they ought to be off or I ought to be off.

I speak as strongly as I can for our organization. We have about I speak as strongly as I can for our organization. We have about 3,500 members now, and I know each individual member would back me up in it if he had an opportunity to do so in person.

[Applause.]

That comes from the one authoritative voice of the emergency officers of the World War.

In addition to Lieutenant Stevenson, Col. John Thomas Taylor testified before the committee as the representative of the American Legion; and whereas Colonel Taylor stated that he thought any abuses that may have arisen should be corrected by administrative action rather than by legislation, Colonel Taylor did make this statement:

If there have been any abuses, we want them corrected, and they ought to be corrected.

Let me say to this House that no man can be taken off the retired list and no man can be denied his retirement pay until his case has been carefully reviewed by the emergency officers' retirement board provided for in this bill; and if a decision is rendered by the board to take him off the list, he has the right to present additional evidence and to plead his case in an oral hearing before the board.

There will be on the board 2 doctors from the Regular Army, not below the rank of lieutenant colonel; 2 doctors from the Navy, not below the rank of commander; 2 from the legal department of the Veterans' Administration; and 1 from the Department of Justice. Even after a man is taken off of the list and denied his retirement pay, he automatically goes on the compensation list and draws the compensation provided by the general compensation law. He receives that compensation which 1,500,000 enlisted men get and which is the only thing they have ever gotten or that it has ever been contemplated they should receive.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. Am I correct in the assumption that any retired officer who is now receiving this pay would continue to receive it if he has a 30 per cent disability and has not but it threatens to drag down with them, perhaps, many employment connected with the Federal Government, regardless of where his service was performed, whether in active duty or assigned to some work with the Government?

[Here the gavel fell.] Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman an additional minute in order to answer that question. Mr. HILL of Alabama. In order for any retired officer to receive this pay he must have received his disability in line of duty, and that disability must be the result of or directly attributable to the performance of some active military or naval service.

Mr. LANHAM. Just what is the construction to be placed on the term "line of duty "?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The effect, after all, of the bill is simply to deny presumption.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I am against this bill and hope it will not pass. Congress passed this law. Men have made commitments, figuring that they were on this roll for the rest of their lives.

If you pass this bill, you will throw out of the Veterans' Bureau men who are perhaps getting $3,500 a year, yet you will permit a retired officer or an emergency officer to go out into civil life and make $50,000 and still get his retirement pay. This bill does a great injustice to men under the presumptive clause who are to be thrown off the rolls and are really disabled as a direct result of service.

I hope the bill will not pass. It is unjust and discriminatory.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one and a half minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, this bill does a great injustice to two classes of disabled officers, those suffering with neuropsychosis and those suffering with tuberculosis. Those who during the war went through the tremendous strain of the front-line trenches with its horrifying existence, its nerve-wrecking experiences, its shell shocks, and all of its ghastly actualities, did not immediately show a breakdown, but after they came back and the reaction set in these cases began to develop.

Doctor Kindred, who sat on the Democratic side of this House and who was recognized in his profession as one of the ablest in New York City, gave it as his opinion that it would be seven or eight years after the war was over before it could be ascertained the number who would break down and suffer from neuropsychiatric diseases, and he declared that even in the next generation the children of these men would show nervous disorders.

How can you say then that those men must prove affirmatively, by positive evidence, that their nervous disorders come from their experience in the front-line trenches? What proof can they present other than that they went through that terrible strain during the war?

Take the tubercular cases. They came on in many cases through the injuries from all kinds of gases, something that was never known in the history of medicine; from excessive exposure, and from wearing down the vitality to the point where the body had no resistance; and yet those cases, although they are recognized as entirely proper for presumptive connection for compensation purposes, are completely taken out under this bill amending the emergency officers' law. Why this discrimination? If it is proper for one purpose, it is certainly proper for the other.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three minutes. The gentleman from California has most ably pointed out the difficulties that will beset any administrative agency which attempts arbitrarily to take out some of these presumptive cases. Reference has been made to the schedule of disability ratings. I have been fighting that schedule of disability ratings for many years and I know many other Members have also.

I want to point out just one little joker in section 3 of this bill that is not only going to affect the emergency officers, enlisted men. I refer to the phrase "in effect at date of | review," which anticipates changes in that schedule of disability ratings. Remember, that schedule now favors these professional groups because they were more mature when entering service, established in lucrative professional occupations, receive therefore a higher variant and can more easily get a 30 per cent disability rating. I only wish I had time to discuss more fully this point.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that within a very few days we will again consider and act upon a bill which, in the name of economy, proposes to strike out about $50,000,000 of benefits now being paid disabled enlisted men and officers of the World War under terms of existing law.

Veterans have not been heard on these proposals; few of us understand their scope or the degree of justification for them. Ah, gentlemen, this bill to-day before us is only the opening wedge. We deal here with a class of officers who do deserve consideration in spite of the many ill-advised and malicious statements made regarding them as a group. After all, every last man of the emergency officers went into the service in full knowledge that he would be required for actual combat; that can not be said of the great share of Regulars, fine men that they nevertheless are.

Of course, there have been and there are abuses of the law. There are a few beneficiaries that should be removed at once, and many more whose files should be most carefully reviewed, and a share of them, without doubt, removed. I favor a revamping of the entire structure, but most certainly not under a suspension of rules as we are here doing.

This bill cruelly slashes double benefits. There are glaring instances that no sane man would defend. But here we strike at many veterans who hold their positions by virtue of the disabled veterans' preference laws. We urged them to enter the Government service. We made it easier for them to enter that service, and to rehabilitate themselves if they were drawing disability compensation. Now we place ourselves in the position of slashing at the benefits which they derive therefrom, with no adequate considera-

Mr. BROWNING Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Does it not militate against one class of people whom we invited into the Federal service, giving them an advantage of 10 points in their examinations? Now we penalize them because they are in the service and allow others on the outside, making the same amount of money, or perhaps more, to receive their retirement allowances.

Mr. KVALE. I thank my friend from Tennessee for his helpful statement. That is the very group I am talking

This bill does more. It requires that an officer disabled after armistice day, whether in the American Expeditionary Forces or in this country, in line of duty, nevertheless show 90 days' service before the armistice. Clearly this must inevitably work an injustice upon many who will thereby be removed from the rolls if this bill is enacted. Mind you, cases that are service connected and which are now receiving benefits.

Again, the bill proposes to have the beneficiaries regarding whom the gentleman from California spoke-those suffering from tuberculosis or from some mental disorder or other ailments presumptively connected with service-submit to an examination every five years or oftener. Think how you literally hang the sword of fear and uncertainty continually over the heads of these sick and suffering men, trying to rehabilitate themselves, their earning power permanently

Oh, gentlemen, it does not pay to pass legislation of this kind in this ignorant and unfair manner. I hope this bill will not be passed under suspension of rules. Let it come in under a special rule, with opportunity given to consider its provisions and amend some of them. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Pettengill], who was very instrumental in the preparation of the bill, with the assistance of an Assistant Attorney General and one of the counsel of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing] I call attention to the paragraph at the top of page 5 of the report:

We must remember that an officer who may be denied the privi-lege of retirement or whose name may be taken off the rolls of those receiving retired pay by reason of the previous action of the Veterans' Administration, as controlled by the opinion of the De-partment of Justice, will not be left helpless and unaided by his Government. Any such officer will automatically be placed upon the compensation rolls and will receive the same compensation every month that every enlisted man is receiving with a disability of the same degree and controlled by the same rating schedule.

So if they are taken off as retired emergency officers and are entitled, as retired enlisted men are, to compensation, they will get the benefit of the presumption that the retired enlisted man now gets. So I do not think we are working any injustice in the matter so far as the presumptive cases are concerned, because they immediately obtain all the benefits that retired enlisted men receive.

This bill will save, it is estimated, from three to five million dollars a year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were—ayes 150, noes 24.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ANTIKIDNAPING

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following privileged report, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 250

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5657, a bill forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped or otherwise unlawfully detained. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking min-ority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be con-sidered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 201

House Resolution 201

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to investigate and report to the House not later than January 1, 1933, the campaign expenditures of the various presidential and vice presidential candidates and candidates for the House of Representatives in both parties, or candidates of parties other than or independent of the Democratic or Republican Parties, the names of persons, firms, associations, or corporations subscribing, the amount contributed, the methods of collections and expenditures of such sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influences, including the promise or use of patronage, and all other facts in relation thereto that would not only be of public interest but would aid the Congress in necessary legislation or in interest but would aid the Congress in necessary legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the House of Representatives.

The investigation hereby provided for in all the respects above enumerated shall apply to candidates and contests before pri-maries, conventions, and the contests and campaigns of the general election in November of 1932, or any special election held prior to December 5, 1932. Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information which to act upon its own initiative and upon such information which in its judgment may be reasonable and reliable. Upon complaint being made before such committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidates, or political committee setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after hearings on such complaints, the committee shall find that such allegations in said complaints are immaterial or untrue. That said special committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the adjournment of Congress, and that said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to sit and act at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpens or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, the production of books, papers, and documents; to employ stenographers at a cost of not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpensa for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties as prescribed by law. scribed by law.

Said committee is authorized to make such expenditures as it deems necessary, and such expenses thereof shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof.

GENERAL RELIEF BILL

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter addressed by me to the editor of the Binghamton Press, Binghamton, N. Y.:

JUNE 4, 1932.

Mr. Tom Hutton.

Editor Binghamton Press, Binghamton, N. Y.

Mr. Tom Hurton,

Editor Binghamton Press, Binghamton, N. Y.

Delivering following speech in House to-day against Garner pork barrel bill: "It would be nice to have a post office in all the larger towns in my district and every Congressman's district in the United States, as is proposed by Speaker Garner, but from a financial or business standpoint such a proposition can not be justified, and I don't propose to be caught by any such sucker bait. I think it is no time to enlarge any building program that doesn't meet the requirements of the President in being on a liquidating basis; each proposition should stand on its own bottom. Sometime ago I saw Secretary of the Treasury Mills on similar proposal, and when I ascertained the Treasury program I assured Secretary of my cooperation, and I am not in the habit of giving my word and then breaking it. We will pass the tax bill quickly to-day; that will balance the Budget, but it is filled with a lot of nuisance taxes that I don't believe should be there nor would they be there if a political campaign were not in the offing, and I prophesy a more sensible and workable bill will evolve within a year that will raise the required funds. I am following the President as the chosen leader in these chaotic times, believing one general is better than a lot of self-appointed political generals and political and financial wizards who have already wished National, State, and local taxes on us almost to the breaking point when commodity prices are so low."

JOHN D. CLARKE.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the communist bill, H. R. 12044, which was passed by the House to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-THE TARIFF

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I submit the following radio speech by myself, May 24, 1932:

This session of Congress has been and is engaged on legislation intended to restore confidence in credit, public and private; balance the Budget; reduce the Federal expenditures; revive industry, trade, and commerce; restore labor to employment; increase prices and markets for the farmers; and in general to speed the economic recovery.

Our national resources are unimpaired; our farms retain their fertility; our labor still has its efficiency and its intelligence; our industries continue to possess the enterprise and ability which has made us the greatest industrial Nation—our people are the best of all.

The amount of gold and circulating medium.

The amount of gold and circulating medium is unusual; deposits in savings banks on June 30, 1930, exceeded eleven billions, and deposits in other banks are large. But confidence in credit is impaired,

Temporarily our march of progress is stayed by a world-wide depression, originating in Europe, and our industry, trade, commerce, and production have diminished, buying power has lessened, immense sums are hoarded, and doubt and apprehension impair that confidence in credit essential to the return of prosperity. But our vigorous people will shake off the pending uncertainty and pursue again their normal advance.

Our national policies include the protective-tariff system, the purpose of which is, briefly stated, to protect our agriculture, labor, industry, and domestic markets, and to provide revenue. The Canadian Premier estimated its value to us recently in the foilowing language:

"The United States learned a long time ago that to become a great nation it must look to itself. It developed its industries and its natural resources, encouraged and protected its agriculture, so that out of a slow beginning it has grown to those gigantic proportions where its strength will overflow its borders. That is the story of the United States."

It is a primary duty of a government to referring the interests portions where its strength will overflow its borders. That is the story of the United States."

It is a primary duty of a government to safeguard the interests of its people and with them to work out the national destiny. All the facts and figures indicate that the tariff is still serving our people beneficially, even if its results are not so obvious as when times are normal. The causes of the recent world-wide depression must be sought in sources other than the tariff.

Since the World War all nations have been seeking new sources by means of which they hope to increase their production and wealth, restore their fallen fortunes, and secure added revenues. These are laudable purposes. They desire as large a share as possible for their products in our normal annual market of $90,000,-000,000. The decline in buying all over the world has emphasized the need for markets. Prices have fallen more in other countries than in our own. This makes our markets the more attractive. Had our tariff not protected our people there would have entered this country an inundation of imports, at prices which would have taken the markets we have and more labor from our workers. More industries would have closed or operated on part time. The depression here would have been greater. The diminution in buying has changed into surpluses, in part at least, what might otherwise have been only normal stocks overseas and added to the quantities seeking markets here. New production abroad is also declining in price, as the recent hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means disclose.

Time will not permit me to detail the protection given our people by the existing fariff or the disasters we would have engangles to the protection given our people by the existing fariff or the disasters we would have engangles.

declining in price, as the recent hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means disclose.

Time will not permit me to detail the protection given our people by the existing tariff or the disasters we would have endured had the tide of cheaply produced goods, made by low-paid labor, been permitted to flood our market.

Some 25 nations of the world have debased their currency on an average of 30 per cent, and this gives them an advantage, and would have given them an insurmountable advantage in our markets had we permitted imports without protective duties.

And now concerning our foreign trade, which it is alleged that the tariff is destroying. This trade in volume has fallen off less than our domestic trade. In the period from 1925 to 1929 the exports of our total production of exportable commodities averaged 10 per cent. It was only slightly lower in 1931. In 1913, under the Underwood tariff, we bought 8.4 per cent of all the merchandise sold by 102 foreign countries. In 1931 we bought 10.8 per cent. In 1930 we sold abroad 7 per cent more in volume than we did for the average of the normal years 1922 to 1926. In our 19 leading foreign markets, which is practically all our foreign trade, our share of their imports last year was 20 per cent, while in the normal years 1924 to 1927 it was 20.7 per cent. In 1930, 66 per cent of imports entered this country duty free, and in 1931, 68 per cent entered duty free. So that the present tariff law has not unfairly affected our foreign trade. It is stated that our world trade in 1931 was the largest in the world.

If the volume or quantity of our foreign trade in 1931 is valued at the prices prevailing in 1929, the imports and exports would each have been in excess of $3,400,000,000, or a total of $6,800,000,000,000, which compares favorably with several normal years.

If the statement were true that the more we import the more we can sell in other countries, then Great Britain should be greatly expanding her export trade; but during the first eight months of 1931 her im only $1,500,000,000.

If the tariff were the cause of the present world-wide conditions and our part of the remedy consisted in our revising the tariff downward, why have not our Democratic friends presented a bill for that purpose, showing what rates they believe should be enacted? No such bill has been prepared or introduced, although they control the Ways and Means Committee. On the contrary, Representative Rainey, Democratic leader of the House, and a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, said in the House on January 9, 1932:

"Lower this tariff drastically? You (Republicans) will not do it, and we (Democrats) do not dare to do it with conditions as they are. We do not want this market flooded with the products of cheap labor of other countries."

This is a frank and open confession that the existing tariff is indispensable to the welfare of this country in this time of depression.

Also, the changes the Democrats have proposed in rates during

Also, the changes the Democrats have proposed in rates during this session of Congress are to add new duties to the tariff act of

The only tariff legislation the Democrats have passed is the bill, vetoed by the President, to submit the economic policies of the United States, including the tariff, to a conference with foreign nations. Our people have always considered, and rightfully so, that we are able to manage our own affairs. This bill is a frank confession by the Democrats that they are unable to administer the affairs of our own country, without foreign counsel, if entrusted with its government. Why ask our foreign competitors what is good for us to do?

The bill destroys the efficacy of the flexible provisions of the tariff, under which adjustments of rates may be effected if changing economic conditions justify an increase or decrease. The Tariff Commission since July, 1930, has recommended 12 increases in rates of duty, 17 decreases, and in 39 cases no change. This indicates that the thousands of rates in the existing law are fairly adjusted. For my part, I prefer to have investigations for the purpose of readjusting duties made by a competent American commission, proceeding on scientific principles and deciding on ascertained facts, rather than to submit them to the political forces of foreign countries, whose interests are those of their own people and are adverse to ours. Why throw the fortunes of our people into the lap of the world? I wish all nations peace, progress, and prosperity. But above all I am committed to the policy of American management of American affairs.

Moreover, under normal conditions, under which we generally live, and will have renewed in the near future, our foreign trade has always grown much more rapidly under protection than under any free-trade policy.

has always grown much more rapidly under protection than under any free-trade policy.

The term "reprisal tariffs" has been applied to tariffs of other nations to the extent that they affect our trade. A rate of duty on a given commodity will naturally affect nations offering such commodities for sale, but not necessarily as a reprisal. Our tariffs are levied generally and without discrimination against any country. We have enacted no reprisal tariffs, although some duties may affect some nations more than others.

Other nations have established tariffs to foster their industries, protect their labor, and to obtain much-needed revenues. The duties imposed affect other nations as well as our own. The phrase "reprisal tariffs" has been invented for political expediency and to promote the fortunes of some whose financial interests are in foreign countries.

phrase "reprisal tariffs" has been invented for political expediency and to promote the fortunes of some whose financial interests are in foreign countries.

In the attacks on the tariff our opponents omit stating the extent to which it has prevented the collapse of American business and industry. Naturally, the importer desires to enter his goods on the terms most favorable to himself; the international banker to protect his investments abroad and secure the largest returns; those who have constructed manufacturing plants abroad, employing low-paid labor, to enter their products into this great market; and the free-trader because of an outworn economic theory. The greatest hegira of American capital abroad occurred under the last Democratic tariff. Investments have been made abroad because of cheaper operating conditions. Had we permitted an increased volume of competitive imports made by labor paid on a low scale to enter this country in 1930 and 1931, they would have ruined our industries, led to unemployment conditions no one can now visualize, and further demoralized the situation.

Our export trade varies from 8 to 10 per cent of our total annual production. The remaining 90 per cent is sold to the American people. How could we benefit by permitting foreign nations to take say 30 per cent of this domestic trade away from us; where would we find markets for our products displaced in our markets by the imports; where would our labor find employment? We have followed the sane policy of giving our Industries, agriculture, and labor a fair opportunity in the home market, and allowing foreign competition to be a regulator of prices, an incentive to production at lower costs by efficient and improved methods. We have a standard of living higher than any other in the world, and because the present depression has temporarily impaired our enjoyment of our standard, I believe our people will oppose any movement that will open our markets freely to foreign competition, because this will inevitably tend to perpetuate

METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The present occupant of the chair understands the Speaker has agreed to recognize the gentleman from California [Mr.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 10048) granting to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California certain public and reserved lands of the United States in the counties of Los Angeles, Riverside, and San Bernardino, in the State of

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 10048, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the reservation, until their disposition is hereafter expressly directed by law, of all minerals except earth, stone, sand, gravel, and other materials of like character, there is hereby granted to the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, a public corporation of the State of California, all lands belonging to the United States, situate in the counties of Los Angeles, Riverside, and San Bernardino, in the State of California, including trust or restricted Indian allotments in any Indian reservation or lands reserved for any purpose in connection with the Indian Service, which have not been conveyed to any allottee with full power of alienation, which may be necessary, as found by the Secretary of the Interior, for any or all of the following purposes: Rights of way; buildings and structures; construction and maintenance camps; dumping grounds; flowage; diverting or storage dams; pumping plants; power plants; canals, ditches, pipes, and pipe lines; flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water for domestic, irrigation, power, and other useful purposes; poles, towers, and lines for the conveyance and distri-Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the reservation, until their

This grant shall be effective upon (1) the filing by said grantee at any time after the passage of this act, with the register of the United States local land office in the district where said lands are situated, of a map or maps showing (1) the filing by said grantee at any time after the passage of this act, with the register of the United States local land office in the district where said lands are situated, of a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said lands and of said rights of way for the purposes hereinabove set forth; (2) the approval of such map or maps by the Secretary of the Interior, with such reservations or modifications as he may deem appropriate; (3) the payment of $1.25 per acre for all Government lands conveyed under this act other than for the right of way for the aqueduct, and (4) for all lands conveyed in Indian reservations or in Indian allotments which have not been conveyed to the allottee with full power of allenation, the district shall pay for the benefit of the Indians such just compensation as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said lands for rights of way shall be along such locations and of such width, not to exceed 250 feet, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be required for the purposes of this act: And provided further, That said lands for any of said purposes other than for rights of way for the aqueduct may be of such width or extent as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary for such purposes.

Sec. 2. Whenever the lands or the rights of way are the same as necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 2. Whenever the lands or the rights of way are the same as are designated on any map heretofore filed by said district or by the city of Los Angeles in connection with any application for a right of way under any statute of the United States, which said application is still pending, or has been granted, and is unrevoked and has been transferred to and is now owned by said district, then upon the approval by the Secretary of, the Interior of any such later map with such modifications and under such conditions as he may deem appropriate the rights hereby granted shall, as to such lands or rights of way, become effective as of the date of the filing of said earlier map or maps with the register of the United States local land office.

Sec. 3. If any of the lands to which the said district seeks to acquire title under sections 1 and 2 of this act are in a national forest, the said map or maps shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture so far as national-forest lands are affected; and upon such approval and the subsequent approval by the Secretary of the Interior, title to said lands shall vest in the grantee upon the date of such subsequent approval.

Sec. 4. Said grants are to be made subject to the rights of all claimants or persons who shall have filed or made valid claims, locations, or entries on or to said lands, or any part thereof prior to the effective date of any conflicting grant hereunder, unless prior to such effective date proper relinquishments or quitclaims have been procured and caused to be filed in the proper land office.

Sec. 5. On the cessation of use of the land granted for the purposes of the grant the estate of the grantee or of its assigns shall terminate and revest in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. Mr. SWING. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin to 20 minutes.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, this bill gives to the Metropolitan Aqueduct, consisting of 13 cities on the Pacific coast, a right of way over public lands to enable them to take domestic water from the Colorado River to those cities to meet the needs of 1,700,000 people living in those cities.

Under the general right of way law, it is usual to simply file a map, whereupon the right of way is acquired, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. But this was found not to be applicable for a project of this magnitude, where these cities are to spend their own money in an amount of $220,000,000, because of the legal question arising of their right to spend bond money on property the cities

This does not take any money out of the Treasury of the United States, but it puts money into the Treasury of the United States, as such public lands as are used for the purposes of power plants, pumping, and camp construction are to be paid for at the rate of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is the bill for which the Committee on Rules granted a rule recently?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The presentation before the Rules Committee resulted in a rule being granted unanimously by the committee.

Mr. SWING. I thank the gentleman for the statement. The Committee on Public Lands also reported it unanimously.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. I will.

Mr. GILBERT. There is nothing in this bill that contemplates the use of this water for irrigation purposes?

Mr. SWING. No; it is for the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, consisting of 13 cities, and none of the water will be used for irrigation projects.

Mr. GILBERT. I am opposed to any more irrigation projects which will increase agriculture.

Mr. SWING. They could not bring any more land into cultivation in California, and this legislation is not for the purpose of reclaiming any new lands.

Mr. HOLMES. Are those aqueducts going to be open, or are they going to be closed of the cement type?

, Mr. SWING. I assume that most of the way it will be closed. However, some of it may be open.

Mr. HOLMES. What is the greatest elevation that the aqueduct will reach?

Mr. SWING. The maximum pumping lift will be about 1,200 feet. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the decision by the Committee on Rules in favor of this legislation under a special rule, with all deference to the distinguished observer on that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'Connor], I wish to state that no bill has been presented to the House where there has been more unrestricted power conferred upon a department head in conveying the property of the United States than the bill under consideration.

Perhaps the Committee on Rules have not passed upon legislation of this character, but I challenge any Member of the House, any member of the Committee on Public Lands, to point out where such broad powers have been vested in a private corporation to take land, a municipal corporation to take land, as may be found in section 1 of this bill.

We grant to this metropolitan water district of Southern California—and I wish to interpolate here by saying that the California delegation has not only in this House but throughout the country has got the reputation of the go-getting delegation. [Laughter.] They get everything they go after. [Applause.] I notice that is applauded by the gentleman from Nevada, of that arid district, where they also get so much out of the Treasury of the United States. Under the leadership of the author of this bill they raided the Treasury to the extent of $100,000,000, which the Treasury will never get back, for the benefit of the people of Los Angeles.

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the other distinguished candidate for Senator. I think it is not fair in a contest for a senatorship to allow one person to have the entire privileges in presenting these matters.

Mr. CRAIL. The gentleman is very generous to Los Angeles and its representatives, but does he not know that the Boulder Dam bill requires that every dollar be returned to the Government with interest, and that the Secretary of the Interior was directed by this body to see that satisfactory contracts as good as gold were obtained to that effect?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that is written in the law; but I think long before even the gentleman ceases his activity in public life he will find that that municipality will not live up to the covenants of the bond.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. Just one moment. Let us get back to the bill under consideration and see what is done. Perhaps

I can give some information to the distinguished gentleman from the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from New York IMr. O'CONNOR!. We grant to this metropolitan water district all lands belonging to the United States situated in these respective four counties, including the lands which are in Indian reservations that have not been conveyed to any allottee. For what purpose? And here comes the go-getting California grab. For rights of way, buildings, and structures

Mr. ARENTZ. Good.

Mr. STAFFORD. Construction and maintenance camps. A Member. Good.

Mr. STAFFORD. Dumping ground, flowage, diverting or storage dam.

Mr. HAINES. Good.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the senior candidate for Senator says "good." Of course he is in favor of grabbing everything.

Mr. SWING. I did not open my mouth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Pumping plants, power plants, canals, ditches, pipes, and pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water for domestic, irrigation, power, and other useful purposes, poles, towers, and lines for the conveyance and distribution of electrical energy, poles and lines for telephone and telegraph purposes, roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transmission, or communication, for obtaining stone, earth, gravel, and other materials of like character, and any other necessary purposes of said district, together with the right to take for its own use, free of cost, from any public lands within such limits as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, stone, earth, gravel, sand, and other materials of like character necessary or useful in the construction, operation, and maintenance of aqueducts, reservoirs, dams, pumping plants, electric plants, and transmission, telephone and telegraph lines, roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transmission, and communication, or any other necessary purposes of said district. Mr. Speaker, it is unlimited, and in the time that the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing] had, he would give you the impression that this bill is going to convey to this metropolitan water district only the right to have a right of way of some 250 feet.

This is much broader than that, with no limit at all, subject to the approval of whom? Subject only to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior comes from California, and he is impregnated with the same virus of giving everything to the people of California, just as a former Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Franklin Lane, was in favor of giving to the people of San Francisco the great rights for flooding the Hetch Hetchy Valley, a valley as magnificent as to be comparable with the Yosemite Valley, which is typical of the denizens of California, to get everything from the Government of the United States. They think they are so far removed that they can grab everything.

Mr. SWING rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman has yet 16 minutes remaining. Give me some of your time, and I will yield. Yield me five minutes of your time.

Mr. SWING. I will yield the time it will take to answer my question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield unless the gentleman gives me five minutes.

Mr. SWING. I will give the gentleman time to answer my question.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman declines to do that, so I decline to yield. He took only four minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman from Washington is in the same category.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I rose just to ask the

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I rose just to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether there is anything left that California does not get?

Mr. STAFFORD. If there is anything left, then Washington and Oregon will try to get it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But I ask the gentleman | or maps by the Secretary of the Interior, with such reserseriously whether there is anything he can think of that can be put in the bill that is not already in there?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not possible, because every conceivable grant is already in there.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. And here comes the irrigation grabber from Idaho. I have had some experience with the irrigation grabber and the bill that he passed through here, which I am sorry to say I supported. I am sorry that I was put in that position, because I had to carry out an outrageous raid upon the Treasury of the United States in carrying out the gentleman's views. I got fully acquainted with the gentleman's views of irrigation, and as far as irrigation matters are concerned, relieving the people out there of their obligation to pay millions and millions to the Government. They do not pay anything under this bill.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman is not fair.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I am going to be more fair to the House than the gentleman was.

Mr. SWING. All right.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman did not explain anything in this bill. I am reading from the text of the bill. The gentleman took only four minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Just a moment. Let us be fair. When they take any land on an Indian reservation they must pay the fair value, and for the land that they take for dumping grounds, storage dams, pumping plants, power plants, and canals they pay $1.25 per acre, but for all the poles required for power lines taken from the public domain, or any sand or gravel that may be required in construction work they do not pay one cent, and yet this bill had the unanimous approval of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I read this bill all land belonging to the United States in the counties of Los Angeles. Riverside, and San Bernardino, in the State of California, which have not been conveyed or heretofore allotted is conveved to this corporation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Absolutely; without any restrictions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. How many water lines are proposed to be constructed under this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand they only contemplate constructing one waterway 250 feet in width.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Where is the language which provides for that?

Mr. SWING. Line 21 on page 3.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is one water line. Now, if they wanted to build half a dozen other water lines they could have 250 feet more for each one.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it is not limited to any one, but I stated in my opening remarks that I know of no bill that grants greater privileges, unlimited, for the purpose of a public corporation, which will charge the people for the use of its water, than this bill. There are no proper restrictions. If this was to come up under the rules of the House, I would offer amendments to safeguard the interests of the Government. I am not privileged to do that under suspension of the rules.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The bill provides that the granting of all these lands shall be effective upon, first, the filing by said grantee at any time after the passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. I direct the attention of the House to that provision which the gentleman has just adverted to, on page 3. This corporation has a right to take in all of the public lands, fit for all these purposes, and it does so by the filing by said grantee at any time after the passage of this act, with the register of the United States local land office in the district where said lands are situated, of a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said lands and of said rights of way for the purposes hereinabove set forth; the approval of such map vations or modifications as he may deem appropriate; then the payment of $1.25 per acre for all Government lands conveyed under this act other than the right of way for

I know the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing], when he went back home last year, made great acclaim to the people of his district that he got through the House, in spite of the perennial objector, STAFFORD, of Wisconsin, a bill that granted great privileges; but if he can make a claim like that for getting through that bill, he will have all the bands in California receive him when he gets back and continue the parade throughout the entire State if he gets this land grab through this Congress.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to grant him the California service cross. Because this Congress for the past few years has been handling some very choice financial plums to the great Commonwealth of California.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, I am taking four minutes to explain in a general way what this bill means.

There is nothing mysterious about the bill. I do not understand how the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] can get so excited about this. I have been over the land where this right of way is to be taken many times. There is not a habitation between the divide where the water will be pumped over into the valley at Riverside and the Colorado River. It is the most barren desert in the United States. The right of way can not be surveyed to-day. It can not be surveyed for six months definitely. It might be a year before the definite plan of that aqueduct is laid down on paper, and it then provides that when the final plans are made, after the passage of this act, they are to be presented to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and be O. K'd by the Secretary of the Interior. Just contrary to what the gentleman from Wisconsin said about payment, nothing is paid for the right of way. The gentleman from Wisconsin said that $1.25 per acre is paid for the right of way and nothing for the balance of the land. As a matter of fact, the right of way over the public domain is given without cost to the city of Los Angeles and the adjacent cities, but for all other portions of land, for dumps and dumping grounds, for pumping plants, and for highway, and for every other conceivable thing they pay $1.25 an acre. If for any reason this right of way is not used, it reverts to the Federal Government. If there is any oil or gas or mineral anywhere on this ground, it is reserved to the Federal Government.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What part of the bill carries that provision?

Mr. SWING. The last paragraph.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Oh, that is not reverter. That is on the cessation of use of the land granted for the purpose of the grant the estate of the grantee or of its assigns shall terminate and revest in the United States.

Mr. ARENTZ. Of course, that is the same thing. Our Public Lands Committee is not a bunch of highbinders. We are trying to safeguard the Government. If you could sit around the table in that committee day after day and consider the detail in which we go into every bit of legislation and amend the bills that come before us to protect the public interest and protect the Government in detail, you would appreciate, as I do, that the Public Lands Committee of the House can be trusted. This bill is a safe bill. It is doing the right thing to the metropolitan areas adjacent to Los Angeles. It is giving them a right of way across the desert. It is giving them a place for their dumps. It is giving them a place for their transmission lines, for their pumping plants, and for every other conceivable thing, and that is fair.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. I yield.

Public Lands Committee who get the handouts from the Government are from the West, are they not?

Mr. ARENTZ. If you want to call them handouts, you

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any member of the Public Lands Committee who is not a westener? And in such connection I will say I am a westerner.

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I was on that committee for two years, when they kicked me out of the other committees.

Mr. BLANTON. But the committee is pretty well lined up with westerners.

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes; because we know our business, and your business, and the Government's business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Colton].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I feel sure the Members of the House are not going to be swept off their feet, figuratively speaking, by the statement that has been made here to-day that we are giving away something unusual in the form of a land grab.

Do you know that under the law now this district could make the proper application and file a map in the General Land Office and get a right of way for any one of the privileges enumerated in this bill? There is no question about that. This is not an enlargement of the law in that respect. It simply gives the Secretary of Interior the right to grant the district a little wider space for this aqueduct, and would allow a right of way for necessary laterals and branch lines of the kind enumerated.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman could only secure a right of way for one main line and the laterals to that line.

Mr. COLTON. Exactly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman could obtain a blanket right of way for the project if he wanted to.

Mr. COLTON. That is what this bill would authorize. This project is the most gigantic undertaking that has ever been commenced by anybody anywhere when it comes to building dams and aqueducts for domestic water, and there is to be spent for the taking of the water from the Hoover Dam to the cities of southern California $220,000,000. This is the greatest dam ever built in the world. This water will be lifted over practically two great divides, one of them perhaps 6,000 feet high, or nearly so. In order to do that it is necessary to float bonds, and to float bonds there must be no question about the security. This bill seeks to give this metropolitan district rights of way which may be offered as safe security for these immense loans.

These lands have been open ever since the Nation was organized and no one has seen fit to acquire title to them. In the main it is mostly worthless land.

So let us not get excited over this matter as my good friend the gentleman from Wisconsin is. The bill simply does for this great undertaking what the Secretary of the Interior could now do for an individual except to enlarge the grant and would avoid the necessity of going to him for individual rights of way for each of the things mentioned in the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COLTON. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. And the citizens of those States will lift the bonds; the Government would not be called upon to assume

Mr. COLTON. There will be absolutely no charge upon the Government because of this project. In fact, money will come into the Treasury. I certainly hope the bill passes.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Evans].

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin was rather unfair to the members of the Public Lands Committee when he characterized them as only western land grabbers. It is unfair to California.

Now, the matter appeals to me this way. We are spending $160,000,000 for the Hoover Dam. The city of Los Angeles wants to take water from that dam. It has voted $220,000,-

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that those on the | 000 to build an aqueduct. The Government of the United States owns the land lying between the dam and the city of Los Angeles, and it is worthless land. It is not worth 25 cents an acre, much less $1.25 an acre. To build an aqueduct they have got to get permission from the Government of the United States.

> The Government of the United States would give me permission to build an aqueduct through there; but the municipality has not the legal right to spend its money on land it does not own, so it is asking for this right of way, so we are granting to that community down there the same right that I would have.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman for the bill? Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes; I am for the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is chairman of the committee?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does the gentleman delegate the power to somebody else to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The gentleman from California was the author of the bill, so I permitted him to call it up. Mr. BLANTON. Because of that incident I was just assuming the fact that the chairman of the committee was not in favor of it.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The committee made a unanimous report on the bill; every man favored it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us be fair. We are here pleading for something for the American people to do to earn a living. To-morrow we are going to be called on to vote $500,000,000 public money to give them something to do. To-day the city of Los Angeles wants to spend $220,000,000 to put 10,000 people to work, and we waste our time quibbling over it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Why did the gentleman not say it was one right of way for one main line and the laterals? The city of Los Angeles is not even mentioned in the bill

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I said the city of Los Angeles, but I meant the Southern California Association.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The bill states rights of way. Mr. EVANS of Montana. There are many things we did not write in the bill.

Mr. EVANS of California. The reason one main line is not sufficient is that there are certain lateral lines and power lines that will come in just a short distance from the Colorado River that will angle into this main line.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I said the main line and the laterals.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Those laterals are insignificant, may I say to the gentleman from Kentucky. The main line is the one which is required for the aqueduct. It calls for no expenditure by the Government; in fact, when completed it will bring to the Government a revenue of almost $3,000,-000 a year. The bill should be passed without a dissenting

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Vinson]. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is not a pleasant matter to oppose any project of any Member of Congress; but the language in this bill is too plain to be misunderstood. The English language in it makes it allinclusive. It grants all of the lands in three counties in California to a corporation that has not heretofore been allotted. It is a grant of all the lands belonging to the United States in three counties in California which have not been conveyed to an allottee for the purpose of constructing water lines. Is not that right?

Mr. EVANS of California. No.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It grants all of the lands in plain English, provided that they be used for this purpose. From the day this bill becomes a law until it is repealed there is the right to file maps in order to secure other rights of way for this purpose, namely, to build water lines. You state it is for one water line and its laterals. Why do you not say so in the bill? Why do you not make it rights of way for one line, two lines, and all the laterals necessary for that use?

In regard to the reverter clause the report denies the statement of the gentleman from Nevada relative to his interpretation of the last section of the bill. The report says:

It requires payment for all lands other than those used for the right of way and makes the right of way subject to reversion upon cessation of its use for the purposes specified in the bill.

The reverter clause refers to the cessation of the use of lands used for rights of way. It does not refer to the other land conveyed in this bill.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman does not contend that this language means that we give out and out to this district all of this land in these counties?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It says:

All lands belonging to the United States, situate in the counties of Los Angeles, Riverside, and San Bernardino, in the State of California, including trust or restricted Indian allotments in any Indian reservations or lands reserved for any purpose in connection with the Indian service, which have not been conveyed to any allottee with full power of alienation, which may be necessary, as found by the Secretary of the Interior, for any or all of the following purposes.

You are giving to this corporation the right to construct these lines however many they may be and without regard to the time element. If you only want 1 or 2 rights of way for water lines, O. K.; but when you say 3, 4, 5, 6, or 20, I say it is more than you gentlemen should ask that this Congress give you.

Mr. COLTON. If the gentleman will yield further, there are at least 13 cities in this district, and it is inevitable that they will want to run certain lines across this public domain. It only vests the right to do that and does not convey the land itself.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I served on the Public Lands Committee at one time in my service here. I know how you boys operate. I asked the gentleman from California what was the purpose of the bill and he stated it was to build one line to Los Angeles, but now the gentleman from Utah says there are 13 lines to be built.

Mr. COLTON. No; I do not mean that. I mean that because of the large area to be served there will be more than one line. There will be laterals.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman has been on the Public Lands Committee and he knows—

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Just exactly how things are done.

Mr. SWING. All that this bill provides could be acquired, as far as rights of way are concerned, by simply filing a map with the Secretary of the Interior and by securing his approval of the map as to rights of way we could get all of these things.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Why do you not do it in the regular way?

Mr. SWING. Because we can not spend bonded money up to $220,000,000 on land to which we do not have the title. That is the only reason.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As far as I am concerned, I think the language is too broad. I think you ought to have a limitation there as to the number of lines. You ought to have a reverter clause broad enough to provide that lands that are not used, as well as those lands utilized for this construction with a certain definite period, if there be a cessation of use to be ceded to the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Evans].

Mr. EVANS of California. Mr. Speaker, the United States Government has already entered into a contract to build the Hoover Dam. It has spent already on that contract more than $25,000,000, and that project is well in the course of construction. The United States Government has also entered into a contract with the metropolitan water district for the sale to that district of water and power, from which the United States Government will begin to receive as soon as the dam is constructed the sum of $3,263,000 every year.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of California. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. How much water is going to be pumped over that dam every year?

Mr. EVANS of California. It calls for 1,000,000 acre-feet of water.

Mr. HOLMES. A day?

Mr. EVANS of California. A year, I believe it is. Now, gentlemen, the United States Government has an interest in the enactment of this legislation because until this legislation is enacted the metropolitan water district can not, as has been pointed out here this afternoon, sell the bonds which the district has already voted in the sum of $220,000,000 by a vote of more than 5 to 1 of the electors of the district. So we are tied here, as pointed out by the gentleman from California [Mr. Swing]. These bonds may not be marketable for improvements upon lands of which the fee is not primarily in the metropolitan water district. If it ceases to use this land, of course, it reverts to the United States, as set forth in this legislation.

So I want to emphasize the statement that with all the noise here this afternoon with reference to land grabbing, there is absolutely nothing of that sort involved in this matter. The United States Government is interested, first and foremost, in the enactment of this legislation. [Applause.]

It is a part of the great Hoover Dam project. Water can not be transported from the Colorado River until an aqueduct has been built and the aqueduct can not be built until a right of way has been acquired. The district has voted the bonds, amounting to $220,000,000. The supreme court of our State has held the bonds valid. When this right of way has been acquired and the bonds marketed, we can put a large number of men to work at once building this great aqueduct, which is the largest undertaking of its kind ever attempted by any government. I hope this bill will be enacted.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. CRAIL].

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Speaker, none of this land is in my district, but the people of Los Angeles and of all of southern California are very greatly interested in this bill.

This is not a grab bill. It is not true, as has been stated here, that it would convey all of the lands of the public domain in Los Angeles, Riverside, and San Bernardino Counties to the Metropolitan Water District, of southern California. The bill merely authorizes the conveyance of all of the land in those counties which the Secretary of the Interior may find necessary for the metropolitan aqueduct, its laterals, and accessories, and that will be one line from the Colorado River through Beaumont Pass, which takes in practically all the land required, and from there laterals will be run to the several cities of southern California, mostly over privately owned lands, to be purchased at the expense of the district itself. I hope every Member here will vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, nothing which I said in the beginning do I now retract; but I reaffirm my every statement. Never before have I known a bill so loosely drawn that would confer such great powers without limitation upon any individual, or in this instance, extended to a municipal utility corporation.

It has not been brought out by the proponents that under the general law this association has the privilege to have a right of way of 100 feet. I am not protesting against enlarging that right of way to 250 feet, but I am protesting as strongly as I can to granting all the lands of the United States in these counties, without any reservation, including lands in the Indian reservations, in the forest reserves, for the respective purposes of storage dams, pumping plants, power plants, canals, ditches, and so forth.

Let them bring in a bill properly safeguarding the public lands of the United States and one that seeks to only extend the privileges to one right of way of 250 feet and I will rise in support of it; but when I find a monstrous bill in the history of public-land legislation, so far as I know, and I have followed such legislation very closely, I must necessarily rise and protest that it is a land grab.

I have seen in my experience here instances where we have vested large powers only to regret it later. I say to you, bring in a proper bill and we will pass it before the Congress adjourns; but we will not pass, with my approval, such an outrageous bill that gives everything which is of a public-land nature to this corporation. [Applause.]

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, there is not a thing in this bill that is not found in the general right of way law; there is not a thing that these cities can get under this bill that they can not get under the general law, except there is a limitation in width under the general right of way law, and a canal of this magnitude for 13 cities has to be so big that it will require a right of way of 250 feet. Also this bill is necessary, because the bond money that has been voted can not be expended under the laws of California on land which they do not own. Therefore, this law becomes necessary in order to give them requisite title.

This district has a contract with the United States Government which calls for it paying into the Treasury of the United States $2,750,000 annually, and the amount may run over that. If this bill is voted down, the United States Government thereby makes impossible the carrying out of its own contract. This is the greatest proposition that has ever been proposed in the way of courageous citizens of cities combining to get for themselves a necessary water supply, bringing it 264 miles across the desert, spending their own money, amounting to $220,000,000, and putting over 10,000 men to work during the five years it will be under construction. And yet we stand here quibbling over words and over a piece of desert land as barren as any of God's rocks on the hillsides, where nothing lives and nothing can live except coyotes, rattlesnakes, and horned toads.

I earnestly ask you not to stand in the way of such a great public improvement. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Stafford) there were—ayes 79, noes 35.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Two hundred and thirty-one Members present, a quorum.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

CHAIN STORES

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, the Kelly-Capper bill, which passed the House in the last Congress, is now approaching action in the Senate. It is hoped that it will reach the House before adjournment, and I thought I would devote a few remarks to it this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, the question uppermost in the mind of the average American is the problem that has confronted mankind from the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, namely, meat and bread and a place to lay his weary head, and clothing to keep him warm.

The campaign cry of "a full dinner pail" has kept a moribund and bankrupt band of politicians in power on more than one occasion. It is the appeal to the strongest law of nature-self-preservation. This question now confronts mankind everywhere, and in the political campaign of 1932 the men who propose a solution will find their fellow men rallying to their standard regardless of party labels or their position on other matters.

In my humble judgment this question is the result of a cause that gnaws at the living heart of American life and which threatens the priceless liberty of the American people. Its solution requires the very highest order of states-conferring such great powers, powers never before known | manship. I may be wrong, but I have an abiding faith that the centralizing of wealth is the seat of trouble, and with your indulgence I want to contribute my observations on this matter in the hope that Congress may rout the enemy, root up the evil, and render relief to a depressed and discouraged people.

Ordinarily statistics are very uninteresting, but in this case it would be missing the point if figures were omitted in describing the centralization of wealth. The reports of the census and the Internal Revenue Bureau of this Government show that only 2 per cent of our population earn enough money to pay an income tax. Now, if that means anything, I submit it warrants the conclusion that wealth is inequitably distributed, and that many perhaps are not taking in enough money to keep body and soul together. Of course, I am not overlooking the fact that in the 98 per cent who do not pay any income tax are included children, but children do not make up the entire 98 per cent; and when millions of men who are included do not earn enough to pay any tax, in my opinion they are not getting a square deal.

Further evidence of our faulty system is afforded in the army of unemployed, estimated to be 8,000,000 persons. These, of course, earn no income and are fertile field for communism and crime. A Senator of the United States [Mr. Long] on April 4, 1932, in the Senate of the United States said that 504 men in the United States in 1929 made more money than all of the wheat and cotton farmers of the United States. In that same speech this same Senator said that 10 years ago 1 per cent of the people owned 30 per cent of the wealth, and now owned 60 per cent of it. I am informed that another Senator [Mr. Borahl] is authority for the statement that 10 per cent of the people own 90 per cent of the wealth, leaving only 10 per cent of the wealth to 90 per cent of the people. Similar statistics by the stack could be produced; but as my time is limited, I want to point out the immediate evil and its result. I refer to the chain store.

It is hard to define this cancer so as to portray to the average man its true character, but "carpetbagger," "octo-pus," "drone," "boil on your neck," "sty on your eye," "running sore," and "slacker" are deadly parallels and terms the average fellow fully appreciates. When you solicit a contribution for some civic enterprise usually you will find the chain store playing the rôle of "conscientious objector"—that is, the boss in New York or in some other foreign seaport must be consulted. Of course, by that time the civic drive is over. These birds give nothing but take everything. They rent a store, paying as low rental as possible, hire help as cheaply as possible, work them 10 to 16 hours a day, and drain the community of its nickels and dimes. They invest nothing, build no homes, rear no children, contribute nothing to the community.

Within the past decade between 500,000 and 600,000 independent merchants have been crushed and their stores closed. Since 1921 the chains have corralled from 20 per cent to 45 per cent of the retail trade of every industry in this country. The closing of an independent merchant's store usually strikes at the home and scatters the family. This is not only detrimental to a community but is death to any nation, because the home is the unit of civilization.

Our unemployment problem is traceable directly to the chain system. My home city furnishes conclusive proof of this sad and solemn fact.

For example, in my home city of Portland, Oreg., 4,405 independent stores employ 12,639 persons to handle $137,-149.684 worth of business. In each store are from 1 to 3 employees, making a total of 4,405 to 13,215 more persons, or 25,854 persons handling $137,149,684 worth of goods. In the chain stores 6,670 persons handle $75,590,588 worth of business-the owners do not work or live in Oregon.

These figures show that in the chains each person handles $11,332 worth of goods, whereas in the independent stores each person handles $5,425 worth. In other words, if the chains hired the same number of persons in proportion to the number employed by the independents, 4,000 to 12,000 more persons would be given employment. This condition prevails throughout this country, and the unemployment problem is the baby of the chain-store system. This is the history of monopoly, and the chain store is but part and parcel of our damnable monopolistic system.

Portland is typical of every city throughout this country. If this movement keeps up, in a decade or two there will be no neighborhood grocery man, merchant, baker, druggist, or butcher—nothing but chain stores with underpaid employees and a manager who cares nothing for the young men and women employed in the store and less for the neighborhood, whose sole aim will be profits for the owners, who spend their time in Wall Street or in idleness in Florida or on tours to Europe.

The chain store is an eyesore to any community. It does not enter into community activities. It does nothing toward bettering the town in which it operates, and ultimately it means the death knell of any locality. It gives nothing, but, like the Dead Sea, is ever and anon receiving. It never pioneers, but waits until a settlement is started, then moves in and reaps the benefits of all civic improvements and progress established by others. It pays rent and low wages, leaves nothing else in the locality, sending all its profits to the money kings of Wall Street, whereas the independent business man helps to establish a community, invests his profits in the community, builds his home there, rears his children, contributes to civic enterprises, supports the schools, supports his family, pays his taxes, maintains the churches, and builds a nation.

The safety of a nation does not lie in forts, nor in navies, nor in armies; but in a happy, contented people who are ever ready to protect for themselves and to preserve for posterity the blessings which they enjoy. A square deal for all, a just division of profits, an equitable distribution of the wealth will best instill contentment in a people. A government that permits favoritism and special privilege can not endure. Any system that permits centralization of wealth will sooner or later yield to favoritism and special privilege. Chain banks, chain stores, mergers, and monopolies all mean power of money and wealth centralized in the hands of a few who will, because of greed, demand and sooner or later because of power, obtain favoritism and special privilege.

To permit these things to grow and become centralized will prove to be that—

Thread by thread the strands we twist Till they bind us neck and wrist.

My fellow townsmen are making wonderful strides in cutting asunder these strands, which the chain stores have been twisting for some time. Following the famous antichain store decision rendered by the United States Supreme Court in the case of State Board of Tax Commissioners v. Jackson (283 U. S. 527–553, 75 L. Ed. 1248 U. S.), the merchants presented to the City Council of Portland an ordinance taxing chain stores. It passed unanimously. The chain stores invoked the referendum on this ordinance, and the matter comes before the people at the general election November 8, 1932.

It so happens that my opponent, the regular Republican nominee, voted on the side of the chain stores in the last legislature, when these merchants tried to get a chain-store tax measure adopted. Consequently the issue will be rather clear cut between him and me, as I propose to do everything in my power to secure favorable consideration for said ordinance at the hands of the people in my district. The issue is clear and the die is cast, and, in the language of Shakespeare, the battle cry will be "Lay on, MacDuff, and damned be he who first cries, 'Hold, enough!'" [Applause.]

AMEND THE ACT DETERMINING THE HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6684, a bill to amend the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposal and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the lease of allotments, and for other purposes," so as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to modify the terms of certain contracts, when in his judgment it is in the interest of the Indians so to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I note that the committee did not follow the recommendation of the department of $4 per thousand feet board measure and $2 for other species.

Mr. LEAVITT. We did not go that far, because we thought that if we stopped at the basic price the terms would be fairer for the Indians. Two dollars and four dollars would go below the basic price, and the committee decided that they would not go beyond the basic contract price.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire as to the practical operation of the proviso in section 1, which reads:

That any such modification shall be upon the express condition that said purchaser shall forthwith proceed to operate under all the terms of said contract as modified or suffer forfeiture of such contract and collection upon his bond: And provided further, That in the event of sufficiently improved economic conditions the Secretary of the Interior is authorized after consultation with the purchaser and after 90 days' notice to them to increase stumpage prices of timber, reduced in any such modified contract, but in no event to a point higher than is stipulated in the contract as it existed before such modification.

Mr. LEAVITT. We could see no reason for allowing any modification of a contract, except that it would result in bringing some benefit to the Indians.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It occurred to me that since the passage of the revenue bill, putting a tax on lumber, it would affect the value of these timberlands.

Mr. LEAVITT. We hope that it will.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Then why provide for a modification of the contract?

Mr. LEAVITT. The Indians will have to agree to any modification.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. If the tariff on lumber affects the value of lumber, then it should be reflected on these timberlands.

Mr. LEAVITT. We hope so, but it would not make this bill unnecessary.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman from Montana is satisfied that the Indians' rights are safeguarded in this bill?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes; indeed---

Mr. STAFFORD. How many contracts will be affected by this legislation?

Mr. LEAVITT. Probably a dozen, as near as we could get the figures.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that all of the contractors who are operating on Indian timberlands?

Mr. LEAVITT. All that would be affected by this legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NOLAN. I object.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I do not interfere with the gentleman, but upon what subject?

Mr. CANNON. It is on the proposition which will come up to-morrow, on which I shall not have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. STAFFORD. But, Mr. Speaker, we are considering the Consent Calendar, and we have been interrupted a great deal by suspensions.

Mr. CANNON. It is seldom that I ask unanimous consent to speak.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know, but we have to consider these bills. I object.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10236) entitled "An act to provide revenue, | equalize taxation, and for other purposes."

RESTORATION OF STATUS OF WARRANT OFFICERS, REGULAR ARMY

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11174) to restore to their former retired status in the Regular Army of the United States persons who resigned such status to accept the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR.

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10084) authorizing the city of Omaha, Nebr., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near O'Hern Street, South Omaha, Nebr., and to acquire, maintain, and operate the existing toll bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There is already authority to build a bridge at South Omaha at O'Hern Street, across the Missouri River. This bill is objectionable because it provides for the city of Omaha to have authority to acquire a bridge which is now in operation and to use the tolls of that bridge for the construction of the bridge at South Omaha. The tolls for the bridge which is now in use are paid in large part by the people of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and that vicinity, and it is entirely unfair that those tolls should be used for the construction of a bridge which is not of any benefit to the people who pay the tolls.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who owns the bridge now?

Mr. SWANSON. The street-railway company.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is it not far better if you use these tolls for another bridge than to continue the toll and let it go to the street-railway company?

Mr. SWANSON. No; because the War Department will ultimately reduce the tolls on the present bridge and bring them down to a fair return.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But you will have nothing for it and in this way you will gain something.

Mr. SWANSON. But the people of Council Bluffs will be paying for a bridge which will be of no benefit to them. Why should not Omaha pay for its own bridge?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. I object. Mr. BALDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. BALDRIDGE. I want to ask the gentleman a question: Is it not true that at the present time, under the escrow agreement, they are going to have a free bridge in four years, and if the tolls are reduced and if this thing carries on we will not have any bridge at all?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know. I can not answer the

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

FIELD-SEASON CONTRACTS OF THE FOREST SERVICE

The next bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11944) to facilitate execution of an economy in fieldseason contracts of the Forest Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This establishes a very dangerous precedent. If there is one thing we have established as a permanent policy, it is not to permit contracting for services or material until the time the actual appropriation is made. Gentlemen will say that we safeguard that by saying that there shall be no liability until appropriations are made, but I fear that under the bill as it is now it will be possible for the various services to make a contract, whether it has an appropriation for it or not, and wait until it gets the appropriation, even in the deficiency appropriation bill. I am not ready to go along with it and I think we had better let this go over for two weeks so that I will have an opportunity to consult with the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have some amendments that I desire to propose to the bill.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I think you had better write a new

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to suggest some amendments. In the proviso, after the words "United States," insert "as to that part for the ensuing fiscal year"; and after the word "shall," on line 8, insert "aliquot the cost for such services by fiscal years," so that the Government may enter into the contract and not utilize any of the funds other than that appropriated for the fiscal year for carrying out the contract for that year, but may enter into a contract for over the season if the money is subsequently appropriated. There is nothing sacrosanct about the fiscal year ending June 30. Canada, for instance, has her fiscal year ending April 30. Perhaps it might be well for us to end our fiscal year with the calendar year. There is some merit in the proposal sought to be brought about in this

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The Army might as well come in and say, "Let us supply our potatoes ahead of time because we can buy them more cheaply."

Mr. STAFFORD. Not as far as potatoes are concerned, because potatoes are bought in the fall of the year, when the Wisconsin crop is plentiful.

Mr. LEAVITT. The reason is that the fire season does not conform to the fiscal year. On some of the national forests the fire season starts as early as April and May, and quite often it starts in June in the western mountain country. If we must wait until the 1st of July before we can even advertise, we are very nearly through the fire season before some things can be purchased.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But anyone can readily see what the leverage would be on the Committee on Appropriations. If the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Cramton, were here he would hit the ceiling on a bill like this.

Mr. LEAVITT. But if they can have the contracts already entered into, subject to the appropriation, then they can immediately award the contract and get the materials and supplies necessary.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Suppose we granted that to the Navy Department; they would immediately build 50 cruisers.

Mr. LEAVITT. If we were at war they would. That is what we have every year, in fighting forest fires.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Does the gentleman remember the $500,-000 appropriation for the George Rogers Clark memorial?

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not recall that.

Mr. BALDRIGE. That is exactly how that appropriation

Mr. LaGUARDIA. May we not hear from the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DOXEY. The objection of the gentleman from New York will yield to the facts in the case I am sure. Of course, we all understand that under the ruling of the Comptroller General and the law, we can not let a contract that goes over a seasonal year or a current year, where the money is not appropriated for the fiscal year. The Forestry Service is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. They have a situation that may be peculiar or may not. For instance, facts like this were brought before the Committee on Agriculture: They are going to let a contract for the prevention of fires in the national forests. They must have specially constructed airplanes, constructed at quite an expense. In January they advertised for bids and let bids. Those bids can only be for May and June, because we do not usually pass our appropriation bills until the last of May or some time in June for the fiscal year following.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Has the gentleman studied the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

STAFFORD 1?

Mr. DOXEY. I am coming to that. In July this same service must readvertise or go to the expense of asking for further preparations and further bids, because this service must continue through the summer and fall months, whereas if they had been permitted at the beginning of the seasonal year to let these contracts it would have obviated all this extra expense. That is just the purpose of it, to let one contract and do it all in the most economical way.

The bill provides that the Government will not be liable until the money is appropriated, and I think the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin will make it possibly more definite and specific. Personally, and I think I speak for the committee, I would not object to the amendments suggested by the gentleman, provided this bill is passed, because of the circumstances and conditions demanding its immediate passage.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The precedent is so great.

Mr. DOXEY. The precedent does not reach as far as the gentleman from New York might presume.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. What protection is there in the bill in the event a contract is made and Congress did not make appropriation? Is there any claim against the Government in that event?

Mr. DOXEY. No. It is provided in the bill that there is no claim against the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereafter authorized in connection with the administration of the national forests to enter into contracts for the procurement of services, materials, and supplies for the ensuing fiscal year, prior to the passage of an appropriation therefor: Provided, That such contracts shall not be binding on the United States unless and until an appropriation applicable to the payment thereof is made: And provided further, That all such contracts shall by their terms provide that the obligation of the United States is contingent upon the passage of an applicable appropriation and that no payment thereunder will be made until such appropriation becomes available for expenditure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stafforn: Page 1, line 8, after the word "shall," insert "aliquot, the cost for such service by fiscal years and shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer a further amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Stafford: Page 1, line 8, after the words "United States," insert "as to that part for the ensuing fiscal year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS OF TOBACCO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9590, to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture," approved January 14, 1929.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, how much will this cost? The field is broadened and extended.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think it will do a bit of good, and I object.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, I will reserve the objection; but nobody will ever read the statistics after they spend much money to gather them.

Mr. FULMER. Under the present law the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to call for the quantity of tobacco on hand, but this bill only proposes to have them give the various types and groups of grade, and also to report the amount of tobacco on hand during the past four years.

One of the reasons for this is that we have a number of large tobacco firms reporting the quantities of tobacco, and in the quantity of tobacco there are certain types that never will be used, depressing the farmers' actual price of tobacco during that year.

There is no additional cost. It will provide additional machinery whereby they will get the actual facts as to types and groups of types, and how long it has been held.

Mr. Laguardia. Under the present law we require all manufacturers who have manufactured less than 50,000 to report. This changes it to 35,000. Therefore we are extending the field. Then we come to the manufacturers of cigars, 250,000, and that is reduced to 185,000. Then we have the cigarette manufacturers in the class of 1,000,000, and that is reduced to 700,000, so that the field is extended.

Mr. FULMER. There will be no additional cost. There will be no more trouble on that number than the ones now reporting, but we will have a real picture.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. It is of benefit to the tobacco growers? Mr. FULMER. To the growers, absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New York

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Probably more than four-fifths of the money we spend to gather statistics is money wasted; and if we are going to keep on spending money uselessly we are never going to have any retrenchment.

Mr. FULMER. I will say to the gentleman that here is where we can help the tobacco people get the actual number of people and the could be actual number of peop ber of pounds and the quality of tobacco sold.

Mr. BLANTON. The Congress, over my objection, spent $600,000 gathering coal statistics, and it was not worth a dollar to the people; therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

FAYETTE COUNTY, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10825, to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Fayette County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume the gentleman will have no objection to a qualifying clause in line 5, page 1, "without expense to the Government of the United States."

Mr. CHAPMAN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Commonwealth of Kentucky all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Fayette Ccunty, Ky. (being a strip of land fronting on the Lexington Hospital Reservation), described as follows:

BOUNDARY LINES CHIPPEWA INDIAN TERRITORY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9495, to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not the amendments recommended by the department have been made in the bill?

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. Knutson]. It is my understanding that those amendments are included in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, are they? The gentleman knows that in the report there is a communication from Commissioner Rhoads suggesting that unless certain amendments were agreed to he would not approve the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I do not believe they are in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, so that such amendments may be put into the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

TAX LAWS-BOULDER DAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11945, to provide that tax laws of Nevada and Arizona shall apply to construction and reserved areas at Boulder Dam.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object, and ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Department of the Interior at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 6, 1932.

Hon. Robert S. Hall,

Chairman Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: I received here on May 10 your request for a report on H. R. 11945, a bill amending the Boulder Canyon project act by providing that tax laws in the States of Nevada and Arizona shall apply to construction and reserved areas. Inasmuch as this bill, introduced May 7, had already been considered in the committee on May 9, and appeared on the House calendar on May 11, the request for my views comes at a time when the matter is no longer before your committee. However, as you have asked for a departmental report, it is submitted.

asked for a departmental report, it is submitted.

It is recommended that this bill be not enacted.

The amendment proposed by this bill to the Boulder Canyon project act (erroneously referred to as the Boulder Dam project project act (erroneously referred to as the Boulder Canyon act) is as follows in full text:

"Sec. 22. Within areas in Nevada and Arizona in which construction is to be done under this act, or which are withdrawn or reserved to carry out the provisions of this act:

"The laws of the State where the property is located or where income is earned shall apply to the taxation of real or personal property not owned by the United States, and to the taxation of incomes."

This amendment would subject to taxation not only the contractor who is building this dam for the United States but the sale of power by the lessees of the Government power plant thereafter. The effect thereof would be to decrease the power revenues to the United States and impair the financial stability of the project. The rate charged by the United States to the lessees and to other purchasers of power under the provisions of section 5a of the Boulder Canyon project act is subject to readjustment periodically, either upward or downward as to price, as the Secretary of the Interior may find to be justified by competitive conditions at distributing points or competitive centers. The price for Hoover Dam energy is thus necessarily computed by reckoning back from the cost of competitive energy at competitive centers the various items of cost until the value of the energy at Hoover Dam is obtained. If one of these items of cost is taxation on the power output, obviously the value of the power privilege is decreased and the rate per kilowatt-hour must be decreased accordingly. This amendment would subject to taxation not only the accordingly.

This bill is substantially like proposals that were rejected by Congress at the time the Boulder Canyon project act was under consideration. Thus on December 14, 1928, an amendment was offered in the Senate (Congressional Record, p. 589, 70th Cong.), as follows:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority or held to affect the rights they may have including the right

as follows:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have, including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of electrical energy, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee or contractee of the United States."

This amendment was rejected by a vote of 42 to 35 (id. p. 594), and immediately thereafter the following amendment was rejected without a division (id. pp. 595, 596):

"Provided, That if the United States operates an electric-power plant in the States of Arizona and Nevada, or either of them, and sells said power to or for the use of the public, a percentage of the proceeds derived from the sale of such power shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to the State in which such power is generated equal in amount to the general tax imposed by State law, if any, upon the generation or sale of power."

Instead there appears in the act the following benefit in lieu of taxes for the States of Arizona and Nevada; a preliminary draft of it was proposed by Mr. Arrenz, author of the present bill (Congressional Record, May 24, 1928, p. 10020), with the statement that it was required for "equitable and fair treatment to the States of Arizona and Nevada." Section 4 (b):

"If during the period of amortization the Secretary of the Interior shall receive revenues in excess of the amount necessary to meet the periodical payments to the United States as provided in the contract or contracts executed under this act, then, immediately after the settlement of such periodical payments, he shall pay to the State of Arizona 18% per cent of such excess revenues."

Thus, this effort to benefit by this Government investment by means of taxation is in direct conflict with the purpose of section 4-b of the Boulder Canyon project act. It is there provided that 37½ per cent of revenues in excess of the amounts necessary to meet the periodical payments to the United States

Taxation of power output by these two States may work a direct hardship on the other five States in the Colorado River Basin. Under section 5 all revenues in excess of the amounts required for amortization and payments to the States of Arizona and Nevada are to be "kept in a separate fund to be expended within the Colorado River Basin as may hereafter be prescribed by the Congress." If Arizona and Nevada are to collect a second amount, as outlined by H. R. 11945, the increments to this "separate fund" can be reduced to the vanishing point by such State taxation.

There is a broader aspect to this whole problem. The United States is here investing (including interest during construction) $125,000,000. A great national asset is being created in Arizona and Nevada solely at Federal expense. Eighteen per cent of the energy thereby created, amounting to over 100,000 horsepower, is reserved for use in Nevada when and if that State needs the power, although other contractors must pay for it until the State demands the energy. The State of Nevada should be eager to have this job completed, rather than to harass it by taxation.

The "reserved area" mentioned in the bill apparently relates particularly to the Boulder Canyon Project Federal Reservation. This reservation, embracing the widespread construction activities surrounding the dam—miles of railroad, gravel pits, tunnels, highways, construction camps, etc.—is an area within which the United States and not the State performs all governmental functions. It was established pursuant to a voluntary cession of jurisdiction made by the State. (Nev. Comp. L., secs. 2893–2898.) At Federal expense a town has been laid out, a $2,000,000 water-supply system installed, pavements laid, sidewalks built, municipal and administrative buildings constructed, school buildings contracted for houses built, police and fire protection provided, and a city government maintained. The contractor is required to pay the United States $5,000 per month in lieu of taxes toward the cost of these services.

This bill is one of a series (see S. 2885 and H. R. 8165). Juristhese services these services.

This bill is one of a series (see S. 2885 and H. R. 8165). Jurisdiction for taxation will be followed by pleas for more general power. The State is put to no expense in this reservation area and performs none of the functions of a sovereign therein. It is not practicable that the State shall perform such functions. We have no desire to see the Nevada gambling laws prevail in this area; nor to sanction the red-light-district system which prevails in Reno and in the neighboring city of Las Vegas; nor to indulge any other peculiarities of legislation. Government control of this area and of all of the Government contractors therein, including permittees, is absolutely essential to the swift and economical conarea and of all of the Government contractors therein, including permittees, is absolutely essential to the swift and economical construction of this project. The State has heretofore endeavored to dictate that the huge diversion tunnels shall be constructed in accordance with State laws, which were designed for ordinary mining operations and which prohibit the use of the sort of machinery required here.

If the State's effort in this regard had been successful, hundreds of thousands of dollars would have been added to the cost of the dam and months of delay would have resulted. The State has also sought to tax the Government contractor who is building the dam. It has been necessary for the contractor to obtain prelimination.

also sought to tax the Government contractor who is building the dam. It has been necessary for the contractor to obtain preliminary injunctions against both of these attempts by the State of Nevada and the cases are now pending on their merits before the United States courts. The United States has appeared as amicus curiæ. In these cases the State attacks the validity of the creation of the reservation (which was strictly in accordance with the laws of the State) and scales to assert her over twisdetion. The United of the State) and seeks to assert her own jurisdiction. The United States can not submit to these conditions and the Federal case should not be prejudiced by the enactment of such a bill as H. R. 11945.

Some Nevada citizens have become disturbed over the fear that the Government reservation is being created as a permanent tax-free haven for industries which might locate permanently there and utilize Hoover Dam energy. To the contrary, as is obvious, the status of the reservation at the termination of construction will be a matter for Congress to then determine. No permanent industry which locates there will do so under any assurance regarding taxation. Meanwhile, let us build this dam at the lowest cost, in the quickest time, and with the least possible harassment.

Nevada's revenues, cost free, will commence after the job is done.

For your information I am attaching an explanatory letter from Congressman Swing, one of the authors of the Boulder Canyon project act.

In closing I wish to point out that it is inevitable that differ ences of viewpoint should arise on questions of the sort covered by this bill. There has been a fine personal attitude on the part of all of the Nevada officials concerned, and of the State delegation. Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR

(Inclosure 33078.)

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., May 24, 1932.

Washington, D. C., May 24, 1932.

Hon. Ray Lyman Wilbur,

Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Secretary: I hand you herewith H. R. 11945, introduced by Mr. Arentz, providing that the States of Nevada and Arizona may tax properties within the Government reservation at Boulder Dam with the exception of property owned by the United States; also S. 2885, introduced by Mr. Oddie, which goes even farther than the Arentz bill.

Similar proposals were offered at the time the Swing-Johnson bill was pending before the House and Senate. On December 14, 1928, Senator Hayden offered an amendment in the Senate (see p. 589. Congressional Record of that year), as fellows:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed or be held to affect these States or other local authority to exercise any of the rights which they may have, including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of electrical energy, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee or contractee."

This amendment was voted down, 35 yeas, 42 noes. (See p. 594.) Then Senator Black, of Alabama, offered a similar amendment, as follows:

as follows:

"Provided, That if the United States operates an electrical power plant in the States of Arizona and Nevada, or either of them, and sells said power to or for use of the public, And provided, That proceeds derived from the sale of such power plant shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior to the States in which such power is generated equal in amount to the tax imposed by State law, if any, upon the generation or sales of power."

The amendment by Mr. Black was voted down without any division.

In the House a similar amendment was voted down. Mr. ARENTZ himself offered an amendment, which was adopted and became a part of the Boulder Dam act, which provided that 1834 per cent of the excess revenues should be paid to each of the States of Arizona and Nevada.

per cent of the excess revenues should be paid to each of the States of Arizona and Nevada.

Mr. Arentz referred to this amendment as "equitable and fair treatment to the States of Arizona and Nevada after yearly amortization payments have been made from the revenues derived from the contract for the sale of water and power."

The purpose and intent of the amendment was to offer this revenue in place of what the States would have collected if the construction had been by private corporations and in lieu of taxes lost by the Government building and operating the plant.

The proposals of Mr. Arentz and Senator Odder are far-reaching, and if now put into effect, after the contract had been let, might throw a very heavy burden upon the contractors, who had a right to assume when they took the contract that their status was as declared by Federal and State laws as of that date.

Under this bill the county of Clarke might pass an ordinance levying a poll tax of $5 per head on every employee at the dam. The county or the State might levy a heavy tax upon the machinery and operating plant of the contractors.

Various business men throughout the United States were invited to come to Boulder City to build buildings and to open stores on a certain set of facts which existed at that time, to wit, that they were to operate on a Federal reservation. Their profits will be uncertain and for only a short duration of time, not exceeding the length of time it will take to build the dam, when activities at Boulder City will very likely greatly diminish.

It seems unfair to these people to subject them after investment to a tax for which they have had no notice and which did not in fact then exist.

Mr. Arentz and Mr. Oddie have been active in securing from the

Mr. Arentz and Mr. Oddie have been active in securing from the Boulder Dam fund rather large sums of money for the improvement of Boulder City and for the building of schoolhouses, etc., all on the claim that they should come out of the Boulder Dam fund because the State had no power to tax the property at Boulder City.

Boulder City.

Having first secured their $70,000 for schoolhouses, they now propose to butter their bread on the opposite side by repealing the exemptions from taxation existing because of the Government reservation and now proceed to tax all property in and about the reservation. It seems to me it would establish a dangerous precedent.

I would be glad to have your views regarding these two bills.

Sincerely,

PHIL D. SWING

(Two enclosures.)

INTERNATIONAL GEOLOGICAL CONGRESS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 181, authorizing an appropriation for the expenses of the sixteenth session of the International Geological Congress to be held in the United States in 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill would appropriate $85,000 for a useless matter, and I object. And if we can get three Members to object, we will save this $85,000 for the people of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS, Mr. HOLADAY, and Mr. PETTENGILL also objected.

MENOMINEE TRIBE OF INDIANS OF WISCONSIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12045, authorizing a per capita payment of $50 to the members of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of Wisconsin from funds on deposit to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object—because this is my bill—I serve notice that I will offer an amendment which will meet the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It will just change the dates of payment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the fund in the Treasury of the United States on deposit to the credit of the Menominee Indians in the State of Wisconsin a sufficient sum to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of $50, in two equal installments of $25 each on July 1, 1932, and December 1, 1932, to each of the living members on the tribal roll of the Menominee Tribe of Indians of the State of Wisconsin, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bollsau: Page 1, line 8, after the word "on," strike out "July 1" and insert "or about October 15."
In line 9, strike out "December 1, 1932" and insert "on or about January 15, 1933."

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I take advantage of this opportunity because I was not given a chance to explain bill No. 341 on the calendar. I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. La-Guardia] if he would reserve his objection and he said he would, but in the turmoil of the House the Speaker asked for the consideration of the next bill, No. 342. My bill, 341 on the calendar, to which the gentleman from New York objected, provides for the taxation by the State of Nevada and subdivisions thereof of non-Government property in the Boulder Canyon area.

I appreciate that in the passage of the Boulder Canyon act we created a reservation. How far did that reservation go toward setting up a governmental entity within the State of Nevada and taking away from the State of Nevada its taxable powers with respect to property within that area?

At the present time we are feeding thousands of people in Las Vegas. We are taking care of many school children, children of workmen employed at Boulder City. Las Vegas, Nev., city schools are caring for nearly 800 school children at the present time from the Boulder City area, and no provision is made for raising taxes to cover this expense.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman state how many children are being fed?

Mr. ARENTZ. Many families with children of school age are being fed by the people of Las Vegas. The city of Las Vegas and the county of Clark, in which Las Vegas is located, believe they have this right, although it may have been taken away by a misunderstanding. They believe they have the right to tax property that is not governmental property within that area. My bill provides not only for the taxing of the concessionaires who are in business in Boulder City but for the taxing of the property of the Six Companies, the contractors. Unless that is done, it means that Las Vegas and the county of Clark can not carry on the things which are expected of them by the Nation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What authority has the Congress of the United States to determine what property in the State of Nevada shall be subject to local taxation?

Mr. ARENTZ. By the Boulder Canyon act we had a reservation erected within the State of Nevada and according to the findings of the Secretary of the Interior the land is not taxable. The property is not taxable and nothing within that area is taxable. I want to say that the officials of the Six Companies during the past year and a half have taken poll tax from 8,700 men who are on their pay roll. They are holding that $25,000, thinking that some day the State of Nevada may be given this power, and then they will pay over the poll tax. In the meantime the county of Clark is holding the sack. This bill should pass, and pass now—to-day—and I deeply regret the action of the gentleman of New York.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolleau].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. Mouser, indefinitely.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation providing a substantial bond issue for financing a Federal program of public works and of assistance to local communities, so as to aid in the relief of unemployment, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by officers and members of Local Chapter No. 222, Railroad Employees' National Pension Association (Inc.), representing railroad, express, and Pullman employees in the East Bay District, comprising Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley, Richmond, and vicinity, in the State of California, favoring the passage of legislation providing a $5,000,000,000 bond issue for the inauguration of a public-works program, so as to relieve the unemployment situation, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from T. H. Bowman, of McKeesport, Pa., inclosing a plan for ending the depression by the passage of legislation guaranteeing bank deposits by the United States, requiring banks to loan money in the district where they get it, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

GRASSHOPPER MENACE

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have a telegram from Mr. F. E. Murphy, of the Minneapolis Tribune, concerning a situation in that part of the country about which they desire legislation. I ask that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 6, 1932.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 6, 1932.

Hon. WILLIAM BORAH,

United States Senate, Washington:

Alarming crisis only justification for burdening you with special appeal during these trying days of strenuous nerve-racking effort. Spring wheat belt has prospect bumper crop, which might loosen key log of economic jam. Now confronted with acute grasshopper menace, which threatens wipe out crops Dakotas, Minnesota, and adjoining States as completely as rosebud country year ago, where every spear of grass, every corn stubble was eaten off, leaving fields as clean as polished floor. Billion eggs from Mississippi to Rockies hatching out during current warm spell. Cool weather delayed hatching out during current warm spell. Cool weather delayed threat until now. Northwest will need Federal appropriation included Department Agriculture bill within 10 days. Earnestly appeal you use your influence have Senate act on department bill when economy measure disposed of. We stand lose from five million to half billion dollars, and this might be averted if Congress acts. Have canvassed situation carefully; project can not be sufficiently financed locally.

F. E. MURPHY.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the North Dakota Cooperative Wool Marketing Association to Mr. Denman, of the Federal Farm Board, in which the North Dakota cooperative express their thanks and appreciation for the assistance given by the Federal Farm Board to the cooperative wool pool in North Dakota.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

NORTH DAKOTA COOPERATIVE WOOL MARKETING ASSOCIATION, Fargo, N. Dak., June 3, 1932.

Mr. C. B. DENMAN, Federal Farm Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DENMAN: We have received within the course of the last few days, scores of letters from members of our organization expressing their thanks and appreciation for the very fine returns on the 1931 pool.

We have just about completed distribution of almost $50,000 in checks and it has certainly created a wonderful spirit and at a time it was most needed by the wool co-ops. Of course, we have no way of determining what the average prices paid for wool have no way of determining what the average prices paid for wool in our State amount to, but growers inform us that they have received from 3 to 5 cents more for their wool from the co-op. than could have been obtained from any other source. We realize there are many perhaps who sold for a fair price last spring, but, in our opinion, the average returns through the pool amount to strong 3 cents above the average North Dakota fleece wool price. Growers in North Dakota generally feel very nice toward the Federal Farm Board, and we want to take this means of expressing our thanks and appreciation for the wonderful financial expressing our thanks and appreciation for the wonderful financial and moral assistance given us by the Farm Board.

With kind regards, I am yours very truly,
A. C. BJERKEN, Secretary and Treasurer.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS (REPT. NO. 773)

Mr. REED, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11897) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. REED subsequently said: With regard to the Army appropriation bill, which I reported an hour or so ago, I am informed by the clerk that there are errors in several of the figures. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be rereferred to the Committee on Appropriations so that the errors may be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. REED subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to report back again with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations House bill 11897, the Army appropriation bill, in which I think we now have our figures correct, and I submit a report thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3531) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, and acts in amendment thereof, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 774) thereon.

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4778) granting the consent of Congress to the Niagara Frontier Bridge Commission. its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the east branch of the Niagara River at or near the city of Tonawanda, N. Y., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 775) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on to-day, June 7, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 432. An act granting permission to Harold I. June to transfer to the Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy;

S. 4401. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.;

S. 4581. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.;

S. 4635. An act authorizing the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, and permitting the Commonwealth of Kentucky to act jointly with the State of Indiana in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge: and

S. 4636. An act authorizing the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by and through the State Highway Commission of Kentucky, or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill., and permitting the Commonwealth of Kentucky to act jointly with the State of Illinois in the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably several nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Robert E. Mattingly, of the District of Columbia, to be a judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEBERT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Cecil H. Clegg, of Alaska, to be district judge, District of Alaska, division No. 3, to succeed E. Coke Hill, appointed district judge, District of Alaska, division No. 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4838) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Lambourne: to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 4839) granting a pension to Mary J. Rosenbaum (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions. By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4840) taxing certain excess deposits of national banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 4841) granting an increase of pension to Nancy C. Austin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 4842) granting a pension to James L. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4843) granting a pension to Vivian C. Bogle; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4844) for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BINGHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 46, after line 19, insert:

"(g) Per diem workers receiving less than $3.50 per day other than those whose compensation is adjustable to conform to the prevailing local rate for similar work."

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REVENUE ACT

Mr. MOSES submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 41,000 additional copies of Public Law No. 154, known as the revenue act of 1932, of which 13,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room, 25,000 copies for the use of the House document room, 1,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT-APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on to-day, June 7, 1932, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 154. An act for the relief of Amy Harding;

S. 669. An act for the relief of Chester J. Dick; and

S. 2325. An act for the relief of the United States Hammered Piston Ring Co.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Moses, as modified.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me assure the Senate at the outset that I shall take only a few moments in voicing my convictions respecting the pending amendment. In the first place, the proposal met with disapproval in the body at the other end of the Capitol. That fact, it seems to me, should receive appropriate consideration here.

Next, Mr. President, we are engaged in an effort to effect economies, to curtail expenditures, to reduce appropriations, to retrench in Government expenses, as a contribution toward restoring the Budget to a balanced basis and maintaining stability of Government securities in the meantime. Under the proposal advanced by the committee a saving of $121,500,000 was effected. After the amendment sponsored by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] was adopted that saving was reduced to approximately $117,000,000. That, Mr. President, is the condition of the legislation now.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] will reduce that sum to approximately $85,000,000, or a loss of $32,000,000 in the economies to be effected through the legislation. Quite aside from the other phases of the problem, that fact is entitled to weight here. The administration portrays itself throughout the country as the champion of economy. It has assumed that attitude through the press. It has assumed that attitude in declarations emanating from the White House and otherwise. Yet every effort made by Congress to reduce appropriations touching any of the executive departments has met with solemn protests from the Cabinet officer presiding over the department concerned. Instead of being furnished with much-needed information to effect substantial economies in the operating expenses of the various departments, Congress has been challenged at the threshold with a statement from the Cabinet officer in each case that the appropriation must not be reduced, else the department would be crippled in its efficiency.

Mr. President, in addition to that, we are confronted to-day with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] championing an amendment to the pending bill which would reduce the saving from $117,000,000 to $85,000,000, a loss of $32,000,000, and in that effort he is supported by the leader of the majority, the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson]—all of that in the face of the claim and the oft-repeated assertion that the administration is leading the movement in behalf of economy.

The matter of effecting economy should not be partisan. It should have no political complexion. I assure the Senate that throughout the deliberations of the special committee of six no partisan consideration entered. We were inspired by a common desire. We were moved by a common purpose. We were actuated by a common design, and that was to effect economy. The alternative here is whether we shall economize to the extent of $117,000,000 during the temporary period of 12 months, as proposed by the committee, and then return to the present level, or whether we are going to economize to the extent of only $85,000,000 during the temporary period of 12 months, as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, and then return to the present level.

Yesterday afternoon the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], likewise the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg], asserted that the pending amendment would maintain the existing standard during the ensuing period of one year; but, Mr. President, that argument has no foundation; it has no support; because under each proposal the present standard is to be resumed at the end of 12 months. The only point to be considered is the method of effecting the reduction during the ensuing period of one year, for, under either proposal, and without further action by Congress at the end of that time we return to the present level and the present standard goes forward.

Moreover, Mr. President, as was pointed out by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], a member of the committee which has dealt with this measure, under the committee proposal the reduction is uniform; it is without exception; it is without discrimination; it is without partiality; but under the pending substitute that is not true. For instance, rural mail carriers, instead of bearing a cut of 10 per cent, will be required to submit to a cut of 13 per cent, because their allowances will be reduced under section 108, which provides:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, payments for equipment maintenance to carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service shall be three-eighths of the amount now provided by law.

Of course, that will meet with objection; of course, it will be asserted that it is discrimination against rural mail carriers as compared with other employees of the Federal Government. Of course, rural mail carriers are as faithful employees as are those in any other department of the Government, and should not be singled out and an additional burden of that character imposed upon them. It was the purpose of the committee in agreeing to a flat horizontal cut to obviate any such discrimination as that.

Again, Mr. President, under the furlough system it is impossible to calculate definitely how much will be saved, because no one can foresee how many substitutes will be necessary or, indeed, how many substitutes will be employed.

Under the pending amendment it is provided that no em- ! ployee shall be exempted from the furlough plan unless his services can not be dispensed with or a satisfactory substitute can not be provided, thus leaving open for some one to determine how many substitutes are needed and how much money shall be expended for substitutes under the furlough system. Of course, that injects into the situation an uncertain factor which no one can calculate with definiteness, whereas the plan proposed by the committee is not laden nor surcharged nor saturated with any such uncertainty. It is definite; it is fixed and it gives every employee the confident assurance that during the year his income will be a certain amount, and he can budget his household affairs and his other business affairs accordingly.

Mr. President, it was stated by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire yesterday that the employees affected prefer the furlough plan. I can not agree with him in that statement; at least, there is a division of sentiment among the employees. Some of them prefer to know definitely how much they are going to receive during the next year; some of them prefer not to have a superior determine the method in which the furlough plan shall be administered; some of them prefer the flat cut as their contribution in this period of distress and trial.

Those who favor the furlough plan perhaps do not overlook the fact that the reduction in total salaries under that system is only $85,000,000, whereas the reduction under the committee proposal is now $117,000,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I direct the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to section 214 of the bill, on page 59? Apparently the committee was of the opinion that it is desirable to retain a furlough provision with the 10 per cent cut. Will the Senator from New Mexico be good enough to explain the purpose in retaining section 214 in the bill?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I shall be glad to undertake to explain it. It was the purpose of the committee to make the flat 10 per cent cut and to appropriate sufficient money to carry the pay roll at that figure; but the committee felt that, in the immensity of the task, Congress might fail to appropriate sufficient money to accomplish that end. If so, it would be necessary to dismiss employees permanently. Desiring earnestly to obviate that necessity, and believing that it would be better for the faithful employee, should that situation arise, to be given a temporary furlough for as short a period as possible than to be dismissed permanently, we wrote the provision into the bill with the safeguard which I have no doubt the Senator has noticed, namely, that those drawing high salaries should be furloughed first.

We were inspired by an earnest effort to save faithful employees from being dismissed if it should develop during the fiscal year 1933 that, through oversight or miscalculation or otherwise. Congress failed to appropriate sufficient money to pay all employees throughout the year at the 90 per cent rate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the courteous Senator from New Mexico has stated my understanding of the purpose of the committee. However, I am advised that the present practice of Government departmental heads, without such a provision as this, is from time to time to furlough employees. Moreover, this provision is disturbing in that it authorizes and directs furloughing certain employees of the Government without pay for such time as, in the judgment of the heads of departments or bureaus, is necessary in order to keep within appropriations without discharging employees. In other words, the employee, under this provision, in addition to a 10 per cent cut in compensation, is faced with the possibility of an indeterminate furlough.

This provision has excited reasonable alarm among many Federal employees. May I, therefore, ask the Senator from New Mexico if there is any necessity for changing the present practice of the Government by a definite provision of law making a specific arrangement for indefinite furloughs within the discretion of the heads of departments?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as the Senator says, under the present plan the departments furlough employees, and, of course, that is within the discretion of the heads of the departments. So that element exists under either the existing system or the plan contemplated by the provision to which the Senator has addressed himself.

Let me call the Senator's attention to the opening language of the section:

SEC. 214. In order to keep within the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1933, the heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments of the United States Government and the municipal government of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to furlough, without pay—

And so forth.

Thus clearly indicating, Mr. President, that employees are not to be furloughed unless it is necessary to keep within the appropriations made by Congress. Only in the event the appropriations become insufficient is the furlough system to be brought into play. The committee was actuated by a desire to aid the employees rather than to add to their anxiety of mind or their financial discomfort.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRATTON. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest also to the Senator that I think the provision was inserted rather as an admonition against the creation of deficiencies, and as an expression, in view of the cutting down of appropriations under the policy we are following, that we want that policy to be carried out, and we do not want the head of a department to have any excuse for creating a deficiency and coming to Congress hereafter and requesting deficiency appropriations.

Mr. BRATTON. Indeed, that was contemplated, and it is an important factor in the equation. It is a warning to the heads of the departments that Congress expects them to live within the appropriations during this abnormal period.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. Mr. COSTIGAN. If the Senator from New Mexico will permit me to say so, the warning appears to be at the expense of Federal employees; and it would seem unwise to add a statutory direction of this sort if the present law and practice are adequate.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I think it is wise to make a declaration of that kind, in the nature of a warning to the heads of the departments that during this period of financial trial deficiencies for the payment of salaries must not be incurred in the expectation that Congress will appropriate the money with which to pay them at the next session. Of course, it is not economy to establish a program of reductions and then permit the executive departments to incur deficiencies, and at the next session of Congress appropriate the money with which to pay those deficiencies. That is a sham under the guise of economy. It is not real economy. The committee had in mind a declaration in the nature of a storm signal set and flying to the heads of the departments that during this period we expect to economize and shall exact of them cooperation by their refraining from incurring deficiencies for salaries.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to suggest that to my mind there are a great many difficulties on account of what is known as the Vandenberg amendment to the furlough plan, as agreed to yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. That starts in with $3,000. It saves the Government practically no money, and yet is an irritation to practically every bureau chief and foreman and man who has been recognized by a department for efficient service and has been advanced to the higher grades. Therefore, I believe it will do more to disturb harmonious working relations in the departments than anything that has been suggested on this floor.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Iowa. Instead of the amendment strengthening the proposal of the Senator from New Hampshire, it weakens it. It adds so many "humps," if I may so express myself.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. Exercising the right I still have to perfect my amendment, I withdraw my acceptance of the Vandenberg amendment, and that can then be submitted to the vote of the Senate directly.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator from New Hampshire can not be in quite as good a mood as he was yesterday, because he then accepted every amendment proposed with such rapidity that those of us on this side of the aisle could scarcely keep pace with the parliamentary developments.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will further permit me, I thought the Senator from New Mexico and others who shared his views would be willing to let the matter go to conference. Finding, however, that they were in such mood, and finding this morning that the Senator from New Mexico is in stern resistance to anything which affects the sacrosanct program that his special subcommittee brought in, I now resort to the other course. I wish to say, however, that I thoroughly respect the Senator from New Mexico for standing by the report found by the special subcommittee, because that is the essence of a good soldier.

Mr. BRATTON. With the widely known and universally recognized acumen of the Senator from New Hampshire, I am unable to understand how he entertained the belief that I would agree to accept the amendment and let the matter go to conference. At the outset a substantial number of the committee favored the furlough plan; but the more it was considered, the more it was canvassed, the more the members came together in the belief that harsh though it may be, the flat horizontal cut was the best way to effect the necessary economies; and, as one member of the committee, I adhere to that position. It will weaken the legislation, it will impose upon the employees themselves, if the furlough plan is substituted.

So, Mr. President, in conclusion, having previously addressed myself at length to the committee's proposal, I express the hope that the views already voiced by members of the committee will prevail, and that the substitute will not be adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I indorse fully what has already been so well said by my associates on the committee about the furlough plan. I shall content myself, therefore, with just stating the essential objections to that plan as I see them.

The first is that the plan can not be applied to all the employees of the Government. It can not be applied to rural carriers. It can not be applied to city carriers. It can not be applied to policemen; and to many other groups of employees it can not be applied. It therefore brings about discrimination and inequalities which the Senate should not indorse. The opportunity for preferential treatment is entirely too great under the furlough plan.

In the next place, Mr. President, it is essentially a bureaucratic plan. Of course, the bureau chiefs will feel that they should be exempt from the plan, and no doubt they will be. While they will no doubt apply it to subordinates, there will be few who will apply it to themselves. Really this furlough plan can well be called the plan of the bureaucrats.

In the next place, the very fact that no two of the promoters of this plan seem to agree upon it, or seem to agree upon what provisions it should contain, shows that it has not been well considered. Again, it will not produce as much by at least $40,000,000 as does the plan already agreed upon by the Senate.

This furlough plan and all other plans were before the committee. The committee unanimously rejected all other plans and unanimously reported the 10 per cent reduction plan, and I believe it is the fairest and most just way of handling the situation.

'I want to add that when I went into the consideration of this matter it seemed to me that there ought to be a smaller cut of the smaller salaries; but upon the most careful consideration, upon full argument in the committee, and upon all the facts being adduced, I was led to change my mind. I believed then, and believe now, that the fairest, the most just way of bringing about a reduction is the 10 per cent plan of handling the matter.

Finally, Mr. President, the President himself has accepted the plan of the committee and suggested that he would approve its terms in this bill. Therefore it seems to me that, regardless of personal or individual objection to it, we should uphold the committee, join with the President in his acceptance of the plan, and adopt the 10 per cent reduction plan as passed on Saturday.

Having said that much about the immediate question, I desire now to speak very briefly upon the merits of the pay cut generally. Although a member of the Economy Committee, because of illness I have not heretofore felt able to discuss the matter; but in justice to myself and in justice to the Federal employees and to the Government, I wish to express simply my conclusions about the whole matter.

Mr. President, I have uniformly voted for every increase in the salaries of Federal employees. Not only that; I have earnestly supported these increases in committee, on the floor of the Senate, and publicly. Then we had the money in the Treasury, and I believe my action was entirely right and proper. Reducing them now, when the Government is so far behind in its obligations, seems to be a virtual necessity, and I am for it, but only with the greatest and sincerest regret.

This very year, the first 11 months of the fiscal year, the Government's revenue was $1,700,000,000, in round numbers. Its expenditures, in round numbers, for the same period have been nearly $4,400,000,000, with a deficit up to date for this year of more than $2,600,000,000.

In my judgment, if this condition is allowed to continue there is no telling what may happen, and soon. We have just got to curtail the expenses of our Government, at least temporarily. As bad as cutting our salaries 10 per cent is, it would be infinitely worse to do as Mr. Hoover's Cabinet suggested, dismiss hundreds of thousands of employees. Under the proposed cut there will be substantially no dismissal of employees. Under the proposal it will last for just one year, and then the salaries will automatically be restored. It will not require an act of Congress to restore them. It is not a case of what one would like to do; it is a case of what one must do to preserve our Government. I am sure the Federal employees, of whom I am one, would rather take a cut in salaries than to see wholesale dismissals of employees.

Mr. President, the Government pays out in salaries to-day to its employees about $1,350,000,000. This is $350,000,000 more than all the expenses of Government for every purpose during the year 1916.

The absolute necessity of these reductions is shown by what it takes to pay the present Federal salary list. It will take the entire average cotton crop of 16,000,000 bales at 5 cents a pound, the present price, amounting to $400,000,000; in addition to that it will take the entire average wheat crop of 800,000,000 bushels, at 50 cents a bushel on the farm, aggregating $400,000,000; and in addition to that it will take the entire corn crop, averaging 2,500,000,000 bushels, at the present price of 22 cents a bushel on the farm, making $550,000,000; in all, $1,350,000,000, to pay the Federal salary list alone.

Think of it, Mr. President! All of the cotton crop at the present price; all of the wheat crop at the present price; all of the corn crop at the present price, to pay Federal | salaries alone!

We just have to pause. These men who make the corn crop and the wheat crop and the cotton crop are making no profit; and yet it will take the gross proceeds of all those crops to pay the Federal salary list alone.

Under those circumstances, as much as I dislike to do it, I feel that there certainly should be a temporary readjustment of these salaries.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the Senator think that the great trouble is that we have too many Federal employees, rather than that we pay too great salaries to the individual employees?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; perhaps that is so; but in answer to the Senator's statement I feel that it would be almost inhuman to dismiss any considerable body of our employees in this time of our national distress.

Mr. LOGAN. It would be no worse for them than it has been for millions of others who have been dismissed from private employ.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might not be; but I do not want to add to the unemployed in this country if it is possible to avoid it. It does seem to me, for reasons which I shall give in just a moment, that it is infinitely better for our Federal employees to accept a temporary cut of 10 per cent in their salaries rather than to have additions to the unemployed in America, that number of unemployed being estimated at all the way from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 people.

In addition to this, Mr. President, we have at least 8,000,000 unemployed in this country, many of them hungry and homeless. The plight of the farmers, the plight of the merchants, the plight of all classes of business is the worst in years. In comparison with all these, the average Federal employee's salary, even with the 10 per cent cut, will certainly constitute a generous living.

I wish to call attention to another thing, that commodity prices have all gone down tremendously. An employee of the Government wrote me that his salary was $4,500, and that he did not want it cut. I want to call his attention to the fact that his salary of $4,500 brought him much less than years ago than his reduced salary of $4,050 would bring him to-day. According to the latest statistics, a dollar to-day will buy 50 per cent more than it bought three years ago. Under these conditions, a reduction of 10 per cent is not as injurious to the employees as if there had been no decrease in the cost of living.

Outside of all this, Mr. President, we must preserve our Government. We must not, under any circumstances, let anything happen to our Government. We Federal employees are more vitally interested in preserving the integrity of this Government than is any other class of our citizens, because it affords us a livelihood. All of us must be willing to make sacrifices in this hour of distress. To my mind, the only patriotic thing for us Federal employees to do is to accept this temporary cut for one year in order to help put our Government again on a stable foundation.

One other thing, Mr. President. It is argued that it is unfair to cut the smaller salaries 10 per cent while cutting Representatives and Senators only 10 per cent. In this connection, I call attention to the fact that under the proposed reduction, and under the revenue bill recently passed, a Senator or Representative will be cut on an average about $1,700. His mileage will be cut 25 per cent, his stationery account will be cut, his income taxes will be tremendously increased, with the result that the cuts of Representatives and Senators will amount, under these bills, on an average to something like 17 per cent.

Mr. President, I can ill afford to stand this cut at this time; my obligations are heavy; but my Government comes first in every sense. I am a Federal employee, and if it is necessary to take even more of my salary, I shall cheerfully vote for legislation to that end rather than see any injury come to my Government and your Government. Let us all have a proper sense of patriotism in this matter. When conditions are better I will be in the lead among those to see that Federal employees are properly paid. We can not pay them unless the Government has the money.

Mr. President, seeing the present deplorable financial situation of our Government as it really is, I would not be a true friend of the Government employee if I did not urge him to accept without question whatever temporary cut the Congress finally imposes. It is our highest patriotic duty.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is my understanding correct that the Senator from New Hampshire has withdrawn from his substitute the amendment which I offered last night, and which stands in the printed substitute this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can understand the reason for the action taken by the Senator, and it is perfectly appropriate and perfectly satisfactory to me, namely, that we may have the divided question before the Senate, and the Senate may pass upon both phases of the question independently. Therefore, in order to complete that parliamentary situation and give the Senate the opportunity to express itself upon the question of whether or not a graduated reduction shall be superimposed upon the furlough plan, I now offer as an amendment to the pending substitute, on page 3, after line 4, the language found in the printed substitute from line 5 to line 16, identified as subsection (d).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the proposed substitute will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 4, the Senator from Michigan proposes to insert:

(d) Upon all compensations in excess of $3,000 per annum the furlough provisions heretofore defined shall apply after and in addition to the following reductions in rates of compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933: $3,000 to $4,000, 1 per cent; $4,000 to $5,000, 2 per cent; $5,000 to $6,000, 3 per cent; $6,000 to $7,000, 4 per cent; $7,000 to $8,000, 5 per cent; $8,000 to $9,000, 6 per cent; $9,000 to $10,000, 7 per cent; over $10,000, 8 per cent: Provided, That the application of these reductions shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation below that of the next lower rate in the same service to which a lower percentage of reduction applies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses].

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Hull], the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Steiwer] are detained in a meeting of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, with regard to the furlough plan, whether the provision in the original bill which the Senate inserted on page 59, section 213, in regard to 15 days' leave of absence with pay, is to be stricken out of the original bill?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is to be stricken out?

Mr. MOSES. As I explained to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan] yesterday afternoon, if my amendment as pending is agreed to, I intend to offer three amendments, one of which will be to strike out section 213, the three amendments being offered in order to make the bill uniform if, when, and as my amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Under the Senator's substitute, Government employees would have 30 days' leave of absence without pay?

Mr. MOSES. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. But no leave of absence with pay?

Mr. MOSES. No.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, in that connection, what happens to the field workers who to-day do not get 30 days' leave with pay, but who get only 15 days' leave with pay?

Mr. MOSES. I think there is a provision, though not in my amendment, with reference to them. I have an amendment applying to them if the Senator has reference to those people in the Canal Zone, and so forth.

Mr. BINGHAM. No. In reply to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier], the Senator from New Hampshire said that he would strike out the provision in the bill changing the leave period and making it hereafter 15 days with certain exceptions such as those in the Canal Zone.

Mr. MOSES. But I do not take into consideration the field workers of the class to whom the Senator from Connecticut refers.

Mr. BINGHAM. As the Senator knows, Federal employees in the District are favored by receiving an annual vacation about twice as great as is received by those to whom we ordinarily refer as workers in the field.

Mr. MOSES. Yes; I do know that. If the Senator will prepare an amendment to take care of that, so far as I am concerned. I shall be glad to cooperate with him.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does the Senator say he is going to endeavor to strike out the provision in the bill making the leave period the same for everyone?

Mr. MOSES. Because the furlough plan is supposed to take the place of leave with pay. In other words, having had 30 days leave with pay, they will now get 30 days' leave without pay, and that is their contribution to the condition in which the Treasury finds itself. Manifestly, if we are going to have 30 days' leave without pay and 15 days with pay, that makes a 45-day period if the provision referred to is made to apply to every employee.

Mr. BINGHAM. What provision does the Senator make for the very numerous employees in the field who to-day get only 15 days' leave with pay?

Mr. MOSES. As a matter of fact, I was not considering those employees at all. If the Senator can find a form of words to take care of them, I shall be very glad to cooperate

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this only shows, which was my purpose in rising, the difficulty of drafting a bill of this kind on the floor of the Senate. As a member of the committee that spent three weeks, working all day and sometimes in the evening, discussing the various ramifications of the furlough plan and other plans, I can assure the Senate that an attempt to write it on the floor is full of this sort of pitfalls. It had not occurred to the Senator that possibly 100,000 Government employees in the field receive only 15 days' leave with pay.

Mr. MOSES. I am glad to have the voice of the Senator from Connecticut added to the voice of his colleagues on the subcommittee in stern resistance to touching their work in any capacity whatsoever. My purpose is to get the whole matter into conference. The changes made in the House text will be found to be so few that by the adoption of my amendment the entire subject may then be taken up by the conferees and discussed, not in the confusion of the floor of the Senate. Of course, we understand the conferees now have full power.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he expects to move to strike out the amendment on page 59 if his substitute is adopted?

Mr. MOSES. Yes; section 213.

Mr. JONES. That means a further reduction of $22,000,-000 of revenues produced by the bill.

Mr. MOSES. It all goes to conference. Apparently the Senator does not want us to do anything except to come in and take what his subcommittee has provided.

Mr. JONES. I understand it will go to conference, but I merely wanted to call attention to the effect of striking out the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I merely want to say before taking my seat that I hope the Senate, if and when it adopts amendments to the bill, will provide in the amendment or immediately following it another means of saving the amount of money which is stricken out. As the Senator from Washington just said, we are asked to strike out the permanent provision regarding 15 days' leave, which the Senator from Washington said saves $22,000,000. As a member of the subcommittee considering it I wish to say that I have no sense of pride of authorship. It makes no difference whatsoever if the Senate adopts what we worked out after three weeks of deliberation, so long as the Senate in what it finally does yields the same amount of saving.

We were asked by the President to try to save a large amount of money. When the President came down here and made his personal appeal to the Congress to pass the revenue bill and to pass a bill for savings, he said he understood the subcommittee had succeeded in saving something like $300,000,000 or more, and he hoped the Congress would find it possible to make those savings. It makes not the slightest difference to me how the savings are made so long as they are applied equitably. I hope whenever any cut is made in the provisions which the subcommittee put into the bill, that somewhere else we can find a means of saving an equal amount of money.

There is another objection to the furlough plan, which probably has been mentioned many times, and that is the difficulty of applying it fairly. There are many positions in the Government service and in the service of the District of Columbia where the furlough plan would not work fairly and can not work easily. It would be better anyway, if the Congress thinks the 10 per cent cut too much, to make it an $8\frac{1}{12}$ per cent cut. That could easily and fairly be applied.

For instance, we inquired of the officials of the District of Columbia, to whose employees the bill applies, what would happen to the school teachers, and the same thing would apply to the teachers in Indian schools. They said the furlough plan would not work for them at all, because they get paid for the teaching they do; they get no pay in vacation times; and therefore some other means would have to be found of applying the cut to them. The same thing is true in some of the safety departments—the police and the firemen. It would be extremely difficult to make the furlough plan work for them. The committee went into it very fully and came to the conclusion that the easiest and safest and fairest way of doing for the year we are trying to make the sayings would be the straight 10 per cent cut.

May I add that the furlough plan as worked out by those who first thought of it and who thought they had arrived at a fair amount of adjustment between the rural mail carriers, for instance, who could not work on the furlough plan, and the other employees, would save about $84,000,000. If that is adopted, then there is something like $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 still to be provided for over and above what the committee provided in its other provisions. I think when the Senate makes changes in the bill it will have to provide some other way of saving the money somewhere else, so when the bill is finished we will not have to say to the country that after all we were not able to save the amount of money the President asked us to save and which we tried to save.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] has the right slant on the matter. All he cares about is to get the matter into conference. That is where we are going to have our legislation anyway. What has the Senate to do with it? It gets the bill into conference, says the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] will be one of the conferees. Other members of the conference will have their very definite ideas and will put them into the bill and bring it back here and we will approve it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the Senator it has always been my policy in conference to stand by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, but we have established a new rule.
Mr. JONES. That rule does not go with me. I shall follow the same rule in the future that I have followed in the past with reference to conferences. I want the Senate to do what it wants to do, and I shall stand by it as long as I possibly can.

Mr. NORRIS. I am surprised at the Senator. He has disqualified himself from being on the conference committee. We shall have to put the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] on the conference committee. They do business. They know how to do it. They have shown by their works what they are worth and we have shown by our humility what we are worth. We approve it when they bring it back. That is the way to legislate, and the Senator from New Hampshire knows it. He strikes right at the point with his usual precision when he says this will put it into conference. So it will. That will be the end of our responsibility. Put it into conference and let it pass beyond our jurisdiction.

If the Senator from Washington does not know and has not learned within the last few days what the duties of conferees are and how little respect they ought to have for the will of the Senate after debate and decision and consideration and deliberation, then he has not been attending the sessions of the Senate or he shows that his disposition is such that he is not qualified to be a member of a modern committee of conference.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I think the Senator from Nebraska should not be too quick to conclude that this action of the conferees on the revenue bill will become the rule of the Senate, because after all the Power Trust is not so interested in some of these other measures as it was in the one which we approved yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. The Power Trust will get interested when it gets into conference if we appoint the right conferees.

[Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to observe, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, in connection with his suggestion as to the efficiency of the conferees on the part of the Senate, that I noted this morning in the press a statement from Congressman Crisp, to whom was attributed the responsibility for placing the burden of the power tax on the consumers. I would like to read it for the benefit of the Senate, assuming, of course, that he is correctly reported:

When the conferees reached the tax on the electricity item Senator Smoor stated that it was confiscatory and that it would bankrupt certain public-utility companies in Utah. A majority of the Senate conferees said the item was impossible. After discussion and in the nature of a compromise, I suggested a retail tax on electric energy.

The interesting part of that statement, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit the further observation, is this line, and it comes from Mr. CRISP, according to the paper:

A majority of the Senate conferees-

That would be three-

A majority of the Senate conferees said the item was impossible.

That was after a majority in this body had said that it was not only not impossible but that it was correctly and properly to be levied against the vendor. But a majority of the Senate conferees, three out of five, decided that a majority of the Senate was all wrong in the matter and therefore they would just switch it around completely and add the burden of this tax to the already overburdened backs of the tax-paying consumers of the country.

I thank the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Indiana for his very illuminating comment.

"A majority of the Senate conferees!" That might even include the colleague of the Senator from Indiana. It is the same majority, I suppose, that said to the cooperative organizations of farmers all over the country-and I assume there are some in Indiana-"We are not going to give you the relief that this bill gives you. We are not going to permit anybody to interfere with the machinations of these sleek fellows educated in colleges who come from the Bureau of Internal Revenue, who go out in the country to hoodoo the farmers, and induce them to withdraw, by representations that are claimed to be fraudulent and false, their claim for exemption which the laws of the United States Government gives them." A majority of the Senate conferees, says the extract read by the Senator from Indiana, one of them being the chairman of the Senate conferees, said it was confiscatory when paid by the Power Trust. However, it is religious justice when paid by the poor consumer. It would bankrupt, so the statement says, some public utilities in Utah. I presume a great many people from Utah living in the District of Columbia, on the other hand, are going to pay the tax that is pushed over onto the consumer, because the citizens of Utah who live in the District of Columbia are not public-utility men; they are consumers, and they are the ones who are going to pay the tax. So the Senator from Utah lifted from the backs of his millionaire constituents in Utah this tax and put it onto his constituents in Washington. It is an open secret that there are in Washingon more officeholders, in proportion to its population, from Utah than from any other place on earth; everybody knows that; the Senator from Utah has more constituents in Washington than he has in Utah. So if his intention was to relieve the millionaire corporations of his State that are making and manufacturing electricity by putting the tax on the poor consumers, he has made a mistake. The burden is on his Washington constituents, who will have to pay their share

But, Mr. President, that was another bill that was designed to bring relief. The conferees are not here on the floor. The President signed the bill at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m. and 5 o'clock recuperation on the part of distressed business commenced to show. I presume the conferees are now, in company with the President of the United States, watching the wonderful development that is going on in business and the decrease in unemployment that is now so rapidly taking place that the poor fellows who came here to get jobs will not be able to fill more than half the jobs which will be available if the great impetus to prosperity continues.

I understand, Mr. President, that the Budget which was balanced on yesterday at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m. was unbalanced this morning at 9 o'clock and 38 minutes by the Committee on Military Affairs increasing the appropriation for the Army during the coming fiscal year. Now we shall have to have another balancing of the Budget ceremony after we pass the Army bill, because we are going to pay out large sums of money to the Army.

I think, however, that is justified, because while we have been busy here, shoulder to shoulder sacrificing and staying up all night in the effort to balance the Budget, we have forgotten and the country has forgotten to watch the victorious tread of the American Army in our war with Nicaragua. We have forgotten even to read the newspapers and see how victory is perching on our banners down there and how, under our military leaders, victory after victory is coming to us. Sandino down there has been carrying on that war for the last 10 years; we have been catching him every Monday morning for the last 10 years, and have not caught him yet; he is still fighting.

I read in a morning newspaper of recent issue that-

One hundred are slain as Sandinistas fight marines. National Guard, officered by United States troops, clashes twice with Nicaraguan rebels.

But the American forces were victorious. They were a little surprised on one or two occasions, but, on the whole, victory has come to them. So now, since we have got the Budget balanced, and we can devote a few minutes to other things, we ought to adopt a resolution of thanks to our troops who are making the world safe for democracy down in Nicaragua, and bringing victory after victory to our arms; and yet we are paying no attention to them.

The Military Affairs Committee are wiser than we are, and I am informed that they have, of course, increased the appropriations for the Army, which is necessary in order to carry on the wars which we are prosecuting for the benefit of humanity and to insure honest elections everywhere except in the United States, thus bringing civilization up to a higher standard. When we get the other nations of the world in a position where they will hold honest elections, the next step will be to send our Army out to Chicago, to Philadelphia, to New York, and to Pittsburgh, perhaps, to hold honest elections at home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], as modified.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan, though perhaps he has already explained it when I was in a committee meeting, whether under his amendment, for instance taking the larger salaries of $10,000 and over, the 8 per cent reduction is in addition to the 8½ per cent cut that comes through the furlough plan?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. That makes on salaries of $10,000 and over a cut of 16.3 per cent. Is that correct?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; it makes a total cut of 16.3 per cent.

Mr. BINGHAM. And on salaries of $6,000 it makes a reduction of 11.3 per cent?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the Senator worked out the total saving which would result if his amendment were adopted?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The total saving would be between three and a half and five million dollars added to the saving in the furlough plan itself.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is that all?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. The furlough plan saves about $84,-000,000, and the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, if adopted, would increase the saving by from three and a half million to five million dollars?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator says the furlough plan will save $84,000,000. The author of the amendment insists that it will save from $95,000,000 to $110,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, on the question of savings, I think there should be a brief statement made. The committee of the House first suggested this plan. They secured figures from the Bureau of the Budget. Those figures were printed in the Record and set forth in detail the savings. In connection with the Postal Service the Postmaster General was asked to estimate the net saving, and, taking as accurate his estimate, it showed a saving on account of the postal employees of $24,563,000. The furlough plan then deducts from the allowance of rural carriers $10,312,000, which deduction is larger than the reduction that is forced upon any other employees of the Government under the furlough plan.

The $24,568,000 estimated by the Postmaster General added to the $10,312,000 makes $34,880,000 saved out of the Postal Service. There is left unaccounted for a total of $561,996,000 of the pay roll of the Government from which a saving may be made by the application of the furlough plan; that is the civil pay roll of $561,996,000, outside of the Postal Service and the District of Columbia policemen and firemen. It is a mere question of mathematics to apply the 8½ percentage reduction to $561,000,000, and when that is done the total saving, according to the committee, according to my own calculation, and according to the calculation of the Bureau of the Budget, is $81,713,965.

Then the committee said that they would have to take into consideration the possible saving from the legislative branch of the Government, a saving which is uncertain but which they estimate would make the total $83,000,000.

The sponsors of the furlough plan in the House, with the assistance of the statisticians of the Bureau of the Budget, figured the saving at $83,000,000, and I think that estimate is accurate. The Senator from New Hampshire when first asked about the saving said that the saving would be between $90,000,000 and $95,000,000, and then when the Senator from Michigan raised him $5,000,000, the Senator from New Hampshire promptly retorted by saying that he was now informed that the saving would amount to $110,000,000. I think that if the Senator from Michigan had increased the figures the Senator from New Hampshire might have been led to believe that the saving would be still greater.

Mr. MOSES. All of which, Mr. President, goes to show that one man's guess is just as good as another's, and the guess from New Hampshire is just as good as that from South Carolina. I will add that my figures also came from the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BYRNES. Which figures—the $110,000,000 or the $85,000,000?

Mr. MOSES. The figure $88,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is back to $88,000,000, and has lost in a few minutes the difference between $88,000,000 and $110,000,000, which is quite a loss in so short a time this morning. Does the Senator from New Hampshire say that he did not say his plan would save $110,000,000?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator can read the statement in the RECORD. I said that, according to the telegram presented yesterday by the Senator from Indiana, that would be the saving.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, Mr. President, the saving of $110,-000,000 is based upon a telegram which was delivered to the Senator from Indiana and by the Senator from Indiana delivered to the Senator from New Hampshire, who advised the Senate that the saving would be $110,000,000. In other words, as soon as the telegram was handed to him he preferred the figures in the telegram to the figures presented by the Bureau of the Budget. I think it is safer to rely upon the figures which were worked out not on the floor of the Senate or from a telegram but deliberately by the Bureau of the Budget and presented to the House by a committee composed of Representative Wood, Representative Williamson, and Representative Ramseyer. Those figures show a saving of $83,000,000, and we might as well recognize that the adoption of this amendment means a loss of $40,000,000, and there is no other place in this bill, or any other bill, where that $40,000,000 stands any chance of being saved with the information now before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment in the nature of a substitute as modified offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BRATTON asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on this question before the amendment comes to a vote. I think the statement just made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] is an admission of impotence and incompetence on the part of Congress and the Government to which I can not subscribe. To say that the only place where any savings can be made in a $4,000,000,000 budget is to fry them out of the wages of the Government employees is a statement which I resent, as one Member of this body.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] made brief reference this morning to the action of the Senate Committee on Appropriations in increasing the appropriation for the Army. In his report to Congress in 1927, the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, had this to Probably the most striking fact brought out by such a percentage distribution is the small fiscal importance of ordinary civil expenditures. These are often thought by those who have never looked into the matter to be typical of practically all the disbursements of the Government. When the average citizen grumbles over the size of his income-tax payment he often visualizes his hard-earned money being spent by the Government to compile reports on business or agricultural conditions, or to erect public buildings, send diplomats abroad, carry on scientific investigations, or make and enforce laws. As a matter of fact, a small part of the taxpayer's dollar goes into work of this sort, only about one-sixth being used for all the multitudinous types of ordinary civil functions added together. One-half of each tax dollar is used for the service of the public debt, the equivalent of 20 cents being required for interest and premium payments and 30 cents for debt retirement. The remaining one-third of the taxpayer's dollar is spent on military expenditures for national defense or payments to military veterans.

PERCENTAGE OF EXPENDITURES ATTRIBUTABLE TO WAR

PERCENTAGE OF EXPENDITURES ATTRIBUTABLE TO WAR

It is well known to students of public finance that the peace-time budgets of modern occidental nations are largely concerned with the costs of past and future wars. The question often arises as to the percentage of United States Federal expenditures that is attributable to actual or potential wars. Needless to say, many expenditures of the Government are either always partly military and partly civil or else are predominantly military in war periods but change to a distinctly civil character in times of extended peace. Any definite figure of expenditures for war must, therefore, involve many judgments that are far from most thematical containts. Newstheless, such approximations are mostly while certainty. Nevertheless, such approximations are worth while. The best-known compilation of data in readily available form for use in answering this inquiry was made for the years 1910 to 1920 by the late Edward B. Rosa, of the United States Bureau of Standards. His classified figures were later brought up to the Standards. His classified figures were later brought up to the year 1924 by the United States Bureau of Efficiency. In the accompanying table is shown the percentage of Federal expenditures attributable to wars based on these data. A similar computation that excludes from expenditures for wars the amount of public debt retired from payments by foreign governments, and the cost of civil agencies used for war purposes, such as the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation and the United States Englined Administration, is also included in the table for comparative purposes. The period covered by this latter compilation is from 1915 to 1927, inclusive. to 1927, inclusive.

I ask leave to incorporate the table at this point in my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

 From data compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Efficiency.
 From data compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Efficiency from Budget estimates sent to Congress, but actual figures for debt retirement have been substituted for Budget figures.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in order to bring the material down to date, I wish to insert, following the table, the latest estimate which I have been able to find of anauthentic character, contained in a speech which the President delivered on January 8, 1932, in which he said:

The proposed Budget of Federal Government expenditures for the next fiscal year amounts to about $4,000,000,000, of which over $2,800,000,000 is for debt, military, and veterans' services, and nearly half the balance is for aid to employment in construction works and aids to agriculture.

I wish to say to the Senate that the data contained in the table which I have inserted in the RECORD show that in 1910 the percentage of net Federal expenditures for wars-past. present, and future-was 67.7 per cent; that by 1924 it had reached 89.1 per cent; and that in 1927, the year to which this report refers, it was 82 per cent. In other words, out of every Federal tax dollar extracted from the Federal taxpayers in this country in 1927, nine years after the war was over, 82 cents was used to pay for past and for preparations for future wars. Only 18 cents of that tax dollar was used to support the entire civil arm of the Government; and yet members of this Economy Committee tell us that the only place where we can find any economies in a $4,000,000,000 Budget is to sweat it out of the Government employees!

Mr. President, there has been a lot of propaganda in this country about the Government service, about the type of people that are employed in it, and the type of service that they perform. I wish to say that the facts are indisputable that wages in the Government service have lagged behind wages in other lines of comparable employment in private industry and business, and, furthermore, that they have lagged far behind the rise in the cost of living which marked the period from 1900 down to 1929.

When this war came on a fight was made on this floor by my illustrious father, when costs of living were mounting, in an effort to provide some relief for these Government employees who were unable to provide for themselves and their families even the meager necessities of life under those circumstances. It took a knock-down and drag-out fight on the floor of the United States Senate to get a bonus of $240 for Government employees, although, if my recollection serves me correctly, data were presented at that time to show that there had not been any increases in the Treasury Department since 1855, so far as Government employees were concerned. At that time it was pointed out that the Congress and the Executive had been extremely generous so far as their own salaries and the salaries of the higherpaid Government officials were concerned, increases having been made during that period of ascending costs of living ranging all the way from 50 to 65 and 70 per cent in those higher-paid groups.

After that long struggle to raise Government wages, which were lagging far behind the cost of living and the trend in every line of business and commercial activity, we now find members of the economy committee who brag of the fact that they spent three weeks studying this problem, saying that no other place can be found in which to save thirty-five or forty million dollars in a $4,000,000,000 Budget, 82 per cent of which goes to pay for past and for preparation for future wars, without driving down the standard of living of people who, according to the estimates of bureaus in this Government of ours, are still at this day receiving a wage below the bare subsistence level.

After two and a half years of this depression I am tired of hearing people still prating about "psychology." Pseudopsychologists have been endeavoring to remedy this cataclysmic economic breakdown by trying to change the psychology of the public in this country. It is only within the last six months that it has begun to be recognized, despite all I have tried to do in my humble capacity to direct the attention of the people who exercise responsibility in this Government to the fact that we faced a major change in economic conditions, and that the only way to remedy it was to re-create purchasing power on the part of the masses of the people instead of tinkering with the credit structure when there was no genuine demand for credit for production purposes.

Recently we began to hear on all sides a recognition of the fact that in order to remedy this situation there must be made a drive to re-create purchasing power; but, consistent with the inconsistent thinking—if I may dignify it by such a term—that has been indulged in by those in high positions in this country, the Senate, shortly after it begins to recognize the fact that this is a problem of lifting purchasing power, now turns around and proposes that the Government inaugurate a program definitely effecting, in so far as governmental leadership can effect it, a further decrease in the purchasing power of the people of this country.

I recognize that Congress is once more about to respond to what it believes is an effort to influence the psychology of the people. Therefore, I am confronted with a choice between the proposition reported by the Economy Committee and the one offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses].

Briefly, let me say, the committee contends that the 10 per cent flat cut which it recommended was the only solution of the problem of reduction of salaries at which it could arrive. I want to speak frankly in this instance, because the members of this committee, while protesting in one breath that they have no pride of authorship and that they do not appeal to the Senate to follow the committee, in the next breath say they conducted an exhaustive inquiry into this subject, and finally came to the only conclusion which they believed their deliberations would justify.

I say in all sincerity—and I have high respect for the individuals who compose this Economy Committee—that I, as an individual Member of this body, was positively shocked an individual Member of this body, was positively shocked at the woeful lack of information which the members of this committee displayed during the first 48 hours that this bill was under debate in the Senate. There was simple question after simple question concerning the effect of this proposal which they recommend as the only solution for this problem which they were unprepared to answer and could not answer.

Now we are confronted with a choice between the furlough plan and the action already taken by a majority of this body. The furlough plan, as the lesser of two evils, recommends itself to me for the following reasons:

It does not change the basic rate of pay, which, as I stated at the outset, was won only after a prolonged struggle and belatedly at the hands of a grudging Government.

It takes a step in the direction of a fundamental change in the system of hours of service which must come in this country before we can ultimately solve the problems that confront us, namely, a shortening of the work week. Therefore, if we adopt the furlough plan, the Government of the United States does not, first of all, lend its influence to a further curtailment of purchasing power on the part of those who are now gainfully employed; secondly, the Government does take a step in the direction of the 5-day week, which I believe is one of the adjustments which must come in this country if we are successfully to readjust the economic situation.

Mr. President, with the amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire has accepted, which I offered yesterday, providing that no employee, without his consent, shall be asked to take more than five days' furlough in any one month, I think the chief criticism against the furlough plan, so far as its operation and effect upon the employee is concerned, has been eliminated.

One of the things I feared was that, if the furlough plan were adopted as first presented, employees in the lower-income brackets might be asked to take a consecutive furlough of 24 working days in one month. It will be appreciated by those who are familiar with the struggles made by this group of employees to keep their heads above water, to maintain their families, and to live in decency that a long furlough would have been a terrific hardship.

Most of the employees have their incomes budgeted to such a close and fine figure that, as a matter of fact, the Federal Government might take a leaf from the books, of some of these families. They are in the situation where many of them are forced to draw their salaries bimonthly in order that they may meet the current demands of living expenses. I recognized that it was a serious criticism and would have worked a great hardship upon the Government employees. But with the amendment which has been accepted that may not be done without the consent of the employee. Therefore no person in the Government service, except with his consent, could be asked to take more than five days of furlough in any one month.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] has tried to make a very plausible explanation of section 214 contained in the committee's recommendation, which provides:

In order to keep within the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1933, the heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments of the United States Government and the municipal government of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to furlough, without pay, such employees carried on their respective rolls, such time as in their judgment is necessary to carry out said purpose without discharging such employees, the higher salaried to be furloughed first whenever possible without injury to the service: Provided, That rules and regulations shall be promulgated by the President with a view to securing uniform action by the heads of the various executive departments and independent Government establishments in the application of the provisions of this section.

Despite the plausible explanation made by the Senator from New Mexico, in which he said that section 214 was merely an admonition to the heads of the Government departments not to exceed the appropriations provided for the fiscal year 1933, despite the statement made by the Senator from Washington that it was the primary purpose of incorporating this unlimited furlough provision into the committee's recommendations, the fact remains, nevertheless, that if the Congress fails to provide sufficient appropriations for the year 1933 to meet these salaries after the committee's reductions have gone into effect, there will be an application of the principle of the furlough wholesale, without pay, in order to prevent the submission of estimates for deficiencies.

What does that mean translated into the effect upon the Government service? It means that a Government employee will be asked to make up any failure on the part of Congress to provide sufficient appropriations for his salary by a furlough of indeterminate length, in addition to a 10 per cent cut.

An individual in the Government service, if he happens to be in a department where Congress has applied the economy cuts to all appropriations, except as to the Army and the Navy, may be asked to take a furlough for six months without pay, in addition to receiving for the six months he works a 10 per cent reduction. The committee bill combines the two worst features of both plans, and is absolutely indefensible.

Mr. President, under the furlough plan, at least something is given in exchange for the reduction in wage. A shorter working time is provided. But under the committee's flat 10 per cent reduction, nothing is obtained in exchange for that reduction so far as the working time is concerned, and, in the second place, the employee may also be asked to take a six months' furlough without pay.

Mr. President, confronted with this situation, recognizing the temper of this body, I realize that those of us who do not subscribe to this hue and cry that you can inflate with one hand, and by adopting deflationary measures with the other, accomplish anything toward economic recovery, must take the lesser of two evils.

Therefore, I hope the Senate will adopt the furlough plan. It will not mean a long struggle over the next 15 or 20 years to lift the standards of wages in the Government service to a commensurate level with a decent and respectable standard of living.

It will put the influence of the Government behind the change in our policy of employment in this country, which I believe is sound and in the right direction, namely, toward a 5-day week.

With the amendments which have been incorporated, the furlough plan will be equitably administered, because it will remain within the control of the individual employee himself to say whether he shall take his furlough in longer periods than five days in any one month.

If this furlough plan is voted down, then I recognize that the committee's recommendations will pass. I know full well what will happen. Industrial corporations, which have already cut wages 10 per cent three or four times, will point to such action on the part of the Government to justify a fourth and a fifth 10 per cent reduction in wages. It will start the engine of further deflationary measures in this country as nothing else which we could do at this time.

On the other hand, if the furlough plan is adopted, such leadership as the Federal Government can afford at this time will be in the direction of the 5-day week, which must come in this country if we are successfully to operate industries which have been mechanized and which are now able to produce vastly more than the purchasing power of the people enables them to consume.

Mr. President, a great hue and cry has been raised in this country for the reduction of expenditures on the part of taxpayers. I wish to point out that the Industrial Conference Board made an estimate of all governmental expenditures for the year 1929. They found that local expenditures amounted to $7,126,000,000; that State expenditures amounted to $1,990,000,000, and that Federal expenditures amounted to $3,932,000,000.

So, looking at this proposition from the point of view of the taxpayers in the United States as a whole, this 10 per cent reduction in pay, as recommended by the committee, and the furlough plan, as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, differ to the extent of $33,000,000, and, so far as the taxpayers of the country are concerned, they will never be able to see appreciably in their taxes that saving as between the two plans.

I sincerely trust that the Senate will adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

THE POWER COMPANIES

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the action of the committee of conference in dealing with the item in the revenue bill in relation to the tax on electrical energy having been adverted to in the course of the debate this morning. I send to the desk a copy of the Baltimore Sun of this morning containing an editorial on that subject, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested. The CHIEF CLERK. From the Baltimore Sun, June 7, 1932:

A LITTLE TOO SMART

It is pleasant to note the roar of anger in the Senate over the action of the conference committee in shifting the burden of the tax on electricity from the companies to the consumers. In all probability the shift will not break many backs. A man who uses $5 worth of electricity in his home in a month will pay a tax of 15 cents. That is endurable. Nevertheless, the shift of the burden to the consumers' backs was outrageous and indefensible.

to the consumers' backs was outrageous and indefensible.

In the first place, the consumer is going to pay taxes in so many directions that even 15 cents may not be entirely negligible. In the second place, the power companies have fared better in the financial storm that started in 1929 than almost any other industry that can be imagined. In the third place, the issue as to whether the tax should fall on the companies or the consumers had been fought out on the floor, where debate was open and votes were recorded, and decided in favor of the consumers, and it is a peculiarly contemptible thing to reverse such a decision in the secrecy of the conference committee's room. No wonder a large body of conservative Members joined the Norris group in voting against this part of the conference report.

To the power companies it may be said that it is not altogether

To the power companies it may be said that it is not altogether certain that they have been as smart as they think. They are charging rates to-day designed to yield a handsome return upon valuation of their property fixed in accordance with the reproduction rule. They succeeded in establishing that rule in the days when prices were rising. Applied rigorously in these days of falling prices, the same reproduction rule would play hob with the valuation of their property, and therefore with the rates they may charge. It seems to us that really smart people would have given a thought to the public's attitude in that situation before putting over a fast one at the expense of the public.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in line with the editorial just read from the Baltimore Sun, I desire to submit some observations with reference to power-company profits and holding-company collapses. Recently, when this matter was being discussed in the Senate, both the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] had much to say about power companies experiencing hard times and being reduced to a very small margin of profit. This is entirely erroneous, and can only be explained on the ground of confusion with the towering and insecure superstructures of holding companies that have been erected upon the operating power companies.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] showed the other day that the power companies' earnings were larger in 1930 and 1931 than in 1929. Investigation discloses that the same is true of the companies' net earnings.

The Electrical World, power company organ, states in its issue of May 28, 1932, that—

Not one of the major operating companies has omitted dividends so far.

Studying the earnings of 41 important operating companies scattered over the country for 12-month periods ending with January, February, or March, 1932, the Electrical World found that as compared with the preceding 12 months there was an average decline in gross earnings of 3 per cent. But net earnings declined only four-tenths of 1 per cent. Who can name another important industry anywhere that is so fortunately situated?

Twenty-one companies of the forty-one studied by the Electrical World actually increased their net earnings. The increases ranged from two-tenths of 1 per cent for the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to 9.6 per cent for the Mississippi Power & Light Co. and 10 per cent for the Louisiana Power & Light Co. Incidentally, the Federal Trade Commission has disclosed big write-ups in these Mississippi and Louisiana companies named as the most prosperous now, so that these phenomenal earnings are being made upon heavily watered stock, and the resulting dividends are being paid to controlling interests—Electric Bond & Share—upon very little real investment.

Another list presented in this same issue of the Electrical World shows that certain of the power companies are earning far more than the amount required to pay their dividends. These figures are for the year 1931. The Edison Electric Illuminating Co. of Boston, for example, paid dividends of $13.60, but had available for dividends $18.79. The Central Hudson Gas & Electric Co. paid dividends of 80 cents, but had available for dividends $1.54 per share. The Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. paid $1.96 per share and had available $2.87 per share.

Considering the companies which showed some recession in net earnings, the per cent of decline ranged from sixtenths of 1 per cent for the Consumers Power Co. to 16.9 per cent for the Houston Electric Co. There were only 20 which showed any reduction as against 21 reporting increases. And for the whole group of 41 companies the average decline in net earnings was only four-tenths of 1 per cent.

In the holding companies which live upon the operating companies, and for many years lived very high, we have a different story. For a group of 13 reported upon in this same issue of the Electrical World, the average decline in net profits from 1930 to 1931 was nearly 15 per cent—net profit as used here means the amount available for common-stock dividends and surplus. Only 8 of the 13 holding companies were earning their dividends fully in 1931. Although the extent of the decline varied rather widely, every one of the 13 showed a noteworthy decline, ranging all the way from 3.47 per cent in the North American Light & Power Co. to 33.40 per cent in the Standard Gas & Electric Co. (Byllesby). The decline in net profits for some of the other great holding companies from 1930 to 1931 was:

North American, 15.80; Niagara Hudson, 13.70; Electric Power & Light, 25.21; and Middle West Utilities (Insull), 14.30

One explanation of these holding company difficulties which have plunged half a dozen of the large ones into receivership, even while the operating power companies on the whole remained prosperous, is the way in which a slight fall of earnings in the operating company is exaggerated in the holding company above. The holding company ordinarily holds only the common stock of the operating company, and therefore catches the full force of a shrinkage. Where four or five holding companies are heaped one upon another, with each holding the common stock of the one below, the effect of the shrinkage is vastly magnified. This was the case with the $2,500,000,000 Insull system, which recently went into receivership, with a loss of untold millions to investors in the market value of their securities.

But the decline in earnings, where it has occurred, does not account for all the trouble. The holding companies were as outrageously and recklessly financed as the operating companies under their control, it is shown in the Federal Trade Commission's reports. In many instances on record their stocks were prodigously watered and they were dangerously overborrowed. They have suffered, too, in many instances from a manipulation of accounts which served to conceal their weaknesses as long as business was booming and any sort of securities was snapped up eagerly by investors.

To take a simple example, the Electrical World, in discussing in this issue of May 28, 1932, the effect upon holding companies of fluctuations in the earnings of operating companies, goes on to say:

Such fluctuations necessitate the maintenance of an adequate surplus by holding companies to level peaks and valleys in the earnings from good years and bad.

But some of the holding companies, when hard times came, had little real surplus of this sort to fall back upon. Insull's Middle West Utilities Co. showed on its books when it came before the Federal Trade Commission a supposed earned surplus of $13,532,000. But the commission's accountants found that much of this did not represent money earned in the course of business and laid by for the rainy day. It represented, in part, only book figures resulting from the marking up of security values and the like. It was of no help in paying off pressing bank loans or meeting dividend requirements.

To sum up, the power companies' rates are still "frozen" at the old exorbitant levels, and since people can not get along without electricity the companies' profits remain substantially as large as they were before the depression. But the hardship this imposes upon the rate payers has failed to be of much benefit to the hundreds of thousands of investors who bought holding company securities and who have suffered enormous losses.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the fact that when people were talking about the earning capacity of the power companies they certainly could not have been speaking with reference to the operating companies because, as I have just shown, the operating companies throughout the country have been making money. The holding companies, which were based almost entirely upon watered stock and which were organized for the sole purpose of milking the operating companies and selling their watered stock to an unsuspecting public, have been the only ones who, as a matter of fact, have lost during the depression. They have lost because of the fact that they had no real assets.

From a reading of the Federal Trade Commission report I venture to assert without fear of successful contradiction that there are very few of the holding companies but what could be and should be prosecuted by the Attorney General of the United States of America for using the mails to defraud. If any other industry in the United States, if any group of individuals in the United States, in the Northwest or any other section of the country, had gotten together and perpetrated a fraud upon the people of the United States and upon the stockholders, had used the United States mails for unloading watered stocks upon the public and making the representations which those companies have made, they would have been prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary for using the mails to defraud. I say that because of the fact that I have had some experience in prosecuting cases of that kind. I can take the Federal Trade Commission report and show where these companies have sent fraudulent and false misrepresentations through the mails with respect to what they were actually getting in the way of profits and what they actually had in the way of assets.

But, Mr. President, it seems to be a hopeless task to do anything with a group of individuals who have the enormous power and the enormous backing and the enormous money that some of the power companies and interests have. It is not only true of the power companies, but it is true of a lot of other companies which were operating and selling their stocks upon the stock markets during the boom time.

I am in hopes that the Banking and Currency Committee will go to the very bottom of the stock-market debacle and that they will not simply scratch the surface—not so much with the idea of trying to send somebody to the penitentiary, but with the idea of enacting some legislation to prevent this sort of thing occurring in the future and with the view of enacting legislation of a national scope that will make it criminal for these people to carry on their pools, as has been shown before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and likewise to make it criminal to carry on short selling as has been done on the New York Stock Exchange. If this session of Congress did nothing more than to prevent that practice, we would be really doing some constructive work which would be of untold benefit to the people of the country.

PROHIBITION—STATEMENT OF JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.—
PROPOSED PARTY PLANKS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a statement of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., on the subject of prohibition, as carried this morning in the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator think the fact that Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., has changed his views with reference to prohibition means that Mr. Hoover is going to change his views in reference to that subject?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not be surprised if that were so. There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune, June 7, 1932]

My position may surprise you, as it will many of my friends. I was born a teetotaler; all my life I have been a teetotaler on principle. Neither my father nor his father ever tasted a drop of intoxicating liquor, nor have I. My mother and her mother were among the dauntless women of their day, who, hating the horrors of drunkenness, were often found with bands of women of like mind, praying on their knees in the saloons in their ardent desire to save men from the evils that so commonly sprang from those sources of iniquity. Although a teetotaler on principle and in practice, I have always stood for whatever measure seemed at the time to give promise of best promoting temperance. With my time to give promise of best promoting temperance. With my father, I for years supported the Anti-Saloon League in both its State and National work. It was at one time reported that our contributions toward the passage of the eighteenth amendment amounted to between $15,000,000 and $30,000,000. As I have preamounted to between $15,000,000 and $30,000,000. As I have previously stated, from the year 1900 up to and including the date of the passage of the eighteenth amendment, the contributions of my father and myself to all branches of the Anti-Saloon League, Federal and State—the only contributions made by us in support of prohibition legislation—aggregated $350,000.

When the eighteenth amendment was passed I earnestly hoped—with a host of advocates of temperance—that it would be generally supported by public opinion and thus the day be hastened when the value to society of men with minds and bodies free from the undermining effects of alcohol would be generally realized. That the value to society of men with minds and bodies free from the undermining effects of alcohol would be generally realized. That this has not been the result, but, rather, that drinking generally has increased; that the speak-easy has replaced the saloon not only unit for unit but probably twofold if not threefold; that a vast army of lawbreakers has been recruited and financed on a colossal scale; that many of our best citizens, piqued at what they regarded as an infringement of their private rights, have openly and unabashed disregarded the eighteenth amendment; that as an inevitable result respect for all law has been greatly lessened; that crime has increased to an unprecedented degree—I have slowly and reluctantly come to believe. and reluctantly come to believe.

I am not unmindful of the great blessing which the abolition of the saloon has been to our country or of certain other benefits that have resulted from the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. It is my profound conviction, however, that these benefits, important and far-reaching as they are, are more than outwelghed by the evils that have developed and flourished since its adoption, evils which, unless promptly checked, are likely to lead to conditions unspeakably worse than those which prevailed before.

It is not to be expected that the repeal of the eighteenth amendment will in itself end all these evils and restore public respect for law. I believe, however, that its repeal is a prerequisite to the attainment of that goal. I am informed that should repeal become effective all the machinery for controlling the liquor traffic built up in the respective States and in the Nation throughout the many years prior to the enactment of the eighteenth amendment would, with few exceptions, be in force, strengthened by various Federal laws and court decisions having to do with the regulation of interstate commerce. Moreover, were the eighteenth amendment to be repealed, sufficient time ought to be given before repeal became effective to permit the various States through legislative action representing public opinion to set up such new safeguards or methods with reference to the handling of alcoholic beverages as seemed best calculated to insure adequate and proper control of the traffic in the interest of temperance and at the same time safeguard the normal liberty of action of the individual,

There are many who, feeling as I do, that the eighteenth amend-

There are many who, feeling as I do, that the eighteenth amendment has not accomplished the object which its enactment sought to attain, would willingly favor its repeal were some alternate method that gave promise of better results offered as a substitute. In my judgment, it will be so difficult for our people as a whole to agree in advance on what the substitute should be, and so unlikely that any one method will fit the entire Nation, that repeal will be far less possible if coupled with an alternate measure. For that reason I the more strongly approve the simple, clear-cut position you are proposing to recommend and which I shall count

For that reason I the more strongly approve the simple, clear-cut position you are proposing to recommend and which I shall count it not only a duty but a privilege to support.

My hope is that the tremendous effort put forth in behalf of the eighteenth amendment by millions of earnest, consecrated people will be continued in effective support of practical measures for the promotion of genuine temperance. To that cause my own efforts will ever be devoted.

Very sincerely,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, Jr.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I notice that there are now absent from the Chamber many Senators of both parties, Democrats as well as Republicans. I should not be surprised if a great many of them are engaged in working on an ideal prohibition plank, and having some facility in expressing myself along political lines, I have thought perhaps I could save them all a great deal of trouble. So I have prepared a very short and very ideal prohibition plank which, if adopted, would please everybody, and which, I hope, will render unnecessary in the future the labors of Senators along this line and enable them to return to the Chamber to take part in the debate.

The plank which I propose is to be read at national conventions accompanied on the pipe organ by Hearts and Flowers.

The plank reads as follows:

We recognize there are three groups of thought about national prohibition.

- 1. There is the dry group. We love all those persons in this group who no doubt are dry because of love for those who are opposed to national prohibition. We know that nothing but love and kindness for others could cause people to embrace national prohibition.
- 2. There is the repeal group. We love all those persons in this group who, no doubt, are wet because of love of those who are in favor of national prohibition. We know that nothing but love and kindness for others could cause people to oppose national prohibition.
- 3. There is the modification group. We love all those persons 3. There is the modification group. We love all those persons in this group who, no doubt, are modifiers because of love for those who are either wet or dry as regards national prohibition. We know that nothing but love and kindness for others could cause people to be neither for nor against national prohibition. We therefore point out to all and invite all persons to support the above plank, because it is filled with love and kindness and fair to all shades of opinion on this subject. Amen.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland said that the prohibition planks he proposed should be accompanied by the melody to which the name "Hearts and Flowers" has been given. That would be very appropriate. The hearts would be the broken hearts of the victims of the liquor traffic, and the flowers would be the flowers sent for the dead who have perished from its ravages.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses) as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the yeas and nays having been ordered, before the vote is taken I wish to make it entirely clear as to what took place with reference to my withdrawal of the so-called Vandenberg amendment and the subsequent rejection of that amendment by the Senate. It includes not only the matter printed in italics, in section (d), on page 3 of the printed amendment, but it includes also the amendment on page 5, line 14, and line 17, where the 16% per cent and 10 per cent are put in as amend-Those were all included in the amendment which was withdrawn by me and then voted upon separately by the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the question further. I hope we may have a vote on it, but I think we should have a quorum before the vote begins. I, therefore, suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kean	Schali
Austin	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Shortridge
Barkley	Fletcher	La Follette	Smith

la.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Dickinson in the chair). Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], as modified, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swansonl. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when his name was called). a pair for the day with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley]. I am advised that if present he would vote nay." If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Not knowing how he would vote, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLENN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is absent from the city. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague [Mr. COPELAND] is detained on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison and Mr. Bailey], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] are necessarily out of the city.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] is necessarily detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS-36 Austin Davis Frazier Neely Steiwer Barbour Thomas, Okla. Nye Oddie Blaine Goldsborough Townsend Vandenberg Carey Coolidge Patterson Hawes Wagner Walcott Walsh, Mass. So Mr. Moses' amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a telegram from Houston, Tex., signed by M. K. Williams and 7,769 other citizens. The telegram, including the signatures, comprises 22,381 words. The manager of the Western Union tells me it is the longest telegram ever received at Washington. The message part is short, and I ask that the message part be published in the RECORD. It urges prompt action on revenue, drastic economies, and an immediate adjournment of Congress after these matters have been cared for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

Houston, Tex., June 6, 1932.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,

United States Congress, Washington.

(For Texas Senators and Representatives.)
We, the undersigned, implore our Texas Senators and Congress. men to join in securing drastic economies in governmental expenses. It is our opinion that the estimated returns from income taxes will not secure the expected increases, due to the poverty of all the people, including thousands of the former rich, and that to balance the Budget of our Government we must put into effect the same economies that have been found necessary by all lines of business and individuals. We believe it is now time for the appropriations to be slashed and we call upon you to insist upon such action. All business of this country is being imperiled by the uncertainties of taxation and appropriations. The people are in fear of worse to come and the sooner Congress adopts the new tax bill and acts upon a program of economy the better it will be for the entire country. Take these two actions, consider no other matters, and then adjourn. The 7,770 signatures to this telegram were signed in one day.

M. K. WILLIAMS (other signatures omitted).

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice given by me on Saturday last, I now enter motions to reconsider, first, the vote agreeing to the reported amendment, on page 46, lines 16 and 17; and, second, the vote rejecting the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the foregoing amendment exempting members of the Metropolitan police force and the Fire Department of the District of Columbia from reductions in compensation under section 102.

I enter that motion as of now, pursuant to the notice given on Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be received and lie on the table. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title II-Provisions affecting personnel," on page 52, after line 18, to strike out:

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT FOR AGE

SEC. 204. On and after July 1, 1932, no person rendering civilian service in any branch or service of the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia who shall have reached the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service, applicable to such person, shall be continued in such service, notwithstanding any provision of law or regulation to the contrary: Provided, That no such person here-tofore or hereafter separated from the service of the United States or the District of Columbia under any provision of law or regulation providing for such retirement on account of age shall be eligible again to appointment to any appointive office, position, or employment under the United States or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to any person named in any act of Congress providing for the continuance of such person in the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 12, to insert the following subhead:

Rate of compensation upon which retired pay shall be based.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 21, after the designation "Title I," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That retirement deductions authorized by law to be made from the salary, pay, or compensation of officers or employees and transferred or deposited to the credit of a retirement fund, shall be based on the regular rate of salary, pay, or com-pensation instead of on the rate as temporarily reduced under the provisions of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 204. The provisions of this part of this act providing for temporary reductions in compensation and suspension in automatic increases in compensation shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation upon which the retired pay or retirement benefits of any officer or employee would be based but for the application of such provisions, but the amount of retired pay shall be reduced as provided in Title I: Provided, That retirement deductions authorized by law to be made from the salary, pay, or compensation of officers or employees and transferred or deposited to the credit of a retirement fund, shall be based on the regular rate of salary, pay, or compensation instead of on the rate as temporarily reduced under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary reduction of travel allowances," on page 54, after line 5, to strike out:

(a) The traveling and per diem allowances provided for in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the subsistence expense act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926 (U. S. C., Sup. V, title 5, secs. 823-826), shall not exceed the amounts of $5, $4, $6, and $5, respectively, in lieu of the amounts set forth in such sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 13, to insert:

PERMANENT REDUCTION OF TRAVEL ALLOWANCES

Sec. 206. Section 3 of the subsistence expense act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 688, 689), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Civilian officers and employees of the departments and establishments, while traveling on official business and away from their designated posts of duty, shall be allowed, in lieu of their actual expenses for subsistence and all fees or tips to porters and stewards, a per diem allowance to be prescribed by the head of the department or establishment concerned, not to exceed the rate of $5 within the limits of continental United States, and not to exceed an average of $6 beyond the limits of continental United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 56, to insert:

SEC. 207. Sections 4, 5, and 6 of the said subsistence expense act of 1926 are hereby repealed, and section 7 thereof is hereby amended by striking out the reference therein to actual expenses so that the section, as amended, will read as follows:

"SEC. 7. The fixing and payment of per diem allowance, or

"SEC. 7. The fixing and payment of per diem allowance, or portions thereof, shall be in accordance with regulations which shall be promulgated by the heads of departments and establishments and which shall be standardized as far as practicable and shall not be effective until approved by the President of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 11, to

Sec. 208. Hereafter, no law or regulation authorizing or permitting the transportation at Government expense of the effects of officers, employees, or other persons, shall be construed or applied as including or authorizing the transportation of an automobile.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 16, to insert.

SEC. 209. The provisions of all acts heretofore enacted inconsistent with the provisions of sections 206, 207, and 208 are, to the extent of such inconsistency, hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Limitations on amount of retired pay," on page 58, after line 4, to strike out:

(b) This section shall not apply to officers on the emergency officers' retired list created by the act of May 24, 1928, and shall not apply to any person retired for disability incurred in line of duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment at that point. Beginning in line 5, in lieu of what is stricken out, I move to insert:

(b) This section shall not apply to any person retired for injuries received in battle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, beginning at line 5, in lieu of the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert the following:

(b) This section shall not apply to any person retired for injuries received in battle.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida explain the purpose and effect of his amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 211, just preceding, on page 57, makes a limitation on the amount of retired pay. It reads as follows:

(a) After the date of the enactment of this act, no person holding a civilian office or position, appointive or elective, under the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia or under any corporation, the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, shall be entitled, during the period of such incumbency, to retired pay from the United States for or on account of services as a commissioned officer in any of the services mentioned in the pay adjustment act of 1922 (U. S. C., title 37), at a rate in excess of an amount which when combined with the annual rate of compensation from such civilian office or position, makes the total rate from both sources more than $3,000; and when the retired pay amounts to or exceeds the rate of $3,000 per annum such person shall be entitled to the pay of the civilian office or position or the retired pay, whichever he may elect. As used in this section, the term "retired pay" shall be construed to include credits for all service that lawfully may enter into the computation thereof.

I think this ought not to apply to a retired officer who is retired for injury received in battle. I offer the amendment because I think that an officer who has been actually wounded in battle ought not to be deprived of his retired pay.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course we all sympathize with an officer who is wounded in action; but he is not entitled to one particle more sympathy than a fellow officer or fellow soldier right beside him who gets pneumonia from living in the trenches. One suffers in his country's service just as much as the other.

I should hope that the Senator would broaden his amendment so as to make it cover injuries received or disability suffered in line of duty.

suffered in line of duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that; and I accept that amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire what the purpose of this amendment is? As I understand—and I am not very familiar with the bill, because of the press of other duties—there are a large number of persons who are receiving employment at the hands of the Government who have retired pay, and the purpose of this section is that they shall not receive in the aggregate more than the salary which is provided for the position which they are filling. In other words, they are restricted to the salary which is fixed by law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement that has been made we are restricted a little bit in dealing with this subject. I have printed and lying on the desk an amendment dealing with the body of this paragraph, at the bottom of page 57; but inasmuch as the amendment now offered by the Senator from Florida deals with a committee amendment and not with the House text, it forces that amendment to be considered first, and my amendment has to lie over until all the committee amendments are acted on.

In other words, we are dealing with the exception before we establish the rule, which is an awkward way of going about the matter. I hope to see the whole section amended, so as to provide uniformly for all officers, and provide that the combination of their retired pay and their civilian pay shall not be permitted to exceed the amount they were getting before retirement. That would be a just rule. Under such a rule as that, the scandals in the Veterans' Bureau could not have occurred. Unfortunately, however, our procedure is such that we have to deal with the exception first before we deal with the general rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair suggest that it would be well for the Senator from Florida to permit the committee amendment to be considered now, and then the two amendments could be taken up in their order when the other amendments to the bill are being considered.

Mr. REED. I suggest that that would be better. we get to amendments to the House text, then the Senator from Florida can offer his amendment as an addendum to the House text in subdivision (a), and we can take up the whole matter of the general rule and the exception at one

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Florida that we let this matter go over until we reach and dispose of Title VII. Our action on that may have some bearing on this question.

Mr. REED. To which amendment does the Senstor refer? Mr. BRATTON. The amendment the Senator from Florida is now offering. I suggest that we let the matter go over by unanimous consent until we make disposition of Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the question arose on agreeing to the committee amendment, and I wanted to have this matter attended to before that amendment was agreed to or rejected, because I am proposing to substitute something for the committee amendment. I quite agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the body of the section really ought to be dealt with before we get to the exception. But we were not doing that, and an exception was about to be acted on, so I offered the amendment. I am willing to let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair suggest that the committee amendment go over, as well as the pending amendment, until the other committee amendments are agreed to, and then the whole matter can be considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion of the Chair, and on condition that the whole matter shall go over until we deal with the other section, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 9, to strike out the subhead "Personnel reductions-Married persons," and insert in lieu thereof "Appointment of married persons."

The amendment was agreed to.

LEGISLATION RECOMMENDED BY CONFERENCE OF MUNICIPAL EXECUTIVES

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a few days ago there was held in the city of Detroit a conference of the chief executives of several American municipalities dealing with the municipal fiscal difficulty which impends in such dire emphasis in many parts of the country. That conference named a committee consisting of Frank W. Murphy, mayor of Detroit; James M. Curley, mayor of Boston; Dan W. Hoan, mayor of Milwaukee; George W. Welsh, city manaager, Grand Rapids; Ray Miller, mayor of Cleveland; William T. Anderson, mayor of Minneapolis; and T. S. Walmsley, mayor of New Orleans, to present a memorial to the Vice President. The committee has just presented the memorial to the Vice President, and I desire now to submit it to the Senate. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the memorial.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I. PREAMBLE

The world and the Nation are at war. The enemy is hunger. We have it on reliable authority that the extent of unemployment in the United States now equals that of all Europe combined—which means all the rest of the industrial world. This has precipitated an emergency unprecedented in modern times. Such a situation calls for the prompt, vigorous, and intelligent measures which war always makes imperative.

We do not in any sense retreat from the position, fundamental in our democratic system, that in normal times municipal governments must maintain themselves, perform their proper functions, and solve the social and economic problems incident to such normal activity. But these are not normal times. It is a crisis, imminent and terrifying. The long period during which unemployment has continued and increased has created conditions of suffering and need nothing less than appalling.

The cities of the Nation, large and small, have met these conditions with resourcefulness and courage. But all their resources ditions with resourcefulness and courage. But all their resources of money and credit are nearing exhaustion. Relief must be found or nation-wide insolvency will result. Tax delinquencies have increased to an alarming extent. Our industrial cities are staggering under the burden of debts incurred as a result of the vast expansion of prosperous years. The interest and sinking charges on these obligations represent a wholly disproportionate burden at the present time, due to the greatly increased purchasing power of the dollar. Even those municipalities which have instituted the most rigid economies in operation are now in a precarious situthe doran level those intuities which have instituted the most rigid economies in operation are now in a precarious situation. Not only welfare relief but essential governmental services ation. Not only welfare relief but essential governmental services are now threatened and the very foundations of our social order are imperiled. In the face of this threat against human welfare and human life itself measures must be employed as drastic as those of military authority in times of actual physical warfare.

The problem is now a national one. The Federal Government is the only agency that represents all the people and is able to deal adequately with the emergency. It has the unlimited credit of the Nation, and by intelligent planning it can provide for the human welfare and security of its citizens. The measures we are human welfare and security of its citizens. The measures we are advocating are entirely consistent with a sound fiscal policy and need not in any way disturb our national credit or stability. Hence the Federal Government is the one remaining source to which we can turn in this emergency, and we do so with confidence that wise and adequate assistance will not be denied.

II. RECOMMENDATIONS

II. RECOMMENDATIONS

We therefore, mayors, city managers, and representatives of 31 leading cities of the United States, called into conference at Detroit, Mich., June 1, 1932, after careful consideration of the facts set forth in this preamble, submit the following as a remedy, in whole or in part, for the critical conditions described:

1. We recommend that a $5,000,000,000 prosperity loan be made available immediately for national projects to effectuate the employment of millions of men and in this manner to provide work for our jobless, redistribute purchasing power, and thereby stimulate industry. We recommend that this be done by Congress declaring war, not figuratively but literally, against unemployment and depression; and that to this end a work army be mobilized, as armies were mobilized in 1917-18, for work on national projects throughout the United States.

2. We recommend the immediate enactment of such relief

2. We recommend the immediate enactment of such relief legislation as may be necessary to conserve the welfare of the American people during the present industrial depression.

3. We recommend an amendment to the congressional act incorporating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or such other legislation as may be finally determined advisable, to permit such corporation to invest its assets in notes, debentures, bonds, or other faith and credit obligations of cities for public welfare, to provide money for delinquent tax obligations and the refunding of bonds and obligations to release funds necessary to maintain the adequate and proper operation of municipal government.

4. We recommend that copies of these resolutions be presented to the President and the Congress of the United States and be made available to the press of the Nation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Senate is signally honored by the presence in one of its galleries of the mayors signing the memorial which was read a moment ago. One of them is a former Member of Congress. These men speak straight from the heart in behalf of the American masses, and the Senate would do well to consider seriously what they say.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Committee on Banking and Currency will take some action on this memorial. It seems to me that the recommendations of the memorial just read by the clerk present one of the fairest and what would be one of the most effective methods of reaching the unemployment situation that has been presented to the Senate.

Those who favor the recommendations proposed by the mayors, or in some part favor them, at least, and began advocating practically the same thing last fall before Congress convened, and continued in their advocacy of those methods after Congress convened, met with bitter opposition from all sides. If the advice of those who favored that kind of a proposal had been heeded and acted on last December when Congress convened, the things asked for would have been in operation at this moment, millions of men now walking the streets hunting for jobs would have been in positions, they would have been able to support themselves necessaries of life the money obtained from such employ-

Nobody can tell exactly how far-reaching such a program would have been. It is quite evident, however, that it would have gone away beyond the immediate employment of the men concerned. It would have gone away beyond what we could possibly imagine. The effect of it would have reached into all channels of trade and activity.

Many men who are now out of employment, even though they would not have been employed directly in the method advocated by this memorial, would have been employed, nevertheless, because the effect of the plan would have reached into every community and into every business, and would have had a direct bearing upon the country at large.

It would have necessitated the issuance of bonds, it is true, something we are to come to if we are to tide over the coming winter those who will be in need of assistance. The difference would have been that the unemployment would have been much less extensive, the distress not so great, and the suffering not so far-reaching.

Mr. President, it seems to me it would have been better if we had met in a national way the conditions, which have been continually getting worse, and it would have been better if we had met them at the beginning. No one can tell now just what the immediate future has in store, but the summer is half over, and those who said last fall that when spring came unemployment would disappear have had their eyes opened, and now begin to realize that those few who urged last fall that we take the step now suggested, so that we would be ready at the beginning of this summer to put the unemployed to work, were right; they realize that the prophecies then made have been fulfilled and the warnings then given have been proven justified. Much as I regret it we will be face to face a year later with a problem that ought to have been met frankly at the very beginning, which has been much increased in its suffering and in its widespread effect.

Bonds of the Federal Government, I think, will have to be issued. Municipalities and States and charitable organizations have gone the extreme limit. They will not be able to carry on next winter as they did last winter. Moreover, there is only one fair way of meeting this great depression and the questions that it raises. It is not fair to call upon the charitably inclined people of the United States to bear all the burdens. They have done well, both rich and poor, but many who are able to contribute do not contribute as they should. Many contribute nothing. Many contribute in much smaller amounts than their ability to pay would indicate they should contribute. There is only one fair way to reach them and that is through taxation methods.

Mr. President, it is much better to give a man a job than to let him remain idle, and feed and clothe him, and feed and clothe his family. It is much better for the Government and saves lots of money because we get something in return if we employ him. It is much better for him because it gives him an independence that can not be his if he is compelled to receive charity to keep himself and his family alive.

I hope the Committee on Banking and Currency will give consideration to this memorial in passing upon the various measures that are before it. I do not understand why the memorial should go to that committee, but I have no objection to it going there. I would not be inclined to raise a technical question as to where it should go, but I would like to have it fall into sympathetic hands, as it probably will in that committee.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I felicitate the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] in his observation; and while I may not have in mind the particular gentleman to whom he alludes, I can not overlook the fact that I have seen through the history of my country during the last year that none has been more active in the aid of the miserable and seeking some remedy for the unfortunate of our country than that distinguished mayor of Boston, Mayor Curley, and his aides. The eminent Senators from Massachusetts, whatever might and their families, and would have been spending for the | have been the differences in local matters, have never failed to pay their tribute to the merit of this gentleman.

Mr. President, I add felicitation to all of those who, in their homes and otherwise, have been lifting from the shoulders of the Nation a great burden and seeking to carry it themselves out of a sense of pride of locality. I prefer to confess frankly that I regard all the old theories of the divisions of government as having now been merged out by time and that a new era of civilization has set upon this Republic. where no longer the mere divisions of State and Nation in themselves are to be allowed to obstruct and defeat necessary remedy for the relief of citizenship in distress.

But, Mr. President, I have seen of late so much exhibition of that fetish of worship of the ancient order of the theories of the Republic called Hamiltonian or Jeffersonian power of State or of Nation, these no longer fitting to present conditions under consideration. I have seen ignored the needs of the day in order to pay devotion to these worn and raveled theories which merely serve as a netting to entrap and then enmesh to confusion every form of relief necessary to the citizen. We have reached the point when it is assumed that the citizen has been created for the Government, but mankind in our country fail to recognize the truth, that government has been created for the citizen.

Mr. President, I am this morning attracted that the public press states that that distinguished citizen of my State of Illinois, Gen. Charles Gates Dawes, withdraws himself from the public service to our country, where he has been heretofore attached as one of the officers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and honored as the first of statesmen and first of patriots. I am pleased to pay to one whom I have long known the tribute of his worthiness. I have served with him in civic capacity in our city of Chicago in civil reforms, and likewise during the World War. It was to Dawes, the head of the Supply Division, I was sent by the Secretary of War and the President of the United States, and thereafter the service I was ordered to and executed at Paris was resumed at Chaumont with General Pershing. In all these I saw his great martial organization capacity. These military matters are merely referred to by me to indicate that my relationship is of a personal character that forbids a criticism that could be called one of antagonism or enmity.

But I observe that my friend, the former Vice President of the United States and the eminent head of the great corporation to which I have referred, is credited with an interview given to the public press that will do much to paralyze the hopes of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], whose observations we have just heard, and serve to palsy the possibility of their execution and likewise do more to give something of discouragement and retreat to all the efforts that are now being presented in behalf of those in the States and cities who are seeking relief. General Dawes is reported to have said to the press that there is no further need of his services, that prosperity has now come to bless the land, and that it flows through our citizenship as the milk and honey did in the blessed hours when Judea and Israel received their manna from God.

I would that it were true. But as we who are out in the field and in touch with the masses of the people are conscious that they are hungry in millions, on the border of distress that drives them to desperation only limited in resentment by their restraint, and we have known that the millions of needy are multiplying in number, and that different forms of relief are taking on various shades of undertaking. Mr. President, I fear, sir, that these measures brought to the attention of the Chair and of the Senate by the memorial just read may be likened to those which are before the Banking and Currency Committee from many States of the Union, and particularly the one from Illinois, which it was my honor-nay, my sad duty-to present in conjunction and in connection with my colleague [Mr. GLENN]. This one tells the world that the home of General Dawes has in the last week increased in the millions of those who are hungry and homeless and that the nonemployment has multiplied to a degree far in excess of the expressions of those whose fears of danger had far outrun their hopes for relief by decrease of the want and neces-

I call attention that these documents now upon the table of the Senate, these measures that are now before the Banking and Currency Committee, are those to which the President of the United States has given his approval, among which is one in which are compositely interested the Senators from Massachusetts, New York, Illinois, and Arkansas-our Democratic leader-one which tenders $300,-000,000 to be advanced to the States of the Union which are in such necessity as would call for it. This is to be advanced through the Credit Corporation, the money to be advanced to the Credit Corporation and then by that corporation to be lent to such States as will show their necessities justifying the loans and can offer such securities as under the conditions of that particular State will be appropriate and what might be called conservatively sustaining.

What I want to say is that while these measures are pending looking for relief to these States, while these cities which are harboring the hungry and the miserable and the helpless, while these countless thousands of good men are doing what they can to summon up by invention and execute by effort something that shall give relief, should the statement of General Dawes be accepted throughout the whole Union of States as coming from the Capital where he leaves the highest office of authority, and in association with the highest officials, that there is now complete prosperity come upon the country, that there is no need for any further fear, that there is no justification for the alarm, naturally there will follow that there is no necessity for any further effort, and all mankind will wake to realize a withdrawal of united support, something of a deadening of energy in that splendid assistance for which all mankind engaged may have credit, and which, as the Senator from Nebraska said, has borne down heavily upon the localities to the full extent of their powers. Yet I may say needs more aid, yet all will now be withdrawn and all efforts diminished and the undertakings on the part of those associations rudely be brought to an end under the misapprehension caused by the statement of the distinguished ex-official and former Vice President-General Dawes.

Mr. President, the distinguished gentleman, for whom I have an affection, gave out that statement that he might encourage the financiers to feel that this task which had been committed to this Credit Corporation had all been performed. We hear from the political agents of this Credit Corporation that it has performed with such credit and such complete success as to distribute in every way prosperity through that agency. We can not fail to recognize that while it was intended by that purpose to let the financiers feel that they are being held up before the country as having achieved a great consummation for which they are to be praised, yet the truth is that they have failed to serve the duty and objects that was imposed upon them. The institutions which have been benefited generally have been the large institutions; and now, sir, if the answer to my charge be that the loans went in general to aid the small banks in the country section, I answer "yes," but let us tell the country the truth. The small banks have received the loans wherever it has been shown by the big banks that they owed a debt to the big banks. Thus the little bank was aided to get the credit from the corporation to advance to it credit whereby it could get money from the Credit Corporation to enable it to pay the big bank its debt. That was the real moving reason for the alleged favor to the little banks. The exception to this rule is of small quantity.

But, sirs, a great mass of people around these little institutions, such as the small farmer, with his home still mortgaged, his land being foreclosed, and these can get no relief in any form, and no rescue. The man in the city who is starving and hungry, who is without work, and seeing his children from day to day withering in life, has gotten no relief. These, of whom we seek to-day to pay our tribute to their patient patriotism, have been unable to see from this department or its agents where any relief has come to them. Therefore, sir, to hold up to the country from such an eminent source as our honorable friend, the former Vice President, that now all is well and complete, quiet may come upon the land in the sense of a composure on the basis that everything has been accomplished and happily received, and to notify the world that in America only prosperity flows like a stream sent by Heaven to the blessed, and that the complaints of mankind of need, from whatever source they may come, are now unjustified. Sir, this false report, I repeat, works to enjoin and then to paralyze the effort so necessary at this time to be continued with great energy if we are to save those who are perishing.

Now, sir, I yield to my friend from Wisconsin for a query, but I wish to make another observation before concluding my remarks.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I apologize-

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, no need of that. Mr. BLAINE. For interrupting the rhythm of the eloquence of the Senator from Illinois, and, for fear that if I propounded the question I had in mind, the answer might provoke an anticlimax, I withhold asking the question.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope my friend the eminent Senator from Wisconsin will have no hesitancy in propounding any query to me that he regards appropriate either to the occasion or satisfactory to his own desires.

I wish now, sir, to allude for a moment to some of the observations made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Nor-RIS], and what I am about to say applies to every one of the Senators on the floor who are interested in the question of

I said a few moments past that I had become fatigued with the fetish worship of old distinctions of State and Nation. That, dwelling upon the one or resting upon the other, we have diverted ourselves of the opportunity of serving mankind and the citizens of the country of deserts. I invite the Presiding Officer who is in the chair at this moment, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], to recall that the measure presented by himself for the people, that which was presented by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and his colleagues in behalf of the States, and that presented by myself and Senator COPELAND on behalf of the cities and the municipalities of the States were defeated upon the theory of the cry that would come back, and had come back to this body, that the people in the localities were able to take care of their own, and that they resented the daring intrusion and impudent advance on the part of the Government to come to the rescue or aid of their people. They scoffed the thought, they scorned the doctrine of human rights, and wherever they could they repudiated the opportunity of the service.

Now, Mr. President, I ask the Senate to behold the situation as now confessed. I speak now for Illinois, which among others is a great State, but as to which I expect to hold responsibility for action of its citizens. The very gentlemen of my State, eminent officials, who did all they could by their protest to this body to restrain and stifle action that would have given the relief when we could have succeeded are those who now sign the very telegrams which I have introduced in this body demanding aid from the Government for the relief of those for whom we sought it, when our efforts were defeated by the very gentlemen who are asking for it now.

That set of gentlemen, being deceived in themselves, flattered with the suggestion inwardly palpitating in their bosoms that by holding out to the world that their locality could take care of itself; that its people were quite able and willing to do so, and that they scorned the acceptance of the offer of the Government. They wished to leave the impression in the large financial circles of the world that the eminent masters of finance were able to care for their own and that their manipulations and theories of money had been so successful as to lead them where they had no fear, and finally they wished the credit themselves as master, and finally they wished the credit themselves as master, and finally they wished the credit themselves as master and their responsible of requirements of particles of the United States or the District of Columbia. In. ter men of generosity of nature, charity of heart, and their Christianity of practice as would command all mankind to feel that, in their humanity, those in their locality would be safely preserved by these self-constituted directors of Government in opposition to the action of Congress.

Mr. President, what has been the result of all of that? It is that if these people had taken a little thought and had realized that the demands of humanity are much higher than the mere demands of form and custom and that it is the right of mankind to be permitted in the community to toil, to earn a living, to enjoy from the sweat of its brow independence, we would to-day not have such conditions as compel us now to advertise before all civilization that the richest country in the world, with the greatest possessions of earth as a nation, a land that was uninvaded in war, that had to bear none of the oppressions endured by its rivals in Europe, now is compelled to confess to the mismanagement by those in power, the deliberate corruption of those in trust, the complete betrayal of the humble who hoped to have the right advanced to them by those who kept them under the leash. We are now confessing that as to these we certify to the world an inability to take care of them in the localities where they live, despite the richness and largeness of possessions on the part of those who boasted they would be able to circumvent the Congress of the United States.

Now, sir, with this unhappy confession before the world, I hope we will dismiss all the distinctions, that we will contemplate no longer that there has ever been a division, but will move, I hope with great unanimity, to the object, and that from the committee will come favorable reports on all these measures, that the reports may be in union, and that then this corporation, known as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, will be authorized to advance money, under proper supervision of a business standard, to the cities, the counties, and the States so that they may distribute it to the needy to maintain the independence of the citizen and place him at last where he can turn to his Government and be conscious of his preservation through the United States of America, and, sir, that no longer will be in his bosom the suggestion of following those who heretofore in other lands have incited revolution as their course of remedy; but conscious that his Government, after having yielded to the deceptive distinctions that were born in theory and oftentimes have been used as evasion of duty to him, now, sirs, in new light we move forward to achieve the object of which these will find to their benefit—work—for those of whom the Holy Scripture said, "I will come as a swift witness to those that oppress the laborer in his toil."

So that those who are without labor, who in their sickness and distress as citizens of the land may recognize in their sovereign independence they are being preserved by their country, and before all the world they certify that never revolution, riot, or insurrection shall be indorsed by them as necessary in this land, but, on the contrary, that in peace, in order, in happiness and gratitude to their country preserved and these people restored to their rights, they thank God they are Americans.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment in line 9, page 58, will be agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 58, line 11, after the word "sec.," to strike out "209" and insert "212," and in the same line to strike out:

In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, married persons (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to

And insert "Hereafter in." so as to read:

SEC. 212. Hereafter in the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, preference shall be given to persons other than married persons living with husband or wife, such husband or wife being in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 21, to strike out:

TEMPORARY ASSIGNMENTS IN POSTAL SERVICE

SEC. 210. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the Postmaster General may, when the interest of the service requires, temporarily assign any clerk to the duties of carrier or any carrier to the duties of clerk, and in an emergency may assign any Post Office employee to the duties of a railway postal clerk, or any railway postal clerk to the duties of a Post Office employee without change of pay-roll status.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 4, to insert:

ANNUAL LEAVE WITH PAY REDUCED TO 15 DAYS

SEC. 213. Hereafter no civilian officer or employee of the Government shall be granted leave of absence with pay in excess of 15 days, excluding Sundays and legal holidays: Provided, That nothing herein shall apply to civilian officers and employees of the Panama Canal located on the Isthmus and who are American citizens: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as limiting the period during which pay may be allowed under existing laws for so-called sick leave of absence. Provided further, That the so-called sick leave of absence within the limits now. That the so-called sick leave of absence, within the limits now authorized by law, shall be administered under such regulations as the President may prescribe so as to obtain, so far as practicable, uniformity in the various executive departments and independent establishments of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, to come in after the word "days" in line 9, page 59.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 59, line 9, after the word "days," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the part unused in any year may be cumulative for any succeeding year.

Mr. JONES. I will say that that amendment is very inaptly drawn, but it will enable the idea involved to be considered in conference. The idea is that if in one year the 15 days are not used the remainder may accumulate for the next year, and so on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the committee amendment. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 59, line 7, after the word "Government," it is proposed to insert "who receives both annual and sick leave with pay."

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am sure there is no intention on the part of the committee nor can there be an intention on the part of the Senate to do anything other than to play fairly with all the Government employees, no matter what their station may be. It happens that in the Government Printing Office, in the navy yards, and in the arsenals, as I understand, are employees who receive no sick leave whatsoever. They, with their 30-day annual leave, are going to be, I think, much more severely dealt with by the committee amendment, without the acceptance of the amendment which I have offered, than are any other Government employees. The amendment I have proposed would eliminate the application of the committee amendment to those governmental employees who do not have the benefit of sick leave. I hope the amendment may be accepted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator, after listening to his explanation, from hearing the amendment read, I think we may very well let the amendment go to conference. There is certainly no intention to discriminate against any of the Government employees.

Mr. NYE. I am sure there is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the committee amendment will be agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 59, after line 19, to insert:

FURLOUGH OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES DURING FISCAL YEAR 1933

SEC. 214. In order to keep within the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1933, the heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments of the United States Government and the municipal government of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to furlough, without pay, such employees carried on their respective rolls, such time as in their judgment is necessary to carry out said purpose without discharging such employees, the higher salaried to be furloughed first whenever possible without injury to the service: Provided, That rules and regulations shall be promulgated by the President with a view to securing uniform action by the heads of the various executive departments and independent Government establishments in the application of the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under "Title III-Miscellaneous provisions—Limitations on expenditures for printing and binding, paper, and stationery," on page 60, line 19, after the word "than," to strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$8,000,000"; in line 20, before the word "for," to strike out "expended" and insert "obligated"; in line 22, after the designation "Government Printing Office," to strike out "of which $2,500,000 shall be for printing and binding for the use of the legislative branch of the Government, and $225,000 for Farmers' Bulletins" and insert "including printing and binding done elsewhere under contract by the Public Printer or obtained in the field under authority of the Joint Committee on Printing, for the exclusive use of a field service ": on page 61, line 3, to strike out "The amount available hereunder for the executive departments and independent establishments, the judiciary, and the government of the District of Columbia shall be distributed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget among the several departments and establishments, the judiciary, and the government of the District of Columbia as, in his judgment, the needs of the service may require"; and in line 13, after the name "Patent Office," to insert a comma and "the legislative branch of the Government, and the manufacture of postal cards and money orders for the Post Office Department," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 302. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, not more than $8,000,000 shall be obligated for printing and binding for the use of the United States and the District of Columbia done at the Government Printing Office, including printing and binding done elsewhere under contract by the Public Printer or obtained in the field under authority of the Joint Committee on Printing, for the exclusive use of a field service. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the discontinuance of any report or publication specifically required by law. This section shall not apply to printing and binding for the use of the Patent Office, the legislative branch of the Government, and the manufacture of postal cards and money orders for the Post Office Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in the subhead, in line 17, page 60, the word "paper" should be stricken out, because it is taken out of the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 60, line 17, in the subhead, strike out the word "paper.'

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 15, to strike out:

SEC. 303. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, not more than $400,000 shall be expended for paper furnished by the Government Printing Office for the use of the several executive departments and independent establishments and the government of the District of Columbia. The amount available hereunder for the executive departments and independent establishments and the government of the District of Columbia shall be distributed by government of the District of Columbia shall be distributed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget among the several execu-tive departments and independent establishments, and the gov-ernment of the District of Columbia, as, in his judgment, the needs of the service may require. This section shall not apply to expenditures for paper used in the course of manufacture by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The amendment was agreed to

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reorganization of Shipping Board," on page 62, line 25, before the word "commissioners," to strike out "four" and insert "three"; on page 63, line 4, before the word "one," to insert "and"; and in line 5, after the name "Gulf of Mexico," to strike out "and one from the States touching the Great Lakes," so as to read:

SEC. 305. (a) The United States Shipping Board shall be composed of three commissioners to be hereafter appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of such commissioners shall be appointed from the States touching the Pacific Ocean, one from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean, and one from the States touching the Gulf of Mexico, but not more than one shall be appointed from the same State. Not more than two of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 13, before the word "one," to insert "and"; in line 14, after the words "three years." to strike out the comma and "and one at the end of four years"; in line 16, before the word "years," to strike ouf "four" and insert "three"; and in line 21, after the word "term," to insert "The commissioners appointed hereunder shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualify," so as to read:

(b) Terms of office of the first commissioners appointed under this section shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of one year, one at the end of two years, and one at the end of three years after the date of the enactment of this act. The term of office of a successor to any such commissioner shall expire three years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that a commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The commissioners appointed hereunder shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualify. office until their successors are appointed and qualify.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 4, after the word "as," to strike out "four of the" and insert "the three," so as to read:

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) the United (c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) the United States Shipping Board as constituted upon the date of the enactment of this act shall continue to function until the date of reorganization of the commission pursuant to the provisions of such subsection. The board shall be deemed to be reorganized upon such date as the three commissioners appointed as provided in such subsection have taken office, and no such commissioner shall be paid salary, as such commissioner, for any period prior to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 20, before the word "commissioners," to strike out "three" and insert "two." so as to read:

(e) Whenever under existing law the concurrence of four or more of the commissioners is required, such requirement of law shall, after the reorganization of the board provided by this section, be held to be complied with by the concurrence of two com-

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 20, to strike out:

(f) After June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum. The provisions of Title I of this act shall not apply to any person whose compensation is reduced by reason of this subsection

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 312. In the annual report to Congress of each executive department or independent establishment there shall be included a statement of receipts during the period covered by such report, from fees or charges paid to such department or establishment under this act and all other acts of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 19, after the word "sections," to strike out "310, 311, and 312" and insert "309, 310, and 311," so as to read:

SEC. 313. Sections 309, 310, and 311 shall take effect July 1, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 20, to strike out:

TRANSFER OF FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS TO STATES OR TERRITORIES

TRANSFER OF FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS TO STATES OR TERRITORIES Sec. 314. Upon the application of any State or Territory, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to such State or Territory, without cost, all right, title, and interest of the United States in any fish-cultural station or fish hatchery located in such State or Territory, together with all personal property used in connection therewith. If any such State or Territory shall cease at any time to use a station or hatchery so transferred, for fish-cultural purposes, or shall at any time permit its use for any other purposes, or shall attempt to alienate the station or hatchery, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 8, to strike out:

TRANSFER OF AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS TO STATES OR TERRITORIES

SEC. 315. Upon the application of any State or Territory, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer to such State or Territory, without cost, all right, title, and interest of the United States in any agricultural experiment station located in such State or Territory, together with all personal property used in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 70, to insert:

STATISTICS CONCERNING HIDES, SKINS, AND LEATHER

SEC. 315. The act authorizing and directing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics concerning hides, skins, and leather, approved June 5, 1920 (U. S. C., title 13, secs. 91, 92, and 93), is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 5, to

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 316. Not to exceed 12 per cent of any appropriation for an executive department or independent establishment, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to any other appropriation or appropriations under the same department or establishment, but no appropriation shall be increased more than 15 per cent by such transfers: Provided, That a statement of all transfers of appropriations made hereunder shall be included in the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1935, and a statement of all transfers of appropriations made hereunder up to the time of the submission of the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1934, and all contemplated transfers during the remainder of the fiscal year 1933, shall be included in the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 22, to insert:

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Sec. 317. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories," approved February 5, 1929 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 20, sec. 15a), not more than $1,500,000 is authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of such section for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. (b) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, (1) the annual appropriations (for the purpose of cooperating with the States) provided for by sections 2, 3, and 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, secs. 12–14, inclusive), shall be $2,700,000 (in the case of section 2), $2,700,000 (in the case of section 3), and $900,000 (in the case of section 4); (2) the minimum allotment of funds to any State, under each of such sections, for the said fiscal year, shall be $9,000; and (3) the additional appropriations (for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States) provided for by such sections for the fiscal year 1933 shall be $24,300 (in the case of section 2), $45,000 (in the case of section 3), and $81,000 (in the case of section 4).

(c) In lieu of the annual appropriations provided for in section (c) In her of the annual appropriations provided for in section 7 of such act of February 23, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 15), for the Foderal Board for Vocational Education there is authorized to be appropriated for such board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, not more than $200,000 for the purposes set forth in such section.

(d) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 4 of the act entitled "An act to extend the provisions of certain laws of the Territory of Hawaii," approved March 10, 1924 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 29), shall be $27,000; and the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 1 of the act entitled "An act to extend the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation to Porto Rico," approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 20, sec. 30), shall be $94,500, and the amounts expended for each of the purposes set forth in such section shall be proportionately reduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes the liberty of requesting the clerk to read a telegram which the Chair has received concerning this amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Madison, Wis., June 6, 1932.

Madison, Wis., June 6, 1932.

Hon. Robert M. La Follette, Jr.,

United States Senate, Washington:

Line 10, page 79, bill H. R. 11267, now before the Senate, gives President power to consolidate educational agencies of Government. This proposes a tremendous transfer of legislative power into executive control. It appears to be a continuation of the original attack to wipe out Federal aids for vocational education. Will you cooperate with Senator Blaine to amend this bill so as to make an exception of the Federal Board for Vocational Education? The amendment herein suggested will insure a continuity of policies now fostered by the Federal Board for Vocational Education in behalf of the out-of-school group. The whole vocational school movement in America is vitally concerned in this matter.

Geo. P. Hambrecht,

Director Wisconsin State Board of Vocational Education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 18, to insert:

RATE OF INTEREST ON JUDGMENTS AND OVERPAYMENTS

SEC. 318. Hereafter the rate of interest to be allowed and paid shall be 4 per cent per annum whenever interest is allowed by law upon any judgment of whatsoever character against the United States and/or upon any overpayment in respect of any internal-revenue tax. All laws or parts of laws in so far as inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 73, to insert:

RESTRICTION ON CONSTRUCTION AND RENTAL OF BUILDINGS

SEC. 319. Authorizations heretofore granted by law for the construction of public buildings and public improvements, whether an appropriation therefor has or has not been made, are hereby amended to provide for a reduction of 10 per cent of the limit of cost as fixed in such authorization, as to projects where no contract for the construction has been made. As to such projects where a contract has been made at a cost less than that upon which the authorization was based, such cost shall not be increased by any changes or additions not essential for the completion of the project as originally planned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 13, to

SEC. 320. Hereafter, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, the leasing of buildings and properties of the United States shall be for a money consideration only, and there shall not be included in the lease any provision for the alteration, repair, or improvement of such buildings or properties as a part of the consideration for the rental to be paid for the use and occupation of the same. The moneys derived from such rentals shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it appears that we are now dealing with some very important projects. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Austin	Bingham Blaine	Bulkley Bulow	Carey
Bankhead	Borah	Byrnes	Cohen
Barbour	Bratton	Capper	Coolidge
Barkley	Brookhart	Caraway	Costigan

La Follette Lewis Watson Wheeler Schall Sheppard Logan McGill Harrison Hastings Shipstead Shortridge White McNary Hatfield Smith

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 73, line 14, to insert section 320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 321. Hereafter no appropriation shall be obligated or expended for the rent of any building or part of a building to be occupied for Government purposes at a rental in excess of the per annum rate of 15 per cent of the fair market value of the rented premises at date of the lease under which the premises are to be occupied by the Government, nor for alterations, improvements, and repairs of the rented premises in excess of 25 per cent of the amount of the rent for the first year of the rental term, or for the rental term if less than one year: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to leases heretofore made, except when renewals thereof are made hereafter.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 74, line 1, to strike out the figures "15" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "10," so that the annual rental shall not be more than 10 per cent of the fair market

Mr. JONES. I make no objection to that amendment. Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington accepts the amendment, but for the sake of the RECORD I want to point out that during the investigation of the postoffice leases we found that the rentals in the smaller cities of the country ran along about 8 per cent of the fair market value, and that oftentimes included certain incidentals, such as light and heat; but in the larger cities perhaps 10 per cent, including light and heat, would not be exorbitant, on account of the services which might have to be performed. However, 10 per cent is entirely high enough to take care of any of the rentals in any of the cities, in my opinion, as disclosed by the facts elicited during the investigation of the post-office leases.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I hope the chairman will not agree to the amendment. Fifteen per cent has been recommended to the committee by the Comptroller General as a fair percentage, and I hope the chairman will not accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. JONES. Of course, Mr. President, if a member of the committee objects, we will just let it go to a vote of the Senate. I think 10 per cent is sufficient, judging from what we heard in the testimony taken as to some of the particular leases. I am perfectly willing to have it go to a vote.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to address himself to the amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. Not now.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I say that this rate was recommended to the committee by the Comptroller General?

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. BINGHAM. The figures which appear were those recommended by the Comptroller General, and I think everyone will agree that the Comptroller General is, in the language of the street, pretty "hard boiled." I never have known him to err on the side of generous treatment, and I think he is entirely within his rights in following that course. He tries to protect the Treasury of the United States in carrying out the wishes of Congress.

In view of the fact that the Comptroller General himself suggested that limitation, in view of the fact that the persons renting these buildings have to pay taxes out of their returns, and in many cases pay for the upkeep of the buildings, and so forth, it seems to me that the percentage suggested by the comptroller and voted by the committee is fair, and that the Government would not suffer therefrom.

I know that the Senator from Wisconsin is familiar with some cases where injustices have been done to the Government of the United States, and I shall be glad to cooperate with him in correcting any of those injustices, but I think that arbitrarily to cut this rate down to 10 per cent would be an injustice, cutting it 50 per cent lower than the figure suggested by the Comptroller General, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator from Connecticut was in the Chamber when I made the statement that the testimony before the Select Committee on Post-Office Leases disclosed that the Postmaster General regarded an 8 per cent return on the fair value of the property as a fair return in the case of the smaller leases; that is, leases on post-office buildings and Postal Service stations in cities where the leases were under $6,000 a year. I have not the testimony before me, but I distinctly remember the testimony in some cases. The Post Office Department's policy in those cases was to restrict the returns not to exceed 8 per cent on the fair value of the property. As I said in my statement, in the larger cities, where the rental covers upkeep of the building, and perhaps the additional taxes, 10 per cent is a maximum which, in my opinion, is higher than ought to be allowed. But in order to give the public authorities sufficient leeway. I have suggested that the maximum be fixed at 10 per cent. I think that is plenty high enough; in fact, I think it is too high in the great majority of leases on Government property.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that under ordinary circumstances the amendment of the Senator is entirely reasonable, but the Senator will note that on page 74 appear the words, " of the fair market value of the rented premises at date of the lease." I do not believe that the fair market value of real estate in Washington at the present time would be half its ordinary fair market value, and possibly not more than a third, and under such circumstances, if the per annum rate were cut down to 10 per cent, the property would certainly not yield a fair rental value.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in considering the bill that was before the Senate some time ago to regulate real-estate agents, it was the secretary of the real-estate board who informed me that real-estate values in Washington had not depreciated over 10 per cent. That information I obtained in the pursuit of my duties as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It may not be possible to sell property in the city of Washington, that is one thing; but if one goes out to buy property he finds quite a different situation. He will find that the depreciation is not very

Mr. HALE. But, as the Senator said, if one goes out to sell, he finds that the depreciation is very great.

Mr. BLAINE. The fair market value is determined by the amount some one willing and able and ready to purchase would give for a piece of property.

Mr. HALE. That is just the point.

Mr. BLAINE. The mere fact that real estate is not moving in the market does not determine the fair market value. nor is it the basis upon which to determine the fair market value.

Moreover, Mr. President, the Senator will find that the assessor of the District of Columbia has been assessing real estate at about the same figure at which it has been assessed in the past, and he is required to assess it at the fair market value. The depreciation, as a matter of fact, is not very great. There is simply a lack of opportunity to sell, and it is not a question of depreciation in the fair market value.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator think the fair market value on the date of a lease can be determined except by evidence of sales of similar property, and there are practically no sales of similar property?

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly, and when we do find a sale of similar property, we find that the depreciation is not over 10 per cent. If the fact were that there were no sales, then, according to the Senator's view, the property would have depreciated to zero, and would not be worth anything. That is not the case.

Mr. HALE. No; but I think it has depreciated very much more than the 10 per cent the Senator speaks of.

Mr. BLAINE. I have given my information, and I think the information comes from very reliable sources. Besides, a 10 per cent return on the fair market value of real estate is a very handsome return.

Mr. HALE. It is in ordinary circumstances.

Mr. BLAINE. It is in these times, especially.

Mr. HALE. I do not agree with the Senator. Mr. BLAINE. It is a very handsome return. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the other day, in hearings on the District bill, we went into this matter at considerable length, and we learned from one of the officials of the District-my recollection is it was the District auditor, although it may have been another official-that there were three cases he brought to mind which had happened in the District within the last year, where the amount paid for property at a sale was 50 per cent less than the assessed value of the property.

One of the instances was the case of the Hamilton Hotel, which was assessed at more than a million dollars, and sold for less than $500,000. Various other instances have been brought to our attention within the last few weeks, where property assessed at seventy, eighty, and ninety thousand dollars has been actually sold for thirty or forty thousand dollars. There is no question but that the fair market value of real estate in most cities in the country to-day is very much less than it was at the time the property was originally assessed, or than at the time the original leases were made.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I want to call to the attention of the Senator the fact that the sale of the Hamilton Hotel was not a sale in the market; it was a forced sale; and, of course, in the case of a forced sale no one expects, either in good times or bad times, to obtain a price commensurate with the value of the property, or at least that is the experience of those who have been engaged in making such sales. So that that particular instance does not point to the conviction that there is any great depreciation in real-estate values in Washington. I doubt whether there is a single percentage of depreciation in the intrinsic value of real estate in the city of Washington or in any other city, in the congested business districts, where the Government must rent buildings.

Take, for instance, the city of Chicago, about the Union Station, the most valuable portion of the city of Chicago, so far as real-estate values are concerned. I doubt whether one could purchase a single lot within the area around the Union Station for an amount less than the price he would have had to pay for it years ago. That type of property is maintained at the normal value, and it is with respect to such locations, where the Government leases its buildings, that I am speaking. The Government does not lease buildings in outlying territory. It leases buildings in locations where the public may be accommodated, and therefore in some area where business is not at a standstill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the New Amsterdam Apartments were assessed at $522,138 and were sold recently for $200,000?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator will find that in nearly all those cases there were forced sales, and therefore they do not afford very excellent proof of the contentions made.

Mr. BINGHAM. I can mention another case, where there was not a forced sale, but where the property was assessed for $80,000 and recently has been sold for $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bratton in the chair) The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOSES. On page 74, in the same amendment, I wish to offer an amendment to add to the proviso. After line 9, strike out the period and insert a comma and these words:

Nor to leases of premises in foreign countries for the Foreign Service of the United States.

I have a memorandum from the Director of Foreign Service in the State Department with reference to this addition in which he points out the impracticability of such a restriction as this in foreign countries and furnishes a partial list of certain of the posts where we have diplomatic or consular offices where it is absolutely impossible to enforce a provision of this sort. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept it.

Mr. JONES. I shall not object to it.
Mr. MOSES. In this connection I shall ask to have the memorandum furnished me by the State Department printed in the Record at this point as a portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

This undoubtedly is intended to apply only to the United States, but through oversight is so worded as to include rentals in foreign countries

A restriction of this kind would be impracticable in the Foreign Service for many reasons, among which may be mentioned: 1. The acute shortage of either office or residence quarters which obtains generally in foreign countries and which has made it necessary in many instances to pay high rentals in order to obtain quarters even of approximate desirability and which have been obtained only after much search and bargaining.

2. Absence of appraisals in most instances and/or difficulties incident to obtaining reasonably accurate data relative thereto.

3. Legislation regarding rents in some foreign countries providing for maintenance of rentals and for automatic increases periodically in established contract rates. These are generally

4. In many places construction of quarters either for office or residence is largely dependent on foreign firms who build only as their own specific needs require and in the rare case where sp becomes available, persons desiring accommodations bid against each other for it. At times it has even been necessary to per-suade some one to construct a building for our use. Such a limitation would make it impossible in some important posts to obtain any quarters whatever for offices.

The following are quotations from a few of the many reports received from officers relating to the rental situation now obtaining and which are typical.

Tiran, Albania: "Conditions in Albania regarding housing present many difficulties * * * rents are still not sufficiently stable to indicate here with any accuracy what they should be.

sent many difficulties * * rents are still not sufficiently stable to indicate here with any accuracy what they should be. It is a question of bargaining, and, most important of all, to find something desirable. In general it may be said that rentals are high, even according to standards found in large cities."

Vienna, Austria: "Legislation is now pending in Parliament to increase rents which are still based on depreciated paper currency value, which, if passed, will materially alter the figures during the coming year."

Berlin, Germany: "The housing problem has been a most difficult one for those who had to consider prices. During and immediately after the war building was entirely suspended and construction was greatly limited, due to the financial condition of the country, and no relief in the housing problem may be expected for some years to come. There is not only a limited choice of selection but months may elapse before a vacancy occurs."

Lyon, France: "The operation of the French laws of April 1, 1926, and June 20, 1929, providing for progressive increases in rentals to compensate landlords for losses sustained by them as a result of the revalorization of the franc in 1926 will necessitate certain readjustments upward in the appropriation for rent * * to cover these supplemental charges." At Lyon the legislation has had the following result in rental payable: June, 1925, 8,500 francs; June, 1928, 10,660 francs; June, 1931, 13,184 francs; and June, 1932, 13,802 francs. Strassburg, France: "The new terms call for an increase of almost 100 per cent. At the time the present lease was made, December 12, 1923, rentals were cheaper than they are at present. The present consular premises are the best available in the city. There is no question but what the rental paid under our lease

The present consular premises are the best available in the city. There is no question but what the rental paid under our lease is far below the present values for similar premises, and, in fact, it would be extremely difficult, if not almost impossible, to obtain such satisfactory offices even for higher figures than the rental offer submitted."

Casablanca, Morocco: "The question of suitable and representative quarters at Casablanca presents an unusual problem.

* * This is due to the fact that Casablanca is a relatively new city. It has grown since 1922 from a small Moroccan town of about 30,000 people to a city at the present time of somewhat less than 150,000 people, of which population Europeans number perhaps over 50,000. As a result of its rapid growth the demand for quarters has always run ahead of supply."

Warsaw, Poland: "The housing situation is by far the most difficult aspect of life in Warsaw. Houses built before the war are under the tenant's protection laws in force in Poland and the landlords can not evict tenants except for nonpayment of rent. Prices in new houses are high. Due to these rent laws the rent in old houses is low (the pre-war figure) and can not be increased at the landlord's will. Landlords, however, under these laws are not obligated to make any repairs whatever. Consequently the tenant occupant must make all repairs, even though usually considered for capital account and commonly higher than in Washington."

Cologne, Germany: "The present lease having been made at than in Washington."

Cologne, Germany: "The present lease having been made at a time when rents were high and having contained a proviso requiring the consulate to meet, in the form of increased rental, additional taxation as assessed from time to time upon the prop-additional taxation as assessed from time to time upon the property, calls for payment of about $5,400 a year. Rent contracts generally require that the lessee bear increases as locally decreed."

Danzig: "There is a general housing shortage in the city. All buildings constructed before the war are regulated by the Government lodging office, which gives no courtestes."

Breslau, Germany: "Increases in rent are necessary to meet increases provided by law in keeping with changes in the tax law."

Tegucigalpa, Honduras: "The landlord of the legation is demanding a 66 per cent increase in rent, and while the premises are not worth that amount, he can undoubtedly obtain it from others, and there is no other building in the entire city available for the legation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 74, after line 9, to insert:

TEMPORARY REDUCTION OF FEES OF JURORS AND WITNESSES

SEC. 322. During the fiscal year 1933—
(a) The per diem fee authorized to be paid to jurors under section 2 of the act of April 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 323), shall be $3 instead of $4.

(b) The per diem fee authorized to be paid to witnesses under section 3 of the act of April 26, 1926 (44 Stat. 323), shall be $1.50 instead of $2, and the proviso of said section 3, relative to per diem for expenses of subsistence, shall be suspended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Disapproval of Executive order," on page 79, line 3, after the word "disapproval," to insert a colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That in order to expedite the merging of certain activities, the President is authorized and requested to proceed, without the application of this section, with setting up consolidations of the following governmental activities: Public Health solidations of the following governmental activities: Public Reath (except that the provisions hereof shall not apply to hospitals now under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration), personnel administration, merchant marine, conservation, education, and Mexican Water and Boundary Commission, and to merge such activities of the War and Navy Departments relating to the purchase of supplies and matériel as will effect economies in Rederal expenditures. Federal expenditures.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 79, line 10, I move to strike out the words "merchant marine."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think that is rather an important amendment. I wish the Senator would explain why he proposes to strike "merchant marine" out of the provision.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the first place, the merchant marine is not a bureau, it is not a governmental organization in the sense that it is a department or branch of a department. The merchant marine itself is a concern that is not organized under any provision of law establishing any bureau or department of government. The merchant marine does not mean anything except ships. If the Senator wants to give the President authority to reorganize the Shipping Board of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, that is another proposition. I suppose that is what is intended to be meant by "merchant marine," but really it is the Shipping Board of the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The membership of the Shipping Board has been reduced, I understand, from seven to three. I do not think that ought to be done. We ought to have five members of the board-one from the Gulf, one from the Atlantic coast, one from the Great Lakes, one from the Pacific coast, and one from the interior. Its membership ought to represent the whole country, ought to be distributed throughout the country in reference to our shipping interests. I do not care to have seven members, but I think five ought to constitute the membership of the board, to represent the commercial interests of the whole country, the export and import trade, and especially our foreign trade

I do not want to give the President power to seize the Shipping Board by the nape of the neck and kick them out or put them under the control of some other department. I think the Shipping Board organization ought to be under the control of Congress. I think the Emergency Fleet Corporation ought to be, as it is now, under the control of the Shipping Board. Nobody alludes to it as the merchant marine. That board ought to be constituted as it was by act of Congress, created by Congress, and established by Congress, under the control and management and direction of Congress. I do not think it ought to be transferred by the President or any other authority in order that it might be merged either with the Commerce Department or the Post Office Department or some other department of the Government.

We have to keep the Shipping Board organization, especially until we can dispose of the ships. We have six or seven lines of ships that are still owned by the Government and operated by the Fleet Corporation under the Shipping Board. It is vital to our interests, especially our foreign trade, that we should control and manage the shipping arrangements until at least we have under our flag privately owned ships adequate to take care of our overseas trade.

The Shipping Board ought not to be bandied about here and there by some sort of influence that might be brought to bear to put it under some particular department or Secretary. I understand the plan has been suggested that it be turned over to the Commerce Department and let the Secretary of Commerce handle the whole thing. That would mean an Assistant Secretary employed by him and we would not save anything by that operation at all. I think it ought to be under the direction and supervision of the Congress.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I know the Senator's interest in the merchant marine. I know the study he has given to it. In view of what he has just stated, I am perfectly willing to strike out the words "merchant marine," because under the other provisions of the bill the President can recommend to Congress any organization he thinks advisable and then the whole matter will be considered by Congress. So far as I am concerned, I accept the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not going to disagree with the chairman of the committee if he thinks it wise to let the words "merchant marine" be stricken out. I dislike to disagree with my good friend the senior Senator from Florida, whom I love very dearly; but I do think that there is less use for the Shipping Board than any other board or activity in the entire Government. I think it has violated every duty that it ever owed to the Government. If the President were to take charge under the provisions of this bill and abolish the entire Shipping Board, it would be one of the best things that ever happened to the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, among other powers conferred upon the President in the way of consolidation there is one relating to education. The question has been raised whether that would place the Board of Vocational Training under one of the Cabinet officers, whether it meant standardization and centralization of education to the point where a board composed partly of Cabinet officers might become a bureau under another Cabinet officer. I address myself to some member of the committee that drafted the measure to see what it really refers to. Can the Senator from New Mexico answer my question?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as a member of the com-

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as a member of the committee—and I think I voice the views of the other members—I may say it was not intended to abolish vocational education. It was not intended to merge that service into any other department or bureau. Various bureaus and departments are engaged in educational activities, some more and some less. For instance, we have a Commissioner of Education, whose duties are confined to work of that character. Then the Bureau of Indian Affairs conducts educational activities. Other departments gather educational data and statistics. Educational activities in varying forms and degrees are conducted in many departments. The object the committee had in mind was to authorize a coordination of these various services, but it was not intended to abolish vocational education.

Mr. NORBECK. Nor to place that board under another department?

Mr. BRATTON. No; that was not intended.

Mr. NORBECK. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the provision to carry out the suggestion made by the Senator from New Mexico and to make it certain. On page 79, line 10, after the word "education," strike out the comma and in parenthesis insert:

(Except that the provisions hereof shall not apply to the Federal Board for Vocational Education).

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, let me suggest a thought to the Senator. The Senator would have no objection to other educational services being brought under the Vocational Board?

Mr. BLAINE. No; I am just referring to the one board.

Mr. BRATTON. Let me suggest to the Senator that his proviso read "except that vocational education shall not be abolished." That would leave the President free to bring other services under the jurisdiction of the board, but he would not have the power to abolish the board.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, would the Senator go farther and provide that it be not placed under another department?

Mr. BRATTON. As a member of the committee I am perfectly content with that. It was not our purpose to disturb vocational education nor to abolish it. We had other services in mind. So far as I am concerned I am willing to accept the amendment which will carry that thought into execution

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the amendment which I propose would permit other services or departments to be merged with the board, I assume. It may be I am mistaken. The language of my amendment reads:

(Except the provisions hereof shall not apply to the Federal Board for Vocational Education.)

The Senator proposes to say "except the provisions hereof shall not abolish the Federal Board for Vocational Education"?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I should be satisfied with that provision.

Mr. BRATTON. That will safeguard what we all have in mind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wiscon-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin offer what he has suggested as an amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. I offer that as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to offer another amendment to the committee amendment, and I desire the attention of the committee to the amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Who has the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Blaine] has the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. At the end of line 14, page 79, I move to insert:

Except that this section shall not apply to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The reason I make that suggestion is this-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. That language would apply to the whole section. I think it would be wiser if the Senator would make it apply to the proviso only.

Mr. BLAINE. When I explain my purpose I think the Senator from Tennessee will not have any objection to the amendment.

As the Senator from Tennessee knows, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission has to do with three different categories of employees: The longshoremen; Federal employees other than the longshoremen; and then, in 1928, as I recall, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission were given jurisdiction of private employees in the District of Columbia. We have set up a perfectly uniform system for the administration of the law respecting those three various types of employees. I think it would be a mistake to include this commission on that account. It has power respecting longshoremen, also respecting Federal employees generally, workmen, and, third, respecting employees in the District of Columbia who are privately employed. The District of Columbia pays for that portion of the expense; but the commission is designed to preserve a complete system for the administration of what is commonly known as the workmen's compensation act. I hope the Senator from Washington will have no objection to this suggestion, because I do not believe any good purpose would be served by placing this commission within the provisions of this section.

Mr. JONES. I do not think I will make any objection to that amendment. I did not hear the amendment, but I heard the explanation given by the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 14, page 79, it is proposed to insert:

Except that this section shall not apply to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. At the time of the unexpected rejection of my amendment dealing with the furlough system, I stated that I would, in the event, which I had anticipated, of my amendment being agreed to, move to strike out section 213, which is a committee amendment. That section, however, has been agreed to; and I now ask unanimous consent to recur to it, it being a committee amendment, in order that I may offer a slight amendment which I think the Senator in charge of the bill may readily accept.

Mr. JONES. Let me inquire if the pending amendment has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending committee amendment has not been disposed of.

Mr. MOSES. I thought it had been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, beginning on line 3, page 79, as amended.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the committee amendment in line 10, page 79, I move that the word "conservation" be stricken from the language of the amendment. There is so much controversy on the subject of how unity should be accomplished in the matter of departmental conservation that I see no reason why Congress should not be left with the same opportunity to pass upon consolidations affecting that item as it is afforded in other cases. I hope that there will not be a pressing demand for the inclusion of that one activity in this clause.

Mr. JONES. I think the President may very well deal with the problem of conservation as it may develop in the different departments of the Government.

Mr. NYE. Let me ask the chairman of the committee, does this involve the national forests in any way?

Mr. JONES. Of course, conservation is a very broad term. The national forests really are under the control of Congress. The President can not undo the action Congress may take regarding them.

Mr. NYE. All these activities are under the control of Congress to the same degree.

Mr. JONES. I understand that, but we have expressly provided that no lands shall be added to the forest reserves except by act of Congress. The President could not interfere with that provision of law.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, there is not anything to prevent the President from throwing the national forests into a conservation department that we might establish and combine with it many other items of conservation.

Mr. JONES. The Senator's position will illustrate the difficulty Congress will have in trying to do anything with reference to consolidating activities of this kind.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, it can now be remedied by one amendment to the section adding the words, "Provided, That no activity in which any Senator is interested shall be affected by the provisions of this section."

Mr. JONES. Yes, I suppose that would take care of the proposition all right.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I hope the chairman of the committee will agree that the matter to which I have referred is of such a nature that Congress ought to have a chance to pass judgment upon it.

Mr. JONES. If the President should desire to make a recommendation to Congress with reference to conservation, he could do it, and then it would rest with the Congress whether or not it would allow the recommendation to be carried out. I will accept the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the committee amendment is agreed to; and without objection, the committee amendment as amended is agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent to recur to the committee amendment on page 59, which I had no opportunity to consider early in the day, and I wish to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. JONES. On what page?

Mr. MOSES. On page 59, line 10.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to the amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to offer an amendment in line 11. page 59, following the word "citizens," to insert the words or to officers of the Foreign Services of the United States."

I have from the State Department a memorandum on that subject. It is very brief and I shall read it:

The bill as reported will prevent an officer or employee of the Foreign Service from having more than 15 days' leave annually with salary in the United States or elsewhere.

Many of these officers are stationed in tropical and unhealthful

Many of these officers are stationed in tropical and unhealthful places like India, Africa, Central America, and certain parts of the Far East. In order to safeguard their health they must get some relief each year. Leave of only 15 days will not make this possible. They can not get sufficient change in that time, when the time consumed by travel is included, to have an opportunity to recuperate from climatic effects which will endanger their health and discriminate against them in favor of Panama Canal employees, who are exempted by the bill from this provision.

Owing to the distance from the United States of the posts at which most of the officers of the Foreign Service are stationed and the cost of travel the bill practically precludes officers of that service from coming to the United States on leave because obviously an officer can not afford to pay the large cost of travel to the United States which he has to save for 2 or more years when the limit of his stay is to be only 15 days with pay. There is no objection to limiting local leave to 15 days in European, Canadian, and other healthful parts of the world if this is what Congress desires and the departments concerned can bring that about by desires and the departments concerned can bring that about by administrative action.

But it will work a tremendous hardship upon officers in tropical posts, and those who desire to spend their holidays in the United States, if they are restricted to a total of 15 days per annum.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that I think that is a very reasonable request, and I will ask for reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to in order that the Senator may offer his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MOSES. Unanimous consent has been granted to recur to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I understand that, but it is necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered; without objection, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment will be agreed to; and without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was called from the floor when section 316, on page 70, was under consideration. That is the section that allows the transfer of appropriations within departments so that 12 per cent of an appropriation may be taken from one item and added to another, if necessary, with the approval of the Director of the Budget.

In the Army appropriation bill, which was reported this morning, occurs a provision similar to the one referred to in the pending bill, but, for what seemed to the committee to be good reasons, the approval which is made a prerequisite is the approval of the President himself. I ask unanimous consent that we may reconsider the vote by which the section was agreed to so that I may offer an amendment, on line 12, after the word "Budget," to insert in parentheses the words " (or in case of the War Department and Navy Department with the approval of the President)."

We want to put the responsibility squarely upon the Chief Executive. The amendment does not affect the meaning of the paragraph.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the limitation as to the sum which may be transferred remain the same, namely, 12 per cent? I want to say that I differed with the Senator, as he will recall, a while ago in the committee in considering the military appropriation bill about increasing the limit of such transfers to 15 per cent. We have already adopted in the Interior Department bill, and in the bill making appropriations for the Commerce Department, the Labor Department, the State Department, and the Justice Department, a provision for the interchange of appropriations up to the limit of 12 per cent. One of those bills has become a law. We ought not to establish a different rule for the Army and Navy in case of the transfer of appropriations than that which we have for the other departments. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment, if he will leave the limitation of 12 per cent.

Mr. REED. I am not proposing in this paragraph to change the 12 per cent limitation which is already provided. What the Senate will do when we come to the Army appropriation bill is, of course, another question. Mr. McKELLAR. I think there is no objection to the other language if the limitation is not changed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think the amendment is all

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 79, after line 19, to strike out:

TITLE V. PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION CREATION AND ORGANIZATION

SEC. 501. There is hereby created at the seat of Government an establishment to be known as the public works administration. There shall be at the head of such administration an officer to be known as the administrator of public works, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall hold his office for the term of six years. Such administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, payable monthly, and under the direction of the President shall have the control and management of the various bureaus, agencies. the control and management of the various bureaus, agencies, activities, and services that the President may under this title transfer to and consolidate in the public works administration.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, immediately following the adoption of Title V of the bill, a memorandum for the information of the conferees when they take that title to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 504 (B) TITLE "PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRA-TION" OF H. R. 11267

The present language is as follows: "(b) All orders, rules, and regulations in effect with respect to any activity at the time it is transferred shall continue in force until modified, superseded, or repealed by the administration."

By this provision the power to change or nullify rests in the administration, regardless of whether the orders, rules, and regulations in effect at the time the activity concerned was transferred tions in effect at the time the activity concerned was transferred affected only the transferred agency or also agencies not transferred to the public works administration.

As an example of probably a considerable number of cases: Because of the national forests and in order that these may be protected, administered, and utilized, Congress has passed legislation for forest road and trail work. Under that regulation, the Secretary of Agriculture has approved regulations, etc., for carrying out the legislation. The Forest Service and the Bureau of Public Roads participate in certain administrative features of the forest highway fund. The appropriation itself is set up to the credit of the Forest Service but after programs have been agreed credit of the Forest Service but after programs have been agreed to by the two bureaus, and approved by the Secretary, the regula-tions provide that the Bureau of Public Roads shall do the necestions provide that the Bureau of Public Roads shall do the necessary engineering work and supervise the construction and maintenance of projects requiring technical training and experience in difficult road work. It is also similarly employed on the difficult and costly roads constructed from the forest development fund. The Forest Service, using its own organization, handles the simple, inexpensive work. The Bureau of Public Roads will probably be transferred to the public works administration. It is of great importance that the relationship of the Forest Service to these two funds be not lessened in amount or value. This could result from the present provisions of section 504 (b).

As a necessary and proper corrective measure, the following

As a necessary and proper corrective measure, the following should be added at the end of the section: "Or if such order, rule, or regulation involves some other Government agency, by joint agreement with the head of such agency."

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 505, TITLE "PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION" IN H. R. 11267

The purpose of the legislation may be stated as (1) to reduce the cost and increase the effectiveness of handling engineering work, (2) to group those Federal agencies whose primary purpose is engineering, architecture, or construction, (3) to provide service when the work of other Federal agencies involves difficult or costly work of the character that the technicians and specialists in the public works administration can best supply public works administration can best supply.

Section 505 departs from this in a very decided way and such departure was probably entirely unintentional. The effect is contrary to what has been advocated by Secretaries Wilbur and Hyde, and, so far as is known, has not been advocated by the President.

The meaning of "within the purview of the functions of the public works administration" may be misunderstood by some unacquainted with the purpose of the legislation. Clearly it is not the intention to include all the work listed in section 502 (a) regardless of difficulty or cost, since many bureaus have simple and inexpensive engineering and construction work to do as a part of their primary functions and to discharge their responsibilities to Congress. Utilizing the services of the public works administration would increase rather than decrease the cost. Yet the present Congress. Utilizing the services of the public works administration would increase rather than decrease the cost. Yet the present language permits of this interpretation and to mandate the executive agency to expend money unnecessarily and wastefully. The language does not make clear that the services of the public works administration are available and should be utilized when the Federal agency has difficult and expensive work to do, and of the character that such administration can most economically handle. Engineering is a service to an end and not an end itself. Many Federal agencies require engineering service for the accomplishment of some major objective or responsibility of the bureau. This may be very minor in scope, cost, amount, or difficulty; such work can nearly always be most effectively and economically handled by the agency itself. It may be difficult, costly, and require the services of technicians of high skill in their professions, and such men, according to the proposed organization, will be located in the public works administration. But whether the work be done directly by the Federal agency or through utilizing the services of the administration, the appropriation for the work should be made to the Federal agency and such agency should control the use made of the appropriation, including such matters as selection of projects, priorities, location of work, and expenditures. By the present language of section 505 (b) the public works administration, with no responsibility for the main purpose or objective for which the engineering service is needed, is given the appropriation and the entire control thereof. The administration would also determine the size of the appropriation and the other agency would have no power to determine whether from the standpoint of the job for which it is responsible the amount was too small or too large. The agency served must include as a part of its costs of administration expenditures made without its approval or desire.

To carry out the intent of the provis

To carry out the intent of the provisions for the public works administration rendering service to other agencies and to make the provisions sound, productive of economy and efficiency, and entirely consistent with accepted principles of business and financial management, the section 505 should be changed to read as follows:

Sec. 505. Hereafter the public works administration is authorized, upon the request of any branch of the Federal Government or at the direction of the President, to perform any engineering service in connection with the survey, construction, or improvement of roads and all other public works, payment of the salaries and expenses of employees so engaged, and of the cost of transportation, repairs, and replacements of equipment and supplies of the public works administration used in such work to be made by transfer of funds in the manner provided by section 7 of the act approved May 21, 1920 (Forty-first Statutes, page 613), as herein amended.

amended.

This language is closely patterned on the legislation under which the Bureau of Public Roads renders engineering service on park roads as desired by the National Park Service. The arrangement is reported as decidedly satisfactory. No tendency has developed for the Park Service to do work which under the pending legislation the public works administration is intended to do. No fears are felt that any Federal agency will fail to fully utilize the services of such administration. Should it so fail, immediate correction is possible through use of authority given to the President. rection is possible through use of authority given to the President by section 502 (a).

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 17, after the word "sections," to strike out "601 to 604" and insert "501 to 504," so as to read:

SEC. 502. (a) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection the records and property, including office equipment, of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service. (b) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to such bureau such officers and employees of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service as in his judgment are indispensable to the efficient operation of such bureau. Such transfer of officers and employees shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the Secretary may make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of the officers and employees transferred as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of sections 501 to 504, inclusive, of this title. The Secretary is authorized to dismiss such officers and employees of the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of ployees of the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation as are not, in his judgment, indispensable to the efficient operation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 24, after the word "than," to strike out "July 1" and insert "October 1," so as to read:

(c) The consolidation and coordination herein provided for shall be effected not later than October 1, 1932, and when the Secretary of Commerce declares such consolidation and coordination has been effected, the duties, powers, and functions vested in the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation shall be exercised by the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, and the Steamboat Inspection, and the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation shall cease to exist.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Transfer of Personnel Classification Board to Civil Service Commission," on page 91, line 6, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "605" and insert "505," and in the same line to strike out "The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer the duties, powers, and functions of the Personnel Classification Board to the Civil Service Commission, and upon the issuance of such order" and insert "The duties, powers, and functions of the Personnel Classification Board are hereby transferred to the Civil Service Commission," so as to read:

Sec. 505. The duties, powers, and functions of the Personnel Classification Board are hereby transferred to the Civil Service Commission-

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 13, before the word "abolished," to strike out "shall be" and insert "are hereby," so as to read:

(a) The Personnel Classification Board and the position of director of classification are hereby abolished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 15, before the word "transferred," to strike out "shall be" and insert are hereby," so as to read:

(b) All records and property, including office furniture and equipment, of the board are hereby transferred to the Civil Service Commission; and

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 18, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "President" and insert "Civil Service Commission"; in line 20, after the word "the," to strike out "Civil Service"; and in the same line, after the word "commission," to strike out "shall be" and insert "are hereby," so as to read:

(c) Such of the officers and employees of the board, as in the judgment of the Civil Service Commission, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the commission, are hereby transferred to such commission, and all other officers and employees of such board shall be dismissed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 23, after the word "sec.," to strike out "606" and insert "506"; in line 24, after the word "section," to strike out "605" and insert "505"; in line 25, after the word "the," to strike out "President" and insert "Civil Service Commission"; on page 92, line 2, after the word "as," to strike out "he may deem" and insert "may be deemed"; and in line 4, after the word "sections," to strike out "605 to 608" and insert "505 to 508," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 506. Any transfer of officers or employees under section 505 shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the Civil Service Commission is authorized to make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of such officers and employees as may be deemed necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 505 to 508, inclusive, of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on page 91, line 21, after the word "commission," I desire to move to strike out the comma and the words " and all other officers and employees of such board shall be dismissed," and insert a period.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not an amendment to a committee amendment. Under the agreement the committee amendment shall be disposed of first.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 15, after the word "section," to strike out "605 or 606" and insert "505 or 506," so as to read:

SEC. 507 (a) All orders, determinations, rules, or regulations made or issued by the Personnel Classification Board, and in effect at the time of such transfer, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not been made, until modified, superseded, or repealed by the Civil Service Commission.

(b) All provisions of law relating to the Personnel Classification Board and the director of classification shall continue in force with respect to the Civil Service Commission in so far as such pro-visions of law are not inconsistent with the provisions of section 505 or 506.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92 line, 16, after the word "Sec.," to strike out "608" and insert "508"; and in line 18, after the words "as the," to strike out "President" and insert "Civil Service Commission," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 508. Such parts of appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Personnel Classification Board as the Civil Service Commission deems neces-Classification board as the Civil Service Commission deems necessary shall be available for expenditure by the Civil Service Commission in the same manner as if such commission had been named in the laws providing for such appropriations, and the remainder of such appropriations and such unexpended balances shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 93, to insert: SEC. 509. The provisions of sections 505, 506, 507, and 508 shall become effective October 1, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Transfer of Radio Division of the Department of Commerce to the Federal Radio Commission," on page 94, line 1, after the word "Sec.," to strike out "611" and insert "512"; in line 2, after the word "section," to strike out "610" and insert "511"; and in line 6, after the word "sections," to strike out "610 to 613" and insert "511 to 514," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 512. Any transfer of officers or employees under section 511 shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the President is authorized to make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 511 to 514, inclunecessary to carry sive, of this title.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 94, line 6, the figures "514" should be changed to "515."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 18, after the word "section," to strike out "610 or 611" and insert "511 or 512," so as to read:

SEC. 513. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, or regulations made or issued by the Department of Commerce in respect of the Radio Division, or by the Radio Division, and in effect at the time of such transfer, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not been made, until modified, superseded, or such transfer had not been made, until modified, superseded, or repealed by the Federal Radio Commission.

(b) All provisions of law relating to the Radio Division shall continue in force with respect to the Federal Radio Commission, in so far as such provisions of law are not inconsistent with the provisions of section 511 or 512.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 2, to insert:

SEC. 515. Such of the officers and employees of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce and the Federal Radio Commission as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the consolidated bureau, shall be retained, preference being given to length of service and efficiency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, line 6, after the words "Title," to strike out "VIII" and insert "VII," so as to make the heading read:

Title VII-Provisions applicable to veterans.

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum? This is a very important matter. It involves the adjustment of the veterans' benefits; and I think there should be a full attendance of Senators.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, will he yield to me?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut. Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, during my necessary absence from the floor I understand that the committee amendment on page 79 was altered without a vote; that some of the various consolidations which the President is authorized to make immediately were taken out of the committee amendment. I should like to inquire from the Secretary as to which words in that proviso were taken out.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I may answer, the merchant marine was stricken out, and conservation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thought the merchant marine was one of the things we were all agreed could be promptly taken care of by the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say that I had the same view that the Senator had, and protested against that action, but the Senate outvoted me. I think it ought to be abolished.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it developed on the floor of the Senate that there was considerable difference about what should be done. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER! had very much to suggest.

Mr. BINGHAM. Was there a vote on it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; there was a vote on it. I do not think that ought to be included in this bill at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator be willing to permit us to reconsider that vote? I did not know that there was any such consideration pending.

Mr. FLETCHER. We have discussed it here. We can not, of course, delay this matter until everybody has listened to the debate. It was discussed and considered.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not desire to prolong the discussion, but I should like to have an opportunity to secure a vote on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] offered the amendment, and it was argued; and I am not sure, but I think I was the only one who voted against its exclusion.

Mr. JONES. I understand that the Senator from Connecticut wants a vote on the amendment. I practically agreed that the matter might be stricken out, and I think that is the way it went out without coming to a vote, because there was every indication to my mind that there would be long discussion over that proposition if it was insisted upon, and I thought that the President could make his recommendations to Congress when the time came; so I practically accepted the proposition.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was what I understood, that it was accepted by the chairman of the committee; that there was not a vote on it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was transacted in regular order. offered the amendment striking out "merchant marine." The Senator from Washington wanted to know why I insisted upon that amendment, and thought I ought to make some explanation about it. I proceeded to do so; and before I finished the Senator from Washington said that he thought the President might make recommendations to Congress from time to time, and that it would be all right to let those words be stricken out.

I do not know whether there was a vote on the matter then or not. I suppose there was. Anyhow, the Vice President put the question. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] raised some protest, but the Vice President said, "Without objection, the amendment is agreed to," or otherwise put it to a vote. I do not know what the record is: but the amendment was disposed of in the regular order, and the words were stricken out.

I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not ask for a reconsideration now, but I am not going to raise any point about it. I have no right to consent to anything about it. If we go into it all again, we will have to go over the same ground that has been covered heretofore. If there were not an element of time involved here, we could spend another half-hour or two hours on it. I am going to insist that it go out, because this bureau was created by Congress and ought to be under the control and direction of Congress. I refer to the Shipping Board, not the merchant marine. That is one objection to it. "Merchant marine" does not mean anything. There is no division, there is no branch, there is no bureau, there is no department known as the merchant marine.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why does the Senator object to its being

Mr. FLETCHER. I object to it because I do not know what it covers, in the first place. It may cover the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation, if you call that the merchant marine. It may cover both of them, or it may not. I assume that perhaps that is what it was intended to cover-the entire shipping interests of the United States; the merchant marine, using a broad term.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for that purpose, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold that suggestion for a moment; if the Senator from Connecticut wants to have this matter reconsidered, can we not dispose of that before we go on to the other subject?

Mr. BRATTON. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not press the matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, Mr. President; I withdraw the request.

Mr. McKELLAR. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator withhold that for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I withhold it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take the floor from the Senator from New Mexico, but I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee before the Senator proceeds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico now yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if it is not a fact that we are trying to save about $400,000,000 in proposed economies?

Mr. JONES. I do not know that a definite amount has been fixed. We want to save all we can.

Mr. TYDINGS. What figure is the Senator attempting to reach?

Mr. JONES. As the bill was reported the committee estimated that it would save about $230,000,000—something like that. We have just reached one proposition as to which I do not know what the action of the Senate will be. There is a difference among the members of the committee as to whether or not we should deal with the veterans; and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] is going to make a motion to strike out this title. If the Senate should strike it out, that would cut down our amount about $48,000,000. We expected to save by the bill as we reported it, I think, about $231,000,000 or $238,000,000; something like that.

Mr. TYDINGS. In addition to the $231,000,000, assuming that that entire amount was saved, is there any other proposition to save any money anywhere else?

Mr. JONES. We are expecting to save all the money that we possibly can in these appropriation bills. The committee did not deem that it was its province to deal with appropriation bills, so we did not go into those; but every appropriation bill—and we have sent only one to the President—must be cut down just as low as we can possibly cut it down.

Mr. TYDINGS. My purpose in asking the Senator these two questions was premised upon the fact that heretofore we have cut some of the appropriation bills 10 per cent, as the Senator knows. A part of that cut of 10 per cent in the appropriation bills obviously applies to savings in personnel.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I hesitate to yield for a continuation of this discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico declines to yield further. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Kendrick Davis Robinson, Ark Keyes King Robinson, Ind. Schall Austin Dickinson Bankhead Dill Fletcher La Follette Lewis Sheppard Shipstead Barbour Frazier George Glass Glenn Logan McGill Smith Bingham Blaine Bratton McKellar Steiwer Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. McNary Metcalf Bulow Goldsborough Hale Harrison Byrnes Moses Neely Norbeck Capper Caraway Townsend Hastings Hatfield Trammell Carey Tydings Vandenberg Hawes Hayden Norris Connally Nye Oddie Walcott Walsh, Mont. Watson Coolidge Hebert Hull Patterson Couzens Johnson Pittman Wheeler

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] is detained at a meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Bulkley], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gorel are also detained in committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to delay the Senator, but I should like to get an answer to the question I started to propound to the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the committee.

As I understand, it is contemplated to save about $230,-000,000, all told, in the economy bill. Obviously, the economies which have already been effected in the appropriation bills to some extent are duplicated in the economy bill. I was wondering if the Senator could give us an approximate figure of the amount of duplication.

Mr. JONES. No; I can not. We did not know how this bill would finally develop, and we do not know how the appropriation bills will finally develop. Of course, whatever we save by reason of the salary reduction, and so on, and by reason of the reductions in these other bills, will, of course, be determined at the end, but we really made no estimate as to what, has been accomplished thus far.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if it would be possible for the clerk of the Appropriations Committee to make not an exact statement but an approximate statement as to how much of the reputed saving of the appropriation bills heretofore passed is now really in existence, excluding the matters contemplated in the economy bill.

Mr. JONES. I asked practically the same question of the clerk of the committee to-day. The bills have not gotten along so that he can make any accurate estimate at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if I may delay the Senator from New Mexico just a moment, if we save all the money estimated to be saved through the economy bill, about $230,-000,000, a part of that saving has already been figured in the appropriation bill. The economy bill is evidently going to be curtailed a little, so that, as I see it, we are not going to effect economy greatly in excess of $200,000,000. Yet we have pictured to the country that we are going to economize to the extent of $400,000,000, and the only reason why I rise now is to try to get some approximation of the true figure so that the country may know exactly what economies we will effect.

Mr. JONES. I have not given any such impression as the Senator mentions.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not say the Senator has.

Mr. JONES. We have arrived at a point in this bill where we may cut off $48,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator whether at the first opportunity he will not ask the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to try to give us a substantial approximation of what has really been saved through the economy bill and in the appropriation bills passed to date? A part of the economies have been duplicated; and obviously, in the ascertainment of that figure, they should be eliminated in one of the other bills so that we may have the true savings in a separate estimate.

Mr. JONES. I will have the clerk get all the estimates he possibly can.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I was called out of the Chamber, and the amendment on page 95 was agreed to—the insertion of section 515. I wanted to discuss that on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Let us do that afterwards.

Mr. DILL. I shall enter a motion to reconsider the vote at this time and call it up at a later time.

Mr. JONES. That is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from

New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. ASHURST. So much has been said, not especially

Mr. ASHURST. So much has been said, not especially on the floor of the Senate but throughout the country, as to emergency officers, and there has been so much misinformation disseminated, respecting the emergency officers who served during the World War who have been retired with pay, that I ask leave to print in the Record a list of those who are drawing pay on the emergency officers' retired list.

I ought to say to Senators that this list embraces only those who were on the list as of date March 29 last.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Arizona mean March of this year?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator added up the number on the list to determine how many there are?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not.

Mr. KING. It now exceeds 6,450, as I recall it, and the number is being added to.

Mr. ASHURST. In view of the fact that the country generally believes that scores of thousands of emergency officers are on the retired list, I think it well to reprint the list as of date March 29.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I ought to say that the list would embrace some 20 pages of the RECORD. I want Senators to know that fact, so that there will be no charge hereafter that I have taken too much space in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to make the suggestion that I do not believe the public think there are so many as the Senator has indicated, for the reason that when the retirement bill was under consideration, it was constantly affirmed that the number who would claim the privilege under it would not exceed perhaps twelve to fifteen hundred?

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senator say hundreds or thousands?

Mr. KING. No: Senator Tyson stated that in no event would the number exceed 1,800. So the people were led to believe, and Senators were led to believe, that it would be an inconsequential number, and when I was informed, and when other Senators were informed, that the total exceeded 6,000, I confess that there was very great surprise.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico permit me to make just one suggestion in reference to what was said by the Senator from Utah?

Whether it is 1,800 or 6,000, the question is whether or not it is just. If there are 6,000 entitled to this relief, they ought to have it. Whether it is 6,000 or 1,800, the number has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, we have now reached Title VII of the bill, which contains the provisions relating to veterans. That is the only question on which the subcommittee was finally divided. Respecting all other questions we were able to compose our differences and unite our voices.

We were not able to do so on this question, and the point of division among the members of the committee was not confined to the merits or demerits of the several sections in the bill, but a majority of the committee believed that we should go into the subject matter and legislate upon it. A minority of the committee believed that we should not do so.

Mr. President, if the Senate should hold to the view that we should not go into the matter, if a majority of the Senate should share the views held by a minority of the subcommittee, it would be a waste of time to take up this title section by section. It seems to me, therefore, that the orderly way to approach the subject matter would be through a motion to strike out the entire title except section 709, which provides for the appointment of a commission to study the whole subject matter of legislation touching veterans, and report to Congress next January.

Accordingly, Mr. President, in the interest of haste, and to record the judgment of the Senate upon the broad question of whether we shall go into this subject matter, I intend in a few moments to ask unanimous consent to interpose a motion to strike out all of Title VII except section 709. If that motion shall prevail, it will be useless to discuss the sections one by one. If that motion shall not prevail, then we must take up the sections and discuss their merits and demerits.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand it, there was a subcommittee at first which worked out this matter and then referred it to the whole committee?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. How did the subcommittee stand on Title VII?

Mr. BRATTON. A majority of the subcommittee stood in favor of including the legislation in the bill. The full committee stood 10 to 9 in favor of doing so.

Mr. HARRISON. If this title should be stricken out and a commission should be appointed to investigate and report, when would it report?

Mr. BRATTON. The bill expressly provides that the commission shall report in January, 1933.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, there would be approximately $200,000,000 economies effected? Is that right?

Mr. BRATTON. Not quite that much. Mr. HARRISON. Within two or three million dollars of $200,000,000?

Mr. BRATTON. That is substantially correct.
Mr. HARRISON. We started out to get about $350,000,000, I think. Is it the Senator's opinion, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that $150,000,00 in economies would be effected through savings in the general appropriation bills, and that, added to this, would figure about

Mr. BRATTON. That is my judgment; and I think the Committee on Appropriations can effect additional savings of Mr. HARRISON. Then, if the Senate should strike out this provision, it can not be said that we have demolished the economy program, as far as effecting savings to the amount of $350,000,000 is concerned?

Mr. BRATTON. It can not be so stated by any means.

Mr. HARRISON. As one Member of the Senate, I wanted to follow the unanimous report. I am told now the committee stands 10 to 9, and it is rather difficult to tell just which way to proceed.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator will find on page 30 of the report of the committee the minority views, in which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] and I concurred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair suggest that the same result would be obtained by voting down the committee amendment, because the provision the Senator desires to preserve is the House text?

Mr. BRATTON. The procedural situation I had in mind was that we would have to take up the title section by section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator moves to strike out then the provision could be amended, unless by unanimous consent the Senate could vote on the committee amendment or on the proposition submitted by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, addressing ourselves to the matter of going into this field, the body of law dealing with ex-service men has been constructed over a period of about 15 years. Various measures have been enacted. Each of them came under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. That committee proceeded in an orderly, deliberate way. Hearings were conducted. Veterans concerned were given an opportunity to appear and express themselves. Through that method, through successive steps taken in that way, the whole body of law relating to ex-service men has been constructed.

Now, Mr. President, under the guise of effecting economy, and solely under that guise, it is proposed by another committee, a committee which never dealt with the subject before, a committee which has paid no attention to it except as its individual members in this body gave some thought to it, as a means of effecting economy, if you please, to take from ex-service men, not temporarily, not a horizontal cut, but to take from them permanently, benefits aggregating almost $50,000,000 a year.

Not only that but our committee proceeded in haste. This title was added as a rider to an appropriation bill. The special committee proceeded behind closed doors. Not a veteran, from center to circumference of the Nation, was heard. Not a veteran was given notice that the committee was considering such matter. Without the veterans having any opportunity to be heard, without their having any opportunity to speak for themselves, without their having any opportunity to address themselves to the merits or the demerits of the proposed legislation, the committee came from its executive session with a provision in this bill designed to remove permanently from the rolls thousands of ex-service men.

For instance, it is estimated that section 701, appearing on page 98 of the bill, would remove from the rolls 28,300 exservice men. That statement is found at page 20 of the report, just preceding the title "Veterans in institutions." Senators will note this language in the report:

It is estimated that this section will result in the removal from the rolls of some 28,300 persons and while this number may seem somewhat high when it is considered that there are over a million persons receiving benefits it will be seen that the effect on the total number of persons receiving benefits is slight.

Mr. President, much has been said on the floor of the Senate during the last two or three days about Federal employees having arranged their affairs relying upon their salaries from the Government. These arguments were made with much force. But does any Member of the Senate have any difficulty in differentiating between a Federal employee whose salary is reduced only 10 per cent, and that reduction confined to a period of one year, with the health and with the retirement annuity upon which he can rely during old age, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the elimination permanently of 28,300 veterans from the pay roll of the Government, without notice, without opportunity to be heard?

What have we to say about the veteran who has built a home, perhaps mortgaged it, perhaps conducting a little poultry business in the back yard, relying upon his stipend from the Government with which to pay the mortgage, with which to conduct the business, with which to support himself and his family, and having him rise some morning and find that a committee of the Senate, behind closed doors and in executive session, proposed to remove him entirely from the roll, not temporarily but permanently, thus taking away the very source from which he expects to retire the mortgage upon his modest home and support himself and family and to educate his sons and daughters.

Mr. President, the original legislation was not enacted in this way. The veterans had the right to assume that the legislation constituted what may be termed a contract between the Government and themselves, and that before it should be violated in this fashion they would be given an opportunity to appear and be heard. Why, even in the courts of the country in a civil action between citizen and citizen, a man's property can not be taken from him without giving him notice and affording him an opportunity to be heard and speak upon the merits of the controversy. But here it is proposed that a sovereign government take advantage of a class of its citizens in a way that is denied a citizen when he litigates with another citizen in a court of law.

To me it is unthinkable that Congress should take such action in the method and in the manner I have outlined, not moved by any consideration of injustice or inequalities in the administration of the law, but solely upon the ground of effecting economy, because that is what the committee was established for, that was the obligation enjoined upon the committee, and that was its sole function—not to correct injustices in veterans' legislation, not to prevent fraud in the administration of veterans' affairs, not to cure or correct the legislation, but to achieve economy. Under that guise, under that charge, the committee of six, sitting behind closed doors, raises the ax and, when it falls, at one swoop $50,000,000 is taken away from the disabled exservice men of the country, not temporarily but permanently.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I do not understand we are taking any compensation from a disabled veteran who was disabled by reason of his services in the war or is now in ill health by reference to any service in the war. If that be so, I have had an utter misapprehension of the design and the provision of the bill. I have understood that we were discontinuing the compensation, if it may be called that, to ex-enlisted men whose illness, if there be any, may not be referred to their service in the war, or whose disability, if there be any, may not be referred to any service they performed in the war.

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, all compensation is disability compensation. That is what it is for. That is what it was created for, to compensate a man for disability attributable to his service in the war or aggravated by such service. Part of it is traceable directly to service and is what may be called and is called by the Veterans' Bureau a causative factor. The other rests upon the doctrine of presumption; that is to say, if a veteran can show that within a certain period he was disabled in a certain way, it is presumed that the disability is traceable to his service. But all compensation of either kind is disability compensation designed to compensate the veteran for a disability suffered as a consequence of his service in the war.

Suppose it is a presumptive case, under the law which has been built up in an orderly fashion under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, the veteran is given that status, his compensation is fixed, his Government said he is entitled to so much money. He arranges his affairs accordingly. Now out of a clear sky the edict comes that no longer shall that be the case; that his compensation will not be curtailed but terminated; and that he can go into the ranks of the unemployed and do the best he can.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am wondering just what argument could have been made in the committee as a basis for taking any action that seems so thoroughly unjust to men who have worn the uniform in defense of the country. The statements made by the Senator from New Mexico, which I have no doubt are entirely true, are so extraordinary that I am wondering if the Senator could not give us some of the reasons advanced for taking such unjust action as this seems to be against the veterans of the United States.

Mr. BRATTON. In justice to members of the committee—indeed, the majority who advocate the legislation—I prefer to refrain from expressing an opinion respecting the motives which actuated them. Sufficient it is to say that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] and I, who presented the minority report, felt, in the first place, that any inequalities or injustices which may exist in the legislation should be corrected through the orderly and regular channels; that is to say, bills introduced, referred to a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter, hearings conducted if requested, and then an opportunity for the veterans concerned to appear and present their side of the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that the bill provides for a joint committee to do that very thing?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. Section 709 provides for a joint committee to conduct a survey of the whole matter and report to Congress not later than the 1st of next January.

Mr. CONNALLY. So that if this title is not eliminated such a committee would be created, which would take up the matter and report back something in the form of permanent legislation?

Mr. BRATTON. That is the purpose of the section.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I assume, in that event, of course, that the veterans would have an opportunity to be heard and present their side of the case before the special committee?

Mr. BRATTON. So far as I know, this is the first time any committee ever undertook to proceed in this way.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. While mathematics is purely secondary to the equities, may I ask the Senator to straighten out what seems to be a discrepancy in the minority report, which indicates, in the fourth line, that $100,000,000 is involved in Title VII, and in the last line of the first paragraph that $50,000,000 is involved?

Mr. BRATTON. I should be glad to clarify that. At the time the minority report was prepared a majority of the subcommittee of six had inserted provisions in the bill which took from the veterans a total of approximately $100,000,000. The full Committee on Appropriations reduced that to $50,000,000. In revising the minority report after the full committee had taken that action, the correction was made in the second place but overlooked in the first place.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield. Mr. BINGHAM. I am sure if the Senator will revive his memory he will recall that a majority of the committee did not agree with regard to $51,000,000 that comes out of the disability nonservice connection, but that was put in the report through the full committee merely because it was the opinion of two or three members of the committee that it should be considered by the full committee. It represents the views of a majority of the committee. I say this because I was one of those who felt that it could be done without any injustice to anyone, and I was in favor of it, but I was in the minority.

Mr. BRATTON. Perhaps the Senator's statement is more accurate than my own was, and I accept it. At least, it was proposed to amend the act of July 3, 1930, by eliminating that class of veterans suffering a disability of 25 per cent whose compensation is $12 per month. If that provision had remained in the bill, it would have stricken from the rolls veterans drawing $51,000,000 annually. That sum. added to the $50,000,000 now in the bill, made up the total of $100,000,000 to which the first figure refers. In revising the minority report after final action had been taken by the full committee, the correction was made in the second place and overlooked in the first instance. The truth is that the bill as it now stands contemplates reductions or eliminations aggregating a little less than $50,000,000 annually.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to go into the merits or demerits of the several sections of the bill nor the several classes of veterans dealt with there. I think before we reach the merits of the legislation we should determine the broad principle whether Congress is going to legislate concerning these veterans in this fashion, whether under the guise of economy, behind closed doors, with no opportunity to be heard, we are going to eliminate this tremendous number from the rolls permanently by taking their stipends away from them and thus add them to the unemployed and let them go into life and do the best they can.

My thought is that if such a motion as I have presented shall prevail, we will avoid extended discussion of the several questions. That discussion will consume a great deal of time. If a majority of the Senate disfavor going into the matter at all, but prefer to have a joint committee make its survey and report the 1st of January, then discussion of the separate sections would be a waste of time. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to interpose a motion to strike out all of Title VII except section 709.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I hope the Senator will not do that. I know how strongly the Senator feels in these matters. The Senator knows I have heard him express his views two or three times before the subcommittee and the committee just as he has expressed them on the floor. I think the Senator will agree with me that there is varying merit in the proposals. Some of them should appeal more strongly than others. They do not stand foursquare except so far as they appeal under the Senator's condemnation of them as having been made behind closed doors and without the beneficiaries being given a chance to be heard

May I remind the Senator that the legislation regarding pay cuts, the legislation regarding travel allowances, and all the other legislation embraced in this bill for which the Senator and I both have voted have actually been put in the bill without any of the beneficiaries of it having been heard. The Senator knows that every member of the subcommittee had sympathy with those concerned, that they had sympathy with the Federal employees, and sympathy with the veterans, but we were laboring under the necessity of trying somehow to effect a saving of $250,000,000, and the committee worked faithfully to accomplish that purpose.

Some of the various provisions which are in front of us, and which the Senator is asking unanimous consent to strike out, are designed to correct what to my mind are extremely unfair and ill-advised provisions of the existing law. There are other provisions about which that may not be said.

I do not desire to discuss the matter at length, but I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion. I dislike to oppose it, but I should like to discuss each one of these particular items on its own merits.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the Senator will agree that, regardless of the degrees of merit or demerit of the several sections of the bill, they are all laden with the defects which I have attempted to draw to the attention of the Senate; that is to say, they were put into the bill behind closed doors without the beneficiaries being heard. If that is a controlling principle, and if it is the sentiment of the Senate that legislation should not be formulated in that way, it would be just a waste of time for us to discuss the provisions of the title section by section.

If the majority of the Senate believe that we should go into the matter and give it careful consideration, then, of course, we shall take up the title section by section. But I appeal for an opportunity to let the Senate record its judgment as to whether or not we shall go into the matter at all. If it is decided on the threshold that we shall not legislate in this fashion, I know that the Senator does not care then to have, perhaps, many hours, perhaps a day or two consumed in discussing the various degrees of merit and demerit of these several sections.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator will perhaps remember that I appealed to the committee on this particular point, that it hear representatives of all service organizations, including the committee which has been doing a good deal to show the country the danger of some of this legislation and the chance for economy in connection with it; that I called the attention of members of the committee to the fact that we would be accused of just this thing if we did not hear all their representatives and hear what they had to say.

Mr. BRATTON. Exactly.
Mr. BINGHAM. And the committee voted against my appeal.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, after the committee had agreed that its deliberations should be secret and should not be disclosed on the outside; then the Senator sought to make an exception of this one matter but not as to any other part of the bill. On that a majority of the committee disagreed with him. We adhered to the view that, having agreed that our sessions should be secret, we should follow that course throughout. We did so, and with that procedure adopted, a majority of the committee favored inserting the legislation. A minority did not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator himself has just stated that it was the view of the committee that all the discussion, all the action of the committee, and all the work it did should be in secret session. No opportunity was given to the representatives of the veterans' organizations to be heard, nor was any opportunity to be heard given to representatives of the Government employees, who are just as vitally concerned with the money that they earn as are the veterans concerned with the money which the Congress, in its generosity, has in previous years decreed should be theirs.

I claim, Mr. President, that there was no injustice done to anyone by the committee's decision. The committee was obliged to act promptly, and these various provisions, which were fully discussed in the other House, and which were fully discussed, if my recollection serves me, before the House committee, were put in by the committee because the committee believed they were justified, and that these cuts be made without harming any who were seriously entitled to consideration. For these reasons I hope the Senator will not press his request.

If this question comes to a vote, the vote will be had on the general principle, and it will be claimed by many that a vote for the committee amendment will be a vote in general against the veterans, and a vote for the motion offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be taken as a general expression of opinion. I believe that if we could have some of these matters explained individually we might save some of the money involved.

The Senator from New Mexico has claimed that on the "specious plea" of economy we were asked to do this. Mr. President, a plea of economy is not a "specious plea." The taxpayers of the country are crying out for economy and more of it. One-quarter of all the Government expenditures to-day is spent on the veterans' administration; 25 cents out of every dollar of the taxpayers' money go into the veterans' administration. If there is to be economy, it seems to me it is only fair that the veterans, in so far as they are able to do so, should bear a part of it, as well as the Government employees.

A very large part of the money spent by the Government is spent in paying interest on the public debt and in setting aside an amount for the sinking fund. These items can not be interfered with without the Government going into bank-ruptcy.

If economy is to be attained, if we are to reach the goal which the President set before us in the address which he delivered in this Chamber in the hope that we might save $250,000,000 by this bill, I trust that those who sympathize with the position taken by the Senator from New Mexico and propose to vote for his motion, if we have a vote on that general question, will find some other way whereby they can save the $50,000,000, which a vote for his motion would strike from the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] was recognized before the Senator from New Mexico rose, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to make a brief statement regarding the pending question. I rather feel that the Senator from New Mexico, not intentionally at all, for there is not a fairer man on this floor than is he, has probably given just a little bit of a wrong impression with reference to the status of the committee of six.

From the beginning, as I think the Senator knows, I was against taking up veterans' matters. I was against doing so for this reason, that only a couple of years ago Congress enacted legislation granting compensation of various kinds to World War veterans, and it is only a short time ago since we provided for the Spanish War veterans as well. Congress took that action; Congress took it deliberately; it must have been presumed to have gone into the matter very carefully; and I took the ground in the committee that I did not believe we ought, within practically two years, undo some of the legislation that Congress had deliberately passed dealing with the veterans. That was my general attitude.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. Under no circumstances would I intentionally do the Senator from Washington an injustice or create an incorrect inference respecting his position.

Mr. JONES. I know that to be so.

Mr. BRATTON. What the Senator has stated was his attitude; he stated it repeatedly in the committe; I take pleasure in confirming what he has said; and, if any statement I made a few moments ago gave any other impression, I welcome the opportunity to correct it. That was the Senator's attitude from the start.

Mr. JONES. I thank the Senator; I knew he had that idea.

However, Mr. President, the plea was made that we should go into the matter. In the first place, we all agreed that we did not have the time to hold public hearings in the committee; and considering the matters with which we had to deal, we thought we would have about the same opinion after hearings as we had before them. The time was short; and we knew very well that some would not be in favor of a 10 per cent cut; we knew that others would be in favor of another kind of a cut, and nobody, of course, would want any cut at all if it could be avoided.

In regard to the other questions with which we had to deal we knew very well that with reference to the pension matters there would be a difference of opinion. Of course, nobody would want to decrease the payments being made. So the question was discussed whether or not we should go into legislation of that character at all. As I have said, I took the position, along with others, that we ought not to go into it and interfere with pension legislation; that, regardless of the merits of the particular cases or particular classes, the committee should not take up that question, which had been settled by Congress just two or three years ago.

Some of the members of the committee were very insistent upon taking the questions up, and very honestly so. I have no hesitation in saying that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bingham] was strongly for that course. He himself is a veteran, and I think his views in regard to such matters are entitled to very great weight and consideration. So, even though it might be said we were evenly divided as to whether or not we should go into pension legislation, we felt, under the insistence, that it should be gone into, that we would take it up, and we did take it up.

The various amendments to this title of the bill were suggested by the Director of Veterans' Affairs, General Hines, who is a very fine man, and, as everybody knows, of course, he is a friend of the veterans. He suggested certain amendments and furnished estimates as to what they would save and gave to us a very full and complete statement in reference to them.

After we had gone through them, instead, I would say, of voting 4 to 2, we submitted the report and recommendations to the full committee, and in the full committee my recollection is that I suggested to the committee that the first thing that should be determined was just what the Senator from New Mexico is now asking the Senate to determine, namely, whether or not we should go into the matter of pension legislation. The vote was in favor of that. I want to say that I voted against that. I took the same position then that I take now.

I am not going to discuss these various items. I think the motion that I undertsood the Senator had made, or at any rate that he was talking of making, was the proper thing to do, and let the Senate determine whether or not it wants to go into this field now, whether or not it believes it should go into this field. Personally, I do not believe it should. I think—I may be wrong about it—that the Senator would have a perfect right, and I believe it would be in order, to move to strike out of this bill a certain part of it.

I think it would be wise to get the sentiment of the Senate with reference to that particular proposition as to whether or not Senators want to go into that field. If the Senate does not want to go into it, it should say so, and I think it can very well say so; and in that way, as was suggested by the Senator from New Mexico, we might save a whole lot of time.

If the Senate wants to go into that subject; if it thinks, in view of the past action of the Senate, that this is the time for us to go into it, then, of course, we will go into these various propositions.

That is about all I care to say.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator is the third member of the committee who does not feel that the Senate should go into this field.

Mr. JONES. I do not think it should.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Are there any other members of the committee who feel as the Senator does, and as the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] have expressed them-

Mr. JONES. I am frank to say that I think the other three members of the committee are rather in favor of doing this; and they think just as much of the soldiers as I do, and they think just as much of their welfare as I do.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The committee is a tie on it? In view of that attitude, how can the Senate act? If you have doubts about the justice and equity of these proposals, how can we be expected to know what course to follow?

Mr. JONES. Let me say to the Senator that the full committee of the Committee on Appropriations, by a vote, I think, of 10 to 9, decided to go into the matter. That very question was submitted to them; and, while no roll call was had, it was my recollection that the vote was 10 to 9. So we went in and considered all of these various matters and brought them out here to the Senate.

I think that is all I care to say.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the statements that have been made here on the floor, as it seems to me, place those members of the Appropriations Committee who voted to sustain the work of the subcommittee in a very unhappy light before the Senate and before the country.

It has been represented to the Senate here that those of us who sustained the subcommittee's work proceeded in a rather heartless way with respect to the veterans; that we heard everybody else, and behind closed doors dealt very harshly with these ex-service men, without an opportunity to them to be heard.

I understood that the deliberations of the subcommittee. of which I was not a member, were strictly secret; that all interests were excluded in order that the members of the subcommittee, free from influences of any description, considering the problems purely upon their merits, might arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES. I certainly was unfortunate in my expressions. I did not intend to convey to the public or to anybody else the idea that any of the members of the Appropriations Committee outside of the subcommittee had anything to do with the meetings of the subcommittee.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I acquit the Senator from Washington and all other Senators of any purpose to do that.

Mr. JONES. I certainly did not. Mr. GLASS. But it is perfectly manifest that that sort of impression was produced here in the Senate Chamber, because the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson] marveled at what might have been the reasons which prompted the subcommittee and the Appropriations Committee to present a provision of this sort in the bill upon the statement of the case made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]; and I do not wonder that the Senator from Indiana so marveled, or that any other Senator might have marveled.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Indiana addressed me first. I yield first to him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes, Mr. President; I marveled that a committee or subcommittee of the Senate should do a thing that seems to have been more or less unprecedented, where the victims in the matter would be the service men, the veterans of the wars of the United States. It did seem to me so strange that I thought there ought to be some statement made as to the reasons for taking this unprecedented action against the veterans.

Mr. GLASS. Exactly; and I do not wonder that the Senator marveled or that any Senator would have marveled.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator question the correctness of a single statement I made?

Mr. GLASS. I am not prepared to question the accuracy of any statement that the Senator made: but I do say that my understanding of the whole transaction was vastly different from the understanding of the Senator from New

Mr. BRATTON. I think the Senator, in justice to me, will recall that I made substantially the same statement in the full committee, in the Senator's presence, in an effort to prevent the full committee from approving these provisions.

Mr. GLASS. No; the Senator is absolutely mistaken about that. He did not make it in my presence, because I was not at the meeting of the Appropriations Committee to which the Senator may have addressed himself.

Mr. BRATTON. Then I withdraw that statement. I did make it to the full committee. Of course, the Senator's statement that he was absent is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield

Mr. GLASS. What I want to say, if I may proceed just a moment, in justice to those members of the Appropriations Committee who voted without a great deal of knowledge of the details, who voted to sustain the work of this subcommittee of which, I repeat, I was not a member, is this:

I understood that no veteran who actually incurred a disability or illness in the war was affected by this provision of the bill. I also understood from the merely incidental statements made to me in the committee that no veteran who was actually in the war zone, whether injured or not injured, whether ill or not ill, was affected by this provision of the bill. I further understood-I think it would be accurate to say that I was told—that no veteran of any description who is in receipt of less than $3,000 a year was affected by this provision of the bill.

It was upon that understanding that I voted to sustain the work of the subcommittee, and not through any degree of heartlessness toward any veteran. I had two sons in the firing line and a nephew who was decorated for his courage; and it would be inconceivable to me to entertain or to express any lack of sympathy with the veterans. If, however, the merits of the case are as they were represented to me, I shall not recede from my attitude, and I shall have no apology to make to any veteran or to anybody else for my attitude.

In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an article from the New York Times of last Sunday that I had inserted in the RECORD yesterday, from which, briefly, it will appear that while the United States mobilized 4,355,000 men in the war, the nations of Europe mobilized 34,000,000 men in the war; and that while the United States had 360,000 men killed and wounded. of whom I am told 54,000 only were killed, the other nations engaged in the war had about 16,000,000 men killed and wounded; and yet this Government, in those circumstances, is paying out this year $1,072,064,000 toward the relief of its veterans, whereas all the other nations combined, with their 34,000,000 enlistments against our 4,300,000, are paying out less than $1,000,000,000. In other words, this Nation, so far from dealing in a harsh way or a heartless way with the veterans, is paying out this year, in the circumstances mentioned-4,300,000 enlistments the other nations engaged in the war put together.

Therefore I certainly acquit myself, in the circumstances cited, of any desire on earth to deal inconsiderately or harshly with the veterans, and repeat that if the representations made to me as to the merits of this proposition were in any degree accurate I have no apology to make to anybody for my attitude in the matter.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may make a formal motion and have a question pending?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out all of Title VII except section 709.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That includes all the committee amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. That is my motion.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee, I want to say that I believed that legislation correcting inequalities and injustices in the veterans' legislation should be considered.

I disapproved of the legislation proposed by the Veterans' Administration as to the disability allowance, by which it was claimed $51,000,000 would be saved, and of the proposal to restrict the production of evidence upon the trial of a case. I thought, however, that as to these other provisions, they should be reported by the full committee. The full Committee on Appropriations took the same view; but I want to say, in justice to them, that at the time the bill was reported it was understood by the committee that every member reserved the right to vote as he saw fit upon these various items whenever they were presented.

One reason why I voted to report them is the law relating to the retirement of emergency officers. It was never intended by the Congress of the United States that the emergency officers' retirement law should operate as it now operates. There was a request on the part of the emergency officers that they should be put on the same basis with the officers of the Regular Army, in so far as retirement was concerned. No officer of the Regular Army is retired by reason of any presumptive disability.

My recollection is that 3,250 names were to be added to the retirement rolls, according to the figures of the Veterans' Administration submitted to the committees of Congress at the time the measure was under consideration. After the bill was passed by Congress an Attorney General of the United States rendered a decision overruling the decision of the attorney of the Veterans' Administration, and, under the decision of the Attorney General of the United States, it was held that while a Regular Army officer could not be retired on account of a presumptive disability, an emergency officer could be retired merely on account of the presumption of disability, and as a result 2,000 names were added to the rolls of the retired officers over and above the number submitted to the Congress.

It is because of that interpretation that we find in the Veterans' Administration that of the 329 doctors employed by the Veterans' Administration 225 have been retired. Under the interpretation of the law by the Attorney General of the United States to which I have referred, many of these officers were retired on account of presumptive disabilities.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I observe the Senator has given a good deal of thought and study to the administration of veterans' affairs. I would like to inquire from him if it is his judgment that many of the complaints which are made by the public against excessive expenditures in the Veterans' Administration are due to just what the Senator has pointed out and not so much to anything Congress has done through its liberal legislative acts affecting the rights of veterans.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Massachusetts is exactly right. I will say that I followed the debates on the various against 34,000,000 enlistments-10 per cent more than all | veterans' measures, and I have investigated the record recently, and during the consideration of the veterans' legislation the Senator from Massachusetts was one of the most enthusiastic and ardent advocates of the rights of the veterans and the measures for their benefit. After the Congress had enacted the legislation it was subjected to interpretations by administrative officials, which have absolutely destroyed the intent of Congress and brought down on Congress criticism which it did not deserve.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am glad to hear the Senator's observations, for they are in accord with my own study of this problem.

Mr. BYRNES. Whenever the men who fought the battles of America find out that of 329 doctors employed by the Veterans' Administration 225 have been retired on threefourths pay, I do not blame them for criticizing. Whenever a veteran of this country goes into court on an insurance contract to secure that which he believes is justly due him under his insurance contract a physician is called to the stand from the Veterans' Administration, who testifies that the doughboy is not disabled and is not entitled to recover under his contract. On cross-examination an attorney asks, Doctor, you are employed by the Veterans' Administration. Are you drawing any retirement pay for disability?" The doctor answers, "Yes." "How much?" "Three-fourths pay." "How were you disabled?" Then we learn often that he is presumptively disabled, and the poor devil who is the plaintiff in the suit is testified out of court by a doctor drawing a salary of three, four, five, or six thousand dollars a year, and at the same time drawing retirement pay of threefourths of his Army pay because of a presumptive disability. That is one of the reasons why the veterans throughout the country are dissatisfied. That is one of the reasons why we find people criticizing the Veterans' Administration to-day.

If a doctor is so disabled that he is held to be entitled to three-fourths of his pay on retirement, he is so disabled that he is not entitled to draw a salary of five or six thousand dollars from the Government of the United States for working under the Veterans' Administration. If he is able to work for the Veterans' Administration and earn five or six thousand dollars a year salary, then he is in such splendid health and is so able that he should not be retired because of disability. He can take either side of it, but he should not be allowed to take both sides, at the expense of the soldiers and of the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, is it not a fact that in the retirement of Regular Army officers there must be affirmative evidence that the men seeking to be retired are unfit for duty?

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely. Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yet we have retired emergency Army officers who are apparently physically able to perform work that commands a substantial salary.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, the Senator is right; and the Senator remembers, as does every other Senator who was then a Member of Congress, that when the emergency officers came to us to plead for this retirement legislation all they asked was that they be given the same rights as officers of the Regular Army of the United States. We gave them those rights, according to the language of the law as it was enacted. No man dreamed it would be construed or interpreted to include a man who was presumptively disabled. Yet, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, such officers have been put upon the roll and are drawing retirement pay in the amount of three-fourths of their service pay, although they in many cases are so able that they are in the service of the Government drawing large salaries.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. How can these doctors resist the pressure brought to bear upon them by applicants for compensation when they themselves are receiving compensation of a doubtful nature?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that of course the question of retired pay and the question of compensation are questions which inevitably must depend upon the determination of a physician. There seems to have been some evidence, in the examination of physicians by physicians, of "If you tickle me I will tickle you." In no other way can we possibly account for the ! large number of physicians who have been retired. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that from the Army Medical Corps 1,465 have been retired with pay, according to a letter written me by the Director of Veterans' Administration a few days ago.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course, the spirit which leads one doctor examining another to recommend him for compensation has run like a thread through the whole structure, and if we want to economize in the Veterans' Bureau, we will have to begin with the medical investigations and the character of their decisions.

Mr. BYRNES. I am satisfied that in no other way can it be done, and I am satisfied that this particular legislation in the bill is most deserving.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a fact, is it not, that we have required the Veterans' Bureau to give preference to veterans themselves, not only the medical veterans but all the veterans who make application for positions with the bureau?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.
Mr. GEORGE. That is congressional action?
Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask another question.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me answer that question first. That is true, but out of all the doctors who served in the Army and who are veterans and entitled to preference, we ought to be able to get hold of one now and then who has not gotten himself on the retired list.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not thinking of the retired list now, but we do require the Veterans' Administration to give preference to veterans?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. Mr. GEORGE. I infer the Senator will concede that the actual reformation made in the veterans' legislation by this bill is just a beginning, is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not understand. Mr. GEORGE. I mean it is not the Senator's view that the bill now before us is a complete reformation?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no; of course, it is not.
Mr. GEORGE. Would it not be wiser, if that is true, that this matter be referred to a committee to go into it and make a careful survey, so that every abuse which now is apparent and obvious can be corrected at the next session of Mr. BYRNES. I will answer the Senator in a moment. I am coming to that point right now, and I am going to express my views on it.

There are several other items of a similar nature. Here is a boy who, after the war, in 1919, enlisted in the Regular Army. He did not go into the war. He may have stayed out because he did not like the noise of guns. He may have stayed out for other reasons. But for whatever reason, he did not enlist until 1919 or 1920, when he enlisted in the Regular Army. Because we in Congress declared that the technical termination of the war was July 2, 1921, if that boy, who did not like the ocean and stayed at home, and after the war was over enlisted in the Army, on July 1, 1921, fell off his piazza or tripped up and sprained his ankle, he is, in the view of the Veterans' Administration, entitled to all the benefits received by the soldier who was at Montfaucon fighting in the closing days of the war in 1918. It is held that the war was not over technically until July 2, 1921, by reason of the declaration of Congress, and therefore he is entitled to benefits which the boy who might be hurt on July 4, 1921, is not entitled to. I imagine there was no more surprised human being than such a boy when he was told, "My friend, you are entitled to more compensation and to more benefits, because you were injured during the war." Of course, the boy thought the war ended November 11, 1918. He had to be told that he was mistaken; that, according to a declaration of Congress, the war was not over until July 2, 1921. Therefore, he is placed on the same basis with the fellow who was injured in Europe fighting the battles of his country. I know that whenever the ex-service men of America have those things called to their attention, none will demand more than they that these injustices and inequalities be remedied.

Then I get to the question brought up by the Senator from Georgia. I know the hopelessness of it now. I have conferred with my colleagues here. They think they should not be considered now. There are some proposals suggested by the Veterans' Administration to which I do not agree. Such things as I have called attention to I am satisfied must be done. I know, however, that they can never be done unless we have an opportunity to present them at a time when they can be explained, and I have come to the conclusion that that can not be done now.

I have conferred with members of the committee. I have called to their attention the fact that on yesterday the House of Representatives, by a vote of 160 to 24, passed a bill, under suspension of the rules, doing exactly what this committee has recommended in section 2 affecting emergency officers, which subject I have referred to in the last few minutes. That bill was sent to the Senate and has been referred to the Committee on Finance.

That is the committee charged with the consideration of such legislation and to which the bill was referred to-day. We have the same provision contained in this bill. I know that in endeavoring to explain it on the floor of the Senate it can not be properly done, so I have come to the conclusion to-day, much as I should like to have these injustices and inequalities removed now, that it can not be done at this time, and the one thing that is practical is to agree to the appointment of a joint committee to consider them and report to the next session of the Congress.

I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. He holds the view I do as to the retired Army officer provision. He has indicated his intention to object to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from New Mexico. I want to ask him before doing so to consider whether or not there would be any possible chance to present for the consideration of the Senate the subject in which he is interested, as well as those I have indicated my interest in; and if not, why he should not agree to the request of the Senator from New Mexico to vote as he has suggested, to have a joint committee created to report to the next session of Congress as to all veterans' legislation as well as the matters which are proposed in the bill. My own opinion is that the Senator from Connecticut should not insist upon his objection but that the joint committee should be appointed to carefully consider these matters and report at the next

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I appreciate the force of the appeal made by the Senator from South Carolina. I had hoped that we might carry out the plan to get a real economy measure. When the President came here the other day he said:

It is essential that when we ask our citizens to undertake the burdens of increased taxation we must give to them evidence of reduction of every expenditure not absolutely vital to the immediate conduct of the Government. * * * I have recommended to the Congress from time to time the necessity for passage of legislation which would give authority for further important reductions in expenditures not possible for consideration by either the Executive or the committees of Congress without such legislation.

An earnest nonpartisan effort was made to secure these purposes in a national economy bill in the House, but it largely failed.

The measure the Senator from New Mexico is moving to strike out is among those included in the President's reference-

That subject is under review by the bipartisan committee appointed from the members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and I am informed it has tentatively agreed upon a recommendation which would aggregate savings of $250,000,000, together with a number of undetermined further possibilities. I am not informed as to details of these recommendations, although I learn that my own suggestions in many instances have not been accepted.

I may say that we did it this morning. It was stated in the papers when the President first met the bipartisan committee that he suggested a furlough plan. He said:

But I do know that the committee has made honest and earnest effort to reach a just reduction in expenditures, and I trust therefore that despite any of our individual views or the sacrifice of any group that we can unite in support and expeditious adoption of the committee's conclusions.

I appreciate the fact that it is important that the pending measure be passed at the earliest possible moment. I have talked with a number of Senators, and I appreciate that they feel it is extremely unwise at this time to economize in the manner suggested by the committee in the title which is now before us; and although there are some Senators who would like to vote for some of these sections but not for all, I believe that it would be wise to agree to the request made by the Senator from New Mexico and permit the first vote to come on striking out the entire title.

If that vote does not prevail, then I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to explain why I am in favor of some of these provisions which, as has been explained by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in many cases are extremely fair and humane. If they were fully understood by the Senate I believe it would be for them. For instance, in the very first section, section 701, it is provided that no compensation shall be reduced where a married man has an independent income of $3,500 or an unmarried man of $1,500. In other words, it does not apply to a veteran out of a job at all. It does not apply to the veteran who has a small independent income. It only applies to the veteran who, if a bachelor, has an income of $1,500, and, if a married man with an income of $3,500, with an additional $400 for each dependent. It does not apply to the poor man who does not know where the next dollar is coming from.

It does not apply to anyone 65 years of age or over. It does not apply to those who served in the actual military or naval forces and actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service. It does not apply to those who are temporarily totally disabled or permanently and totally disabled as a result of disease or injury acquired in or aggravated by the active military or naval service.

It does not apply to widows and dependents entitled to compensation or pension on account of the death of any person who served in active military or naval service. It does not apply to those persons who were actually engaged in combat with the enemy, who served in a zone of hostilities or who were actually under fire.

Mr. President, I refrain from any further discussion. I merely want to mention that to show my fellow veterans that in supporting what the committee has done I endeavored to protect those in need, those who did not have to pay income taxes, widows, and orphans, those who received actual injury or were sick at the front.

But the Congress in its wisdom and generosity, during the years when we were running a surplus of $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 a year, opened wide the doors and gave all sorts of compensation to various people on the theory that they could not afford not to be generous. They have laid themselves wide open and we have tried to correct some of those things here. There are individuals, for instance, who are perfectly healthy to-day, but who had tuberculosis as a result of the war and are now able to do a good day's work. who are to-day entitled to draw $50 per month from the Government, no matter whether they have an income of $5,000 or $100,000 a year. There are said to be 3,000 doctors in the active practice who have been able to secure a disability rating of 30 per cent which entitles them to threequarters of their pay as captains and majors during the war. I do not believe the veterans want to ask that that be continued in the face of the need for economy.

But I refrain from further discussion and withdraw my objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from New Mexico. I think I shall vote against the motion, believing, as I do, that if the matter could be presented to the veterans they would not object to bearing their share of the necessity for Government economy, which, as the committee has proposed it in the bill, amounts to about $47,-000,000 out of the more than $1,000,000,000 to-day appropriated for administration of veterans' relief.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he does not agree that it would necessitate an explanation of each one of the items and would inevitably involve considerable debate upon each one of them and greatly delay the passage of the bill which we all agree should be passed immediately.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no question about it and that

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no question about it and that is why I have yielded to the Senator's suggestion and withdrawn my objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not wish to speak if it is going to delay action on the unanimous consent submitted by my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton]?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to point out that yesterday I undertook to get similar action in order that an amendment which went to the crux of the situation should be voted upon prior to the perfecting amendments, and then every member of the committee from the chairman down to the Senator from New Mexico or from the Senator from New Mexico up to the chairman, as one chooses to term it, refused me that consent. I shall be more magnanimous, and I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the question at any length. I do not think I should have said anything on the subject had it not been for the remarks recently made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who I regret to see is not present in the Chamber. I think the address of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] is a typical result of the kind of propaganda which has been promulgated throughout the country among people who have been so busy with other things that they have had no time to study the question of veterans' legislation.

The Senator from Virginia stated that in voting for the measure in the Appropriations Committee he did so on the theory that it would not do any damage to those who had served their country and had actually been injured by war service. As the Senator from Virginia is not present in the Chamber, I shall merely call to the attention of Members of the Senate that on page 98, line 12, occurs the word "actually"; in lines 13 and 14 occur the words "as the result of and directly attributable to such service." The same words occur again on page 103 in two different connections, and again on page 111. Those words rule out those who have incurred tubercular or neuropsychiatric complaints as the result of their service connection. They rule out the class of men who on the whole are suffering even more pitifully than those who suffered loss of limbs in action, far more than those who were mercifully granted death at the front.

That is typical of the sort of propaganda which the press at this time is putting out in connection with veterans' legislation. Such legislation is of an exceedingly complicated kind. Most Senators have not had the opportunity or the time to give it detailed consideration. They rely on statements made offhand in the committees or in newspapers, and they base their action accordingly. I have seen a great many newspaper articles on the subject of veterans' legislation claiming to disclose the vast sums expended unjustifiably. Almost all of them can be torn to pieces easily by anyone who has had practical experience with the details of veterans' legislation. It is very strange to me that in none of the articles which I have seen has any attention been paid to the cause of the expenditures which are chiefly criticized to-day by the press.

We hardly ever read an article about veterans' legislation without having the point brought up that a man may be run over by a street car years after the war and still obtain ! compensation which in many cases is greater than that awarded to men who suffered in action. I do not wish to go into unpleasant matters connected with the past, but I am so tired of reading such criticism that I really feel I should call the attention of the Senate and of those in the country who will read in the Congressional Record what I am saying to the fact that non-service-connected disabilities were never included in any legislation passed by Congress until the session of 1930, when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed] submitted an amendment to the so-called Rankin bill, which had come over from the other House. I should like to read, for the information of the Senate, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania at that time. It was as follows:

that time. It was as follows:

SEC. 10. That section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (sec. 471, title 38, U. S. C.), be hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"On and after the date of the approval of this amendatory act any honorably discharged ex-service man who entered the service prior to November 11, 1918, and served 90 days or more during the World War and who is or may hereafter be suffering from a 25 per cent or more permanent disability, as defined by the director, not the result of his own willful misconduct which was not acquired in the service during the World War or for which compensation is not payable shall be entitled to receive a disability allowance at the following rates: 25 per cent permanent disability, $12 per month; 50 per cent permanent disability, $14 per month; 75 per cent permanent disability, $24 per month; total permanent disability, $40 per month. No disability allowance payable under this paragraph shall commence prior to the date of the passage of this amendatory act or the date of application therefor, and such application shall be in such form as the director may prescribe: Provided, That no disability allowance under this paragraph shall be payable to any person not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the year preceding the filing of application for such disability allowance under this paragraph."

I shall not read the remainder of the amendment, but I

I shall not read the remainder of the amendment, but I have read the gist of it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania spoke in favor of this amendment at some length on the morning of June 23, 1930. The amendment was voted down by a viva voce vote without a roll call, indicating the overwhelming feeling of the Senate. The bill, without the amendment, passed the Senate by a vote of 66 to 6. That bill was vetoed by the President of the United States, and within a few days, on the recommendation of General Hines, of the Veterans' Bureau, the Finance Committee reported to the Senate a bill practically identical with the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania offered on June 23. The new bill was fought on the floor of the Senate by all those who had shown themselves active in the cause of the disabled veterans in the past. Some spoke a number of times and at great length on the subject, pointing out the revolutionary character of the legislation proposed. In the last moments of the session the House and the Senate passed the bill, realizing that that was the only way in which they could get any veterans' relief at all at that session, and the President promptly signed the measure.

That was legislation to all intents and purposes dictated by the administration and corresponding to the views of the very people who are now using it as the main argument against veterans' disability allowances and compensation of all kinds. I feel that under the circumstances, in view of the propaganda going through the country, it is necessary to call the attention of the Senate to that one simple fact.

I do not mean to discuss the title further at any length. I feel that arguments that have been advanced by my colleagues, and which have practically been concurred in by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] have shown the inadvisability of passing such far-reaching legislation or attempting to enact it at this time without any detailed study of the general situation. I feel that the proposal made by the other House and concurred in by the Senate committee, that a joint committee shall investigate the general situation and report back to the next session of Congress, is a wise one.

I freely concede that there are many things in existing veterans' legislation which are wrong and which ought to be amended; I do not think there is any doubt about that; but before doing so I appeal to the Senate to give the matter some thought, to have a general plan laid down, some plan which may be concurred in by the majority of those who have devoted thought to this subject; and when that plan shall be submitted to the Senate, let us debate it on

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] a while ago stated, as I understood him, that these provisions did not apply to the sick and wounded soldiers. If he has that view, he is mistaken about it. Section 701 applies solely and alone to sick and wounded soldiers; section 702, "Veterans in institutions," applies solely and alone to sick and wounded soldiers; and section 703 applies alone to sick and wounded soldiers. Those are the three main provisions in this title.

Mr. President, I have been unable to express my views about the matter, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to submit as a part of my remarks, to be printed immediately after what I am now saying, the minority views on this bill as presented by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Brattonl and myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS

We respectfully disapprove the provisions of Title VII and dissent from their inclusion in the measure. Through such provisions it is proposed to reduce the compensation of sick and disabled veterans of the World War approximately $50,000,000 per annum. These reductions are effected by permanent changes in basic law. The body of existing law relating to compensation of such veterans has been constructed throughout a period covering about 17 years. During that time the Finance Committee of the Senate, not the Appropriations Committee, has dealt with all such such veterans has been constructed throughout a period covering about 17 years. During that time the Finance Committee of the Senate, not the Appropriations Committee, has dealt with all such matters. This committee has never exercised any jurisdiction over legislation of that character. Now, solely and exclusively under the guise of effecting economy, that being the single duty enjoined upon this committee, it is proposed that this committee shall review the whole corpus of the law covering compensation to disabled ex-service men and, predicated upon such review, to reduce such compensation about $50,000,000 annually.

Assuming, but not conceding, that certain changes should be made in the law fixing rates of disability compensation, it is our conviction that such changes should be effected in the orderly and conviction that such changes should be effected in the orderly and usual method, namely, through the enactment of bills considered by the Finance Committee, with full opportunity afforded representatives of veterans' organizations to appear and be heard. We should refrain from making such tremendous reductions in compensation to disabled ex-service men solely upon the ground of economy, that being the single factor which this committee is empowered to consider.

empowered to consider.

Citizens suffering disabilities resulting from military service in time of war can be differentiated on clear and tenable ground from employees of the Government, with no such disabilities and with a retired annuity upon which they can rely in old age. The two classes are dissimilar. One can be required to submit to a temporary reduction in salaries as a contribution during the existing period of financial stress, while, for the reasons previously stated, the other should not be obliged to bear the financial burden cast upon them in the manner and for the reasons to which we have adverted. The measure provides for a joint congressional committee to investigate the laws relating to compensation to veterans. That should be completed and the report made in December, 1932, before these revisions are effected.

With all other parts of the measure we are in full accord. It

With all other parts of the measure we are in full accord. It achieves economies aggregating about $200,000,000 per year. In addition, broad power is conferred upon the President to consolidate, merge, and coordinate departments, bureaus, and commissions. Through the exercise of this power, additional savings of stupendous proportions can, and we have no doubt will, be effected. Rigid economy must be practiced in every department of Government. That can be done only through a comprehensive program of curtailment in departments, bureaus, and commissions, with sharp retrenchment in appropriations.

KENNETH MCKELLAR. SAM G. BRATTON.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I believe I did not secure permission to print in the RECORD certain matter relative to the names of those persons who are drawing emergency officers' retired pay. I have consulted with the Printing Committee and am advised that it will cost $900 to print the list of names of those emergency officers. Therefore I will withdraw my request to print the list, and will say that Senators may find the list of the names of emergency officers drawing retired pay by consulting the Record of March

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona withdraws his request

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is very refreshing indeed to hear a Senator even think about saving some money by refraining from having matter printed in the RECORD, and I congratulate the Senator from Arizona with all my heart.

Mr. ASHURST. I am always willing to receive congratulations

Mr. SMOOT. Day after day the practice goes on here of printing in the Record matter costing $100 in one case, $200 in another, $300 in another, $700 in another, and so on. It is wicked; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Bratton] to strike out Title VII of the bill.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called.) I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long], who is necessarily absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore]. Not knowing how he would vote, I with-

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I expect to vote. Therefore I feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], and will vote. I vote " yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have a pair for the day with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Balley]. I am unable to secure a transfer, and I am uninformed as to how the Senator from North Carolina would vote on this motion. I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD. I find that my general pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Morrison], would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL. I am informed that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], with whom I am paired, would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. Making the same announcement as heretofore as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes]. I am not advised how these Senators would vote on this question. Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Hawes] are necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. WAGNER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COPELAND] is detained because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 63, nays 14, as follows:

So Mr. Bratton's motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may be authorized to correct the numbers of the titles and sections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, yesterday I made a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the provision cutting salaries was adopted. It is perfectly evident that the Senate has not changed its mind, and I see no necessity of taking up the time of the Senate; so, if I may do so, I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion will be withdrawn.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I renew the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Federal employees were reduced 10 per cent, with a view to having the whole problem referred to a committee of three to report next January.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may enter his motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I intend to move to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses], the so-called furlough plan, was rejected. May I ask the Senator from Washington if it would be agreeable to him for me to make that motion now, or does he prefer to conclude the committee amendments?

Mr. JONES. I should like to conclude the committee amendments first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator enters the motion at this time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I enter the motion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is a committee amendment on page 113.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 113, line 7, after the word "Sec.," to strike out "801" and insert "709"; in line 8, after the word "of," to strike out "seven" and insert "five"; in line 10, after the word "and," to strike out "seven" and insert "five"; and in line 21, after the word "the," to strike out "first Monday in December, 1932," and insert "1st of January, 1933," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 709. There is hereby created a joint congressional committee which shall be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Such committee shall conduct a thorough investigation of the operation of the laws and regulations relating to the relief of veterans of all wars and persons receiving benefits on account of service of such veterans and report a national policy with respect to such veterans and their dependents, and shall also report and recommend such economies as will lessen and shall also report and recommend such economies as will lessen the cost to the United States Government of the Veterans' Administration. The committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than the 1st of January, 1933, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 12, after the word "Title" to strike out "IX" and insert "VIII," so as to make the heading read:

TITLE VIII-SPECIAL PROVISIONS

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 2, to insert:

PROVISIONS OF PART 2 APPLICABLE TO APPROPRIATION ACTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1933

SEC. 803. The provisions of part 2 herein are hereby made applicable to the appropriations available for the fiscal year 1933, whether contained in this act or in acts prior or subsequent to the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. Returning to page 58, a committee amendment passed over—

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have here a committee amendment which I should like to offer first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, line 18, strike out the word "section" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

act, and by the act of February 14, 1931 (Supp. V, U. S. C., title 5, sec. 73a).

The amen, nent was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I have another committee amendment that I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. Also on page 56, line 16, after the word "automobile," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That where a change of station involves travel by Government transport, the private automobile of the individual may be transported on Government transport when space is available and it will not interfere with the normal operation of such transport service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I take it that the committee amendment just offered requires a reconsideration of the vote by which section 208 was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does. The Senator is correct. Mr. REED. In that case I want to ask the Senate to consider seriously whether section 208 should be adopted, especially as qualified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Consent has not been given to reconsider. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote whereby section 208 was agreed to?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, what is that section about?

Mr. REED. It is the section which provides that no transportation at Government expense of the effects of officers shall be construed to include the transportation of an automobile.

That sounds like an important saving, but in the Army last year the entire amount spent on this item by the Government, including transportation on Government transports to stations overseas, was only $3,000. The committee amendment now strikes out the provision for carriage by Government transports. It permits that to be done, in other words, and all that would be saved would be that minute amount for transportation otherwise than by Government transport.

We will suppose that an officer is ordered to duty with the regiment in Puerto Rico. No troop movements occur between continental United States and Puerto Rico, and consequently a transport would very seldom go there. The officer would have to pay for having his automobile carried for that short trip from continental United States to the island of Puerto Rico. It is in only a few cases like that where this section 208 would save any money.

I feel certain that, with the qualifications put on by the committee and through the pending amendment, the saving to the United States, as far as the Army is concerned, would be less than a thousand dollars a year; and that would come at the expense of officers whose pay and whose mileage and whose allowances are all being cut by this bill. I hope the committee will not, at the expense of that very small group of officers, see fit to put in this provision, Understand, please, Mr. President, that in the matter of automobiles in continental United States, in 99 per cent of the cases the officer travels by automobile to his new station, and he carries in his automobile belongings and baggage for which the Government would otherwise have to pay freight. We would effect no economy there. It applies to a very small group of officers, and the saving is negligible, and I hope the committee amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he has figures showing what would be the amount saved by incorporating the amendment?

Mr. REED. The committee is now proposing an amendment which would allow transportation of automobiles in Army transports. Without that permission the total amount saved would be $3,000, based on last year's figures. I do not know how much would be saved after the adoption of the committee amendment, but it would certainly be less than $3,000, and probably not as much as $1,000. It would apply to only a few officers who are ordered to duty at places where Government transports do not go, such as Puerto Rico. It seems a pity to effect a saving of a thousand dollars at the expense of very few officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the amendment were cut out entirely, the War Department would be authorized to ship a car to any place in the United States by train.

Mr. REED. Yes; but nobody wants to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but it seems to me that the language ought to go in, although I have no objection to the amendment which has been proposed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me, at the present time the Army would have the right to send automobiles by train in the United States; and yet, although they have that right, the total spent in the whole fiscal year 1931 was less than $3,000. So it is obvious that the right is not exercised within continental United States to any considerable extent.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I really think the amendment of the committee should stay in the bill. I am perfectly willing that the amendment which the Secretary of War has sent to us, with reference to the transportation of automobiles on transports, shall be adopted; but I am inclined to think that if we would hold out the inducement that they might carry automobiles here, there, and yonder the privilege would be very much abused.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me as a practical matter that the only result of this would be to work a hardship on a few officers. They would individually have to pay for the transportation of their automobiles when they are ordered to duty, and I think the provision ought to be stricken out. I do not think it is fair, after all the reductions which have been made as to these officers, now to put them to the expense of paying for the carriage of their automobiles.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Florida. The amount involved is so trivial that it does not seem to me to justify the embarrassment and inconvenience which would result from the incorporation of the provision. It is represented that at most $3,000 is involved and that the amendment which the committee proposes would reduce that probably to $1,000. I do not see that it is worth while to adopt the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senate understands the situation pretty well, I think, and I will not offer an amendment to the amendment, but suggest that we vote directly on the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, after line 11, the committee proposes to insert the following:

SEC. 208. Hereafter no law or regulation authorizing or permitting the transportation at Government expense of the effects of officers, employees, or other persons shall be construed or applied as including or authorizing the transportation of an automobile.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58 the committee proposes to strike out, after line 4, the following:

(b) This section shall not apply to officers on the emergency officers' retired list created by the act of May 24, 1928, and shall not apply to any person retired for disability incurred in line of duty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at the time that amendment was passed over attention was called to the fact that the committee amendment dealt only with an exception to the general rule established in the first part of the paragraph, and that there were certain amendments to be proposed to the general rule.

It does not seem intelligent to work on the exceptions until we have first decided what the rule shall be. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that amendments to paragraph (a) of section 211 may be considered before the committee amendment is acted on to paragraph (b).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 57, line 23, strike out "$3,000" and the balance of that line, and strike out lines 24 and 25; and strike out, on page 58, line 1, down to and including the word "elect," and in lieu thereof insert: "the rate of pay and allowances which such person was receiving as such commissioned officer immediately before his retirement."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a word of explanation. The provision as it was written by the House would have an effect which I will illustrate by typical cases.

In the case of a second lieutenant who was injured and retired, his retired pay would be about $125 a month. That second lieutenant could go out and get civilian pay for another $125 a month and he would still receive his full retirement allowance. But where a colonel is retired for wounds received in action, his retired pay would be more than $3,000 a year, and consequently, under the committee provision, there is nothing he could do in working for the Government that would entitle him to a single penny more than his retired pay.

There are many cases of deserving officers who have been retired and are working for very small salaries to piece out their retirement pay, and they would all suffer under this provision, whereas those with the big salaries would not.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, why does the Senator think that a man who is receiving more than $3,000 a year retirement pay should be permitted to work for the Government and get more pay?

Mr. REED. It depends entirely on the value of the service he is rendering the Government.

Mr. DILL. Why, in the conditions which confront the country at this time, should we allow a man getting more than $3,000 a year retirement pay to take a job away from somebody else who has no income?

Mr. REED. It may be that we could not find anybody else who could do the work competently. That is conceivable.

Take the scandalous cases that have been called to our attention in the Veterans' Bureau. Take the case of Maj. William Wolff Smith, who got a retired pay of $187.50 a month, and that totaled $2,275 a year. His civilian pay from the Veterans' Bureau was $9,000 a year. Obviously, under either the House language or the amendment I have suggested, all of his retired pay would be denied him.

But, on the other hand, take some officer who perhaps has a family to support and finds his retired pay insufficient to support his family and put his children through school. He gets some humble Government job—I know one who is running an elevator in this building at this minute—to enable him to keep his wife and children. He would be denied relief entirely by the provisions of the House text. Certainly, if a man has been disabled in line of duty in the service of his country it is not asking too much for him that he shall be permitted to piece out his retired pay so as to enable him to get a combined income equal to that which he was earning just before he was retired for disability. That is the effect of my amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's amendment provide that in addition to the three-quarters retired pay, the retired officer can then go outside and earn enough to bring his combined pay up to his old pay when in active service?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The cases the Senator mentioned did not include such men as one of the District Commissioners. I understand the chief of police, too, is a retired Army officer drawing several thousand dollars a year retired pay.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. And one of the Public Utility Commissioners is likewise a retired Army officer. It is not just that those men who are drawing all their large retired pay should be able to draw a full salary from the District government.

Mr. REED. Precisely. I quite agree with the Senator. Under the amendment I have proposed not one of those individuals would get a cent of retired pay.

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendment would allow him to get only what he was drawing from the Army before he retired. I think there is some merit in it.

Mr. REED. That is what it does. It allows the individuals spoken of their civilian pay and only denies them their retired pay.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator's illustration of a man running an elevator in the Capitol is an illustration of what this will lead to. Here is a man getting more than $3,000 a year retired pay, and yet he takes a job away from somebody else in order that he may get additional salary over and above the $3,000 a year. It seems to me in these times the men drawing retired pay of more than $3,000 are less deserving of piecing out their salaries than is the man who has not anything at all, who is out of a job and can not get any work at all.

Mr. REED. If we are going to apply that theory, we had better start with ourselves, and every one of us who has a little income on the outside had better resign so that somebody else may get elected to our jobs and draw our pay as Senators.

Mr. DILL. But we are not on the retired list yet.

Mr. REED. But we had better vacate our present jobs and let somebody else come here in our places.

Mr. DILL. But we are not supposed to be disabled.

Mr. REED. Precisely; but I am trying to apply the Senator's own logic to the Senator's own case.

Mr. DILL. It would not apply to me.

Mr. REED. If the Senator has, as I hope he has, an cutside income, then the Senator ought to resign right away and let some one of the unemployed of the State of Washington come down here in his place. That is the logic of the Senator's position. I can not imagine that the Senator would apply a stiffer rule to the man disabled in his country's service than he would apply to himself.

Mr. DILL. If I had retired pay of more than $3,000, I would not expect the Government to give me a job in order that I might make enough additional money from my Government job to make my retired pay and my salary in that job equal to what I was drawing before I retired.

Mr. REED. This is not going to correct that condition. Neither will the amendment discharge the retired man from the job he is filling. It is merely going to cut his pay.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If an Army officer receives $8,000 a year in active service, his retired pay is $6,000 a year?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Therefore he would be able to hold a position in the Government, and in order to be precluded from it his salary must exceed $8,000; that is, the combination of his salary and his retired pay.

Mr. REED. If he earns more than $2,000 in his civilian position, and presumably a general would earn more than that, then for every cent that he earns over $2,000 in his civilian position we would abate an equal amount from his retired pay so that if he got $8,000 in his civilian position, as the District officials are getting who were named by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], he would be denied every penny of his retired pay.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The effect of the Senator's amendment would be to enlarge the latitude of opportunities for a retired officer with a considerable amount of retired pay, because under the provisions of the bill as at present it would not affect those who were not drawing such large amounts of retired pay. Plainly speaking, the Senator's amendment is in favor of the officers drawing the larger amounts of retired pay.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I do not think so. It would apply, for example, to any officer getting $250 per month of retired pay. A captain with over 21 years of service would get more than that in retired pay. I am sure the Senator does not mean to penalize the captain wounded in action in France who is able to pick up a little by working now in a civilian occupation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What difference will the Senator's amendment make in the amount that is presumed to be saved by the provisions in the bill?

Mr. REED. Necessarily it is only an estimate, but I doubt if we would save more than $50,000 or $100,000 from this group of disabled officers. The saving we are making on these Army officers comes principally from those in active service. Remember, please, Mr. President, that all of them are being reduced 10 per cent, and that applies to the retired officers of whom I am speaking as well as the officers on active duty.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. REED. I can not answer it specifically, but I should estimate the saving at not more than $100,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Will this bill take care of the man who retires during the pendency of these cuts, and will he be restored to his full retirement pay after the end of the one year? I had an inquiry of that kind and I am interested to know.

Mr. REED. As I understand the language of the bill, the cut in retirement pay of 10 per cent applies only to the one year, but the provisions in section 211, which I have been discussing, apparently are permanent in their effect.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the point to which I want to invite the attention of the Senator. If an officer retires during this one year he will only get three-quarters retired pay less 10 per cent. The general law provides that he continues to draw that retired pay. I want to be sure that his right to the increase would expire with the one year. I think the Senator, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, ought to investigate that.

Mr. REED. I see the burden of the Senator's question. An officer on the active list now who is retired during the course of the next fiscal year might, according to a possible interpretation, get for the rest of his life only three-quarters of his pay as reduced.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know whether that is covered specifically, but I wanted to call it to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. REED. I am obliged to the Senator for the suggestion, because I am sure that nobody intends that to be done.
Mr. CONNALLY. But the operation of the language of the provision may have that effect.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment. An estimate of its exact effect and its cost to the Treasury can be prepared at once and can be in the hands of the conferees by the time they meet. I am sorry that in the pressure of work on the Army appropriation bill and the revenue bill I have not had time to get it, but I am quite certain it will not exceed $100,000. But I beg the Senate to hesitate before putting that cumulative cut on this group, which is being so savagely cut by the other sections of the bill. We are cutting their active pay; we are cutting their retired pay; we are cutting their allowances for rent and subsistence; we are cutting their mileage. We are cutting them right and left. I am not going to criticize any of the other cuts made in the Army, but this is one which applies with such unequal force to the small group that I think it is most unfortunate. I hope the Senate will accept the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, does the Senator think it will cost the Government about $100,000?

Mr. REED. It will not increase the cost.

Mr. HALE. I think on the contrary the Senator's amendment will probably bring money into the Government Treasury. If a man has a retired salary of $3,000, his pay before retirement would necessarily have been $4,000. If he should get a position with the Government at an annual salary of $4,000, under the provisions of the bill he would not be allowed to take any of his retired pay. In other words, he would not take the job. But if he were allowed to get an additional $1,000 to add to the $3,000 of retired pay, he probably would take the job and the Government would save $2,000.

Mr. REED. I think it likely that in some cases it would work out that way. In any event, whether it is a saving or a cost, it is very slight in either event. It comes with exceptional hardship on a small group that deserve our gratitude and not our punishment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania is quite clear and that his amendment would accomplish what is reasonable and just and fair to the officers who would come within the provision. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment is simply a proposal to allow these retired Army officers to work for the Government in some capacity after they have retired from their regular work on three-quarters pay and to earn enough money to bring back to them their regular pay when they were in the active service, and this in a time when there are millions of people in the country who have no income at all because they can not get work.

I have no criticism of the men who have retired from the Army on three-quarters of their regular pay going out and making money wherever they can in civilian life, but I certainly am opposed to having those officers who have reached that position where they have retired from the Army service, going back into the Government service and taking jobs away from people who have no incomes whatever. I think when the Government provides for them after their retirement to the extent of three-quarters of the pay they received on active duty, we are doing a great deal for them in a time like this when so many millions of our people have not any income whatsoever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and of in the amendment at the bottom of page 49 and the top of page 50, which has already been adopted by the Senate, and which will be in conference between the House and the Senate when this bill shall pass. I am informed that the Senate committee in making this proposal that on and after June 20, 1932, no officer or employee of the Federal Farm Board, and several other boards mentioned in the amendment, shall receive more than $10,000 per annum, acted on the theory that, notwithstanding at various times heretofore Congress has fixed a different and in some cases a higher salary than that received by Members of Congress, it was the desire of the committee to limit all public salaries so that no public officer would receive a larger compensation than that drawn by a Member of the United States Senate; but that out of that list the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs was eliminated so that he may be the only public officer in the United States who will draw more salary than does a Member of the Congress.

In the first place, I seriously doubt whether that is a wise criterion by which to fix the salaries of public officers. Men who come to this body come in order to gratify an ambition or to make a career. Some of us are deluded into the belief that we are rendering public service which compensates for the loss of income which the same amount of work in private life would undoubtedly bring to us. But many of the men who are drawn into the public service do not come into it with that particular motive. I happen to be acquainted with the circumstances under which the chief counsel, for instance, of the Federal Farm Board came to Washington. He is an able lawyer; he did not apply for the position; but, because of his previous experience as an attorney for cooperative farm organizations, he was invited to come here as assistant at the time to the chief counsel of the Federal Farm Board with the understanding that he would be made the chief counsel. At the time he came he was earning more than $20,000 a year in the practice of law, and had a retainer from one firm amounting to $12,000 a year, all of which he had to give up; all of which he did give up. Since he came into this position his compensation has been increased by the Farm Board, under the authority which it had, from $10,000 a year, which he at first received, to $20,000 a year.

I do not know what really would be a fair criterion of compensation for the Government to establish in the case of men who give up private business or private law practice in order to engage in a service for the Federal Government. but under this amendment it is proposed to cut by 50 per cent the amount of compensation that is being drawn by the chief counsel, for instance, of the Federal Farm Board, which, whatever we may think of the wisdom of its activities, has dispensed $500,000,000 of the people's money in an effort, at least, to bring some relief to agriculture. The extent of the success of that effort is not a question for me to discuss now, though it may be a subject for legitimate discussion in another form later.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator from Kentucky know whether the committee made any inquiries in regard to the matter or took any steps to abolish the Farm Board?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that; I have not heard whether or not they did so; but I assume they did not.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have a more insistent demand from my State and that general section of the country for such action than for action cutting salaries and reducing the compensation of veterans.

Mr. BARKLEY. That question has arisen in the Congress and the effort to abolish the Federal Farm Board was defeated on a roll-call vote in another body.

I have offered no amendment to the committee amendment, and I, of course, have no intention now of doing so;

Members of the Senate generally to the provision contained and of members of the Appropriations Committee, in the hope that when this amendment shall go to conference between the other House and the Senate they may be able to work out a provision that will make it possible for able men who have made sacrifices in order that they may serve the Government to continue in the service of the United States. I understand that this whole problem will be a matter of conference between the two Houses, and I hope that the chairman of the committee and members of the Committee on Appropriations, especially members of the conference committee, will consider whether they have acted with wisdom in bringing about a situation where it may be necessary for a man who did not apply for a Government position. who was, in a sense, drafted for public service, who is not a politician, who did not seek any appointment but sacrificed at least half his annual income in coming here, may be retained in the public service, especially where it does not involve any great amount of money on the part of the Government but does involve quite a sacrifice on the part of the official.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow us to complete the matter we had under consideration with reference to the limitation as to retired pay?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will yield the floor if I may be recognized later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 58, the committee proposes to strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive, and the Senator from Florida offers an amendment, on page 58, beginning at line 5, to insert:

(b) This section shall not apply to any person retired for injuries received in battle or disability incurred in line of duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest instead of the word "battle," that the word "action" be inserted, so that it will read received in action." That might be more appropriate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, as modified.

Mr. GEORGE. It is difficult to see any reason for that amendment now when an officer may receive the full amount of the pay he was receiving before retirement in any event.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see why an officer who has been actually wounded in action should not be permitted to get his retired pay, and, at the same time, if he can find some work outside to help out, may not be permitted to receive compensation for that also.

Mr. GEORGE. Under the section as amended, I will say to the Senator from Florida, the officer would receive his retired pay and the Government salary provided the two combined did not exceed the active pay which he was receiving before his retirement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; but that might be quite small. He might not be an officer of high rank getting a very large retired pay; he might be a junior officer who received wounds in action, and his retired pay may be very small, not enough to live on.

Mr. GEORGE. It does seem to me that it is wholly unjustified to give to an officer retired on account of disability or age a Government position and full retired pay without any limitation whatever on it or on the amount of the two combined compensations that he may receive.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a suggestion, I think the Senator from Georgia is right with regard to the senior officers, but to a youngster, a lieutenant, who was wounded in action-and there are many, many of them—the change made by my amendment to the preceding paragraph would not be of any substantial help, whereas the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida would take care of those young men. I hope it will be adopted. It will not make things any worse from anybody's standpoint for the older officers and it will help the deserving youngster.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is not justifiable to permit officers to retire on three-quarters pay and then bring them but I am calling the matter to the attention of the Senate | into the service of the Government without any limitation or restriction whatever upon the combined compensation that they may receive. I recall that when a Commissioner of the District of Columbia was appointed some of us opposed his confirmation, and I dare say now that his confirmation was in the direct teeth of the statute governing the case, but he was given a high salary here in the District and permitted to enjoy his full retired pay.

Mr. REED. All of those cases will be cured by the section as it stands. Those officers will not receive a penny.

Mr. GEORGE. That case was affected by general act applicable to officials of the District of Columbia, and yet that officer was confirmed because he happened to have been a good officer and popular, notwithstanding the fact that, in my judgment, a statute was directly applicable to him. I concede that in some instances there might be an officer of minor rank who was wounded and retired on account of disability actually incurred in battle who should have an opportunity to come into the employment of the Government; but if the salary attached to the office was very high he could afford to forego his retired pay, and if that salary is not high he can draw an amount that will not exceed the salary he was receiving before retirement.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point is, Mr. President, that in the case of the higher salaries and the higher officers getting over $250 a month, for instance, they can only get the original pay, which perhaps would be enough to support them; but in the case of a lieutenant who has had his leg shot off or his arm shot off, who has been wounded in action and retired on $125 a month, I see no reason why he should be prohibited from getting more than $125 a month.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator's amendment will be adopted. I think we are in danger of being misled by giving our attention too much to high-salaried officials. They do not constitute the great mass of the officers who would be affected by this section. As far as the high-ranking officers go, we are taking away every cent of their retired pay; and what we are doing to these humbler men is, I think, something we ought to think about. In our civil service law we give a preference to veterans in the matter of getting into the Government employ; and that certainly is something we do not want to discourage. If we adopt the same policy and the same generous attitude toward officers in the humbler ranks, we ought not to make it impossible for them to get the pay for the work they do if they are retired for wounds received in action or disability incurred in line of duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there can be no question about that.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to have taken up for consideration the motion I have made, although if there is an amendment pending which ought to be disposed of I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending proposed by the senior Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about that amendment.

I am sure that it was not the intention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to make even more harsh the restriction upon an officer of the lower rank than as applied to him in the text of the bill; but, as I construe his amendment, it circumscribes to a greater extent his opportunity to hold a public position at a salary of as much as $3,000 a year than did the text before his amendment was adopted.

Mr. REED. Exactly, and that is why I am anxious that the amendment of the Senator's colleague should now be adopted.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I say that for this reason: Under the text of the bill a second lieutenant or a first lieutenant could have a combined salary, before he was inhibited from drawing his full amount of retired pay, of as much as $3,000; but under the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposed we will say that he was receiving a salary for active service of $200 a month. His retirement pay would be $150 a month. He obtains a Government position. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania his total salary could not exceed $200 per month, because the combined salary of his governmental employment and his retired pay is not to be in excess of his active pay in the military service, which was $200.

Mr. REED. That is exactly what I want.

Mr. TRAMMELL. So the operation of the amendment which has been adopted heretofore will militate in favor of the officer with high rank upon retirement at a considerable sum, and will militate to the disadvantage of the low-ranking officer.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will yield to me-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary in-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. TRAMMELL. The amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and which has been adopted, instead of accomplishing the purpose for which he contended, is going to have directly the opposite effect on all retired officers who are not of high rank and drawing a large salary in active service. I do not think we ought to let an amendment of that kind stand. If it is in order, I desire to make a motion to reconsider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Florida vote in the affirmative?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not sure how I voted. That is immaterial where there is no record vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct. The Senator enters a motion to reconsider.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold his motion a moment, may I suggest that exactly the same result will be secured by disagreeing to the committee amendment striking out the House language in paragraph (b); and I hope that will be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, all of my colleague's argument supports the amendment which I offered, and yet he did not vote for it.
